A number of extra seats had been secured until there were enough to seat about seven hundred people, but the enormous throng that appeared soon filled every vacant seat and so crowded every vacant space that even standing-room was at a premium. And there were plenty who waited too ride, and they kept the large number of Columbias and Hartfords there constantly in use. There were several young women who took advantage of the invitation and tried the floor.

The event of the evening was, of course, the trick riding. The first to exhibit his skill was Jack Garthard, a little lad, who certainly showed his great ability in that line. He rode a full nickle-plated Falcon and some of the feats he performed on that wheel were wonderful and brought forth round after round of applause. After the lad had finished, his instructor, W. S. Maltby, one of the kings of trick riding, exhibited his marvelous skill on a high-framed full-nickeled Keating wheel. All of his tricks were loudly applauded, especially the one in which he rode completely around the room on his back wheel.

After the trick riding was over, many of those present departed, while the rest waited to listen to the music and try the floor.

WANT THE ASSOCIATES.

First Baptist Church Endeavorers Contemplate a Change of By-laws.

At the meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Baptist church last night several important topics were discussed. For sometime past the society has had no associate list, owing to the fact that there has not been any associate members, and it was thought best to do away with this stepping stone to the society. At the meeting last night an amendment was offered which provides for an associate list and it will be voted upon next week.

Another important matter will be voted upon, that is whether the by-laws will be done away with. Some of the members are desirous of condensing the governing rules and constitution of the society. Every member is urged to be present next Friday night.

QUARTET AT HYMEN'S ALTAR

TWO MARRIAGES IN MT. OLIVE CHURCH LAST EVENING.

An Immense Crowd Attend the Events—Both Ceremonies Performed by Rev. P. S. Gibson—The Wedding Party.

There was hardly standing room in the Mt. Olive Baptist church Friday evening when two marriages were performed by the pastor, Rev. P. S. Gibson. The first wedding was that of Charles Barber and Miss Mattie Kinney, which took place at 8:30. While Horatio Randolph was playing "Nellie Grant's" wedding march the bridal party entered. The ushers, groom and best man came first, then the maid of honor, Miss Paulina Cole, gowned in blue henrietta, trimmed in lavender ribbon and jets. She carried pink roses. Following came the bridesmaids, Miss Minnie Carey and Miss Harris, wearing gowns of white crepon trimmed with lace and satin ribbons. They also wore white satin bows in the coiffure. Then came the bride leaning on the arm of William Douglass who gave her away. She gowned in white satin trimmed with lace and ribbons. She wore a tulle veil with a wreath of wax flowers and carried white roses.

The best man was William Burden, assisted by Joseph Bolden and J. Walker. The bridal party formed gracefully about the altar when the ceremony was performed, after which they were taken to the home furnished by the groom, 320 Arlington avenue, where a reception was held and supper served. Mr. and Mrs. Barber left during the evening on their wedding trip which they will spend in Philadelphia.

On their return they will live on Arlington avenue. They were the recipients of a large number of handsome presents, one of which was $50 from the groom's employer.

The second wedding was performed at 8:45, when Miss Mary Morris and Charles Shelton were united in marriage. Horatio Randolph also presided at the organ at the wedding and rendered the same selection. The bride wore a gown of white satin, trimmed with lace and ribbon. She also wore a tulle veil with a wreath of wax flowers.

The bridesmaids were Miss Marguerite Stewart and her sister, Miss Louise Stewart, of Germantown, Pa. They were gowned in dark silk. The best man was Benjamin Perkins. The bridal party retired to the home of Rev. P. S. Gibson after the ceremony, where they held a reception and a supper was served. Many costly and useful presents were received by Mr. and Mrs. Shelton.

The ushers at the first wedding were Wm. Jones, A. W. Brown, Arthur Venable and Burrill Gibson. At the second ceremony they were N. J. Pollard, S. Venable and James Saunders.

BILL LANE KICKED IN THE DOOR.

Three colored men were arrigned before Judge Coddington in the city court last evening on the charge of being drunk and disorderly and using improper language. Last Saturday evening Albert Shipley, George Gillette and Edgar Kline went out to enjoy themselves. They visited one of the saloons in the city and then wandered up to Sycamore street. Shipley came to the house of Bill Lane, broke in the front door and wanted to go up stairs. His friends tried to persuade him to go home and there was a general good time for everybody.

Yesterday the three men were arrested. Gillette and Kline explained their share in the racket and were allowed to depart, sentence being suspended on them. Lane looked upon Shipley's gayety as a joke, but that did not help Shipley's chance at court and he was given his choice between a fine of $5 or twenty days in the county jail.

NOT A CANDIDATE.

Judge Coddington Will Not Serve on the City Bench Again.

City-Judge William A. Coddington was asked by a Daily Press reporter yesterday in regard to his again accepting the Democratic nomination for the city judgeship. The Judge said: "I have been asked by many people whether I will take the nomination and run for office this fall. I desire to state that I am not a candidate for re-election for city judge, nor will I accept renomination."

During the three years that Mr. Coddington has held the office of city judge, he has served faithfully and discharged his duties creditably.

Where Are the Overcoats?

The new winter overcoats for the borough marshals seem a great way off, and these frosty nights are gentle reminders that they are very much needed. Chief VanHorn says he understands that a local undertaker has the contract to make them.

STUDYING STENOGRAPHY.

Excellent Opportunity Afforded in the Y. M. C. A. Class.

Shorthand is not a hard study. The impression that seems to prevail to the contrary is due largely to want of acquaintance with the subject, and also to the fact that some systems of shorthand are difficult and unscientific. Choose the best system, and you will find the study of shorthand at once pleasant and easy. The direction of a competent and careful teacher will add to the pleasure of the study, for the manner of study makes a great difference in its attractiveness.

The Young Men's Christian Association offers to young men a good practical course in the leading system of shorthand, extending through the winter of 1895-'96. Typewriting will complete the course for those who desire to be at once qualified for positions. The course in shorthand will consist of two lessons, with two sessions weekly on Monday and Thursday evenings at eight o'clock. The instruction will be largely personal, thus giving each student a thorough mastery of the subject. John C. Whiting, who has had five years active experience in teaching stenography, and who is a practical stenographer, will conduct the class.

The system used will be the Isaac Pitman—the leading, and for fifty years the standard system, adopted by the public schools of New York, St. Louis, Jersey City, Trenton and other large cities, and used by more stenographers than all other systems combined. A five dollar membership in the Y. M. C. A. gives the privileges of the Educational Department without extra charge, besides admission to the lecture course and other advantages. Classes are held in book-keeping, arithmetic, mechanical, drawing, German and English. The shorthand class is just starting, and new members will be received up to Thanksgiving, but it is hoped that all interested will apply at once.

A class in stenography for ladies, with the same course as that for men, will soon be formed. The cost will be nominal, and the lessons will be given afternoons, to enable the ladies to attend with the least inconvenience to them.

SCOLD'S VICTIMS GLAD.

For the rest of her natural life Mrs. Esther F. Jacques, of Westfield, will be known wherever she goes as a common scold. She has been so branded by the blue laws of New Jersey, and on Saturday will be pardoned before Judge McCormick, of the Union County Court, to receive her sentence.

In the days of old, women who could not control their tongues were subjected to the ignominies of the ducking stool. It is hardly probable that such punishment will be meted out to Mrs. Jacques, and there is much speculation among her neighbors as to what penalty she will be forced to undergo. They would no doubt be pleased to see her suffer as did the scolds in Colonial times, as all of them, at one time or another, have felt the sharp lashings of her unruly tongue.

It is safe to say that the court house in Elizabeth will be crowded to overflowing with women when Mrs. Jacques is brought to the bar on Saturday morning.

SCHEPFLIN, SCHULTZ & CO., WIN.

The Middlesex Court Decide in Their Favor.

Schepflin, Schultz & Co., have won their law suit against James J. Boyd, and The Press extends its congratulations to them on their counsel, Craig A. Marsh, over the result. The amount in dispute was not much over a thousand dollars, but besides that, the firm felt that their honor was attacked, and they are now naturally gratified over their vindication. Mr. Boyd made out a bill against the firm's assignee for about $750, claiming that amount as the balance due him for salary at $2,500 a year in addition to his traveling expenses as a salesman for the firm.

Schepflin, Schultz & Co., repudiated the claim as illegal and unjust to their creditors. They also declared that Boyd was not under salary, but on commission, and was required to pay his own traveling expenses, and had, in fact, overdrawn his account hundreds of dollars. The Orphans Court of Middlesex county gave a whole day to the trial of the cause, and yesterday the decision was announced as stated above.

They Get In Her Nothing.

It may be of interest to the dancers in the coming Kermess to know that they will be given season tickets for the dances. A report has been circulated, which is entire false, that the dancers had to pay for their admission.

A Handsome Present.

General Eli Long, of Grove street, has sent a handsome basket of grapes from his vineyard at Bluff Point, N. Y., to each of his fellow members of the Chestnut Club, formerly known as the Asbestos Club.

WHO IS THIS MAN ALLISON?

REPRESENTED HIMSELF TO BE AN AGENT OF A WILMINGTON FIRM.

Came Ostensibly to Negotiate a Contract for Extending the Street Railway, but Told Lies and Left a Hotel Bill.

Last Friday a rather stout individual, with a stubby moustache, registered at the Hotel Grenada as G. A. Allison, of Jersey City. He was accompanied by another man who did not register, but who claimed to be a detective in Jersey City. Allison said that he was a representative of Jackson & Sharp, of Wilmington, Del., railroad contractors, and had come to this city to negotiate with the street railway officials with a view of making the prospective extensions of the trolley line. The first thing he did was to apparently accumulate a jag of a quantity and quality that made him teeter about as though in a ballet of a comique opera. But later developments in evidence that his inebriety was assumed.

He called on Dr. Fritts, the president of the street railway, and stated that he was here to represent the Wilmington firm, but his manner and conversation aroused suspicions in Dr. Fritts' mind that he was not what he seemed to be. Mr. Fritts made an engagement with him for Monday, intending in the mean time to learn from Jackson & Sharp if he was their agent. Monday came but Allison failed to put in appearance. Yesterday morning Dr. Fritts received a letter from Jackson & Sharp stating that they had no such man in their employ and knew of no one in the business by that name.

Saturday night Allison tried his persuasive tongue on Proprietor Miller, of the Hotel Grenada, in the endeavor to get him to cash a $10 draft on the contractors, but his efforts were fruitless. During the evening he made his disappearance without paying his hotel bill.

QUIET HOME WEDDING.

A quiet but very pretty wedding took place at the home of John Lindsay, of 424 West Front street, last evening at eight o'clock, when the marriage of Mr. Lindsay's niece, Miss Amelia M. Lindsay, and Robert G. Slorah, of this city, was solemnized. Rev. J. O. McKelvey performed the ceremony. The bride was given away by her uncle, John Lindsay. Her gown was a handsome one of metropolitan blue figured Henrietta, trimmed with blue velvet and white lace. She carried a bouquet of white roses. Miss Lizzie Parker, the bridemaid, was charmingly gowned in dark grey brondeloth with silk and white lace trimmings.

The wedding was a private one and about fifty relatives and near friends were present. After the ceremony a reception was held and the evening passed very pleasantly with music and dancing. An elaborate collation added to the pleasure of the occasion. The house was very prettily decorated throughout.

The newly-wedded couple will remain at the home of John Lindsay for a short time, after which they will go housekeeping in the west end. Mr. Slorah is a trusted employee at the Pond Company Tool Works.

For Funeral Benefits.

At the annual meeting of the Great Council of the Improved Order of Red Men, held in Providence, R. I., in September, permission was granted the New Jersey Council to organize a funeral benefit association. The report of the Great Council shows the total membership of the order to be 133,485, and the total wealth $1,512,559.16. During the past year $1,087,787.50 has been received and $319,352.71 expended for relief. $8,892 was expended for widows and orphans and $80,613.18 for the burial of the dead.

J. R. Hall to Move.

J. R. Hall, who looks after J. Walter Thompson's Cranford interests, will remove from this town from Plainfield as soon as his Roosevelt Manor house is completed. Ground for the building was broken last week, and the builders are doing their very best to get the frame inclosed before the cold weather sets in.—Cranford Chronicle.

Winter Sociability.

The Social Committee of the Y. M. C. A., have formed plans for holding receptions this winter. They also arranged to have more members at the building to act as a reception committee.

Large Enrollment.

The following is the enrollment in the classes at the Y. M. C. A.: Short hand, 20; German, 9; bookkeeping, 11; mechanical, 27. There is an unusual amount of interest this year in all the classes and they promise to be very successful.

REWARDS OF UPRIGHTNESS.

JUDGE CODDINGTON TO LOOK AFTER C. E. CATLIN'S AFFAIRS.

The Deceased Made it as His Last Request to His Wife—As There is No Will Considerable Legal Work Will be Necessary.

Charles E. Catlin came to Plainfield five years ago and made this city his home up to the time of his death, two weeks ago. In 1893 he purchased an elegant home on Witherspoon place and his wife have lived there ever since. When he first came to Plainfield, he met Judge W. A. Coddington in a business way and became tended to what legal business Mr. Catlin had to do.

This summer Mr. Catlin was taken sick and was almost helpless for over two months, and on October 17th died at his home, leaving a wife.

His last request was that the management of his legal affairs be left entirely with his friend, Judge Coddington. After his death, his widow sent for Mr. Coddington and told him of the request of her husband and handed over all the legal documents and papers that had belonged to the deceased.

When the Judge looked over the papers he found that aside from the individual estate, which amounted to considerable, that Mr. Catlin had been one of the principal legatees under the will of his mother, who died last January in Brooklyn and left an estate amounting to upwards of $200,000.

As Mr. Catlin left no will, there will be considerable legal work necessary.

Yesterday Judge Coddington made application to the Orphan's Court of this State asking that Mrs. Catlin be appointed administratrix of the estate. On consulting with the authorities in New York, the Judge ascertained that a final settlement would be made in the will of Mr. Catlin's mother about the first of next year.

Close attention to business has its rewards and this is an example of what uprightness and honesty in dealings will do for a business man.

CONSOLIDATION OF PRESS WORKS.

Potter's and Campbell's Make Combine and Make This City Headquarters.

It is understood that several conferences have recently been held between the proprietors of the Potter Press Works, of this city, and the Campbell Press Works, of New York, with the idea of consolidating the firms and making this city the manufacturing headquarters for the printing presses which they would turn out.

Those most directly interested believe that such a move would result beneficially to the two firms who already have national reputations among the printers of the country, and their interests combined would make one of the strongest business alliances in the trade.

The consummation of such a deal would mean a good deal to Plainfield in the way of making increased business for the merchants, as the force of men would necessarily have to be greatly increased, and their shops also enlarged to greater capacity than at present.

All on Account of Coming Elections

The cold weather has driven Tom Martin's Fourth Ward Club from Vail's grove into winter quarters. A basement under Lister's on North avenue will be opened tonight by an anvil chorus by Martin Brothers' Quartette, assisted by "Gamey" Nelson's son Oscar, who is the Fourth Ward Josseffy piano player. Zander Brown will recite. A collection is being taken for a stove this afternoon, and if the coal trains pass through the city anyway slow there will be plenty of fuel to burn. A collection will be taken at tonight's meeting to assist the different candidates of both parties. Tom, why he'll pass the hat. Next Monday night a big dinner will be served to club members only.

Good Plainfield People.

The census proves the oft-asserted fact that this city has a class of citizens somewhat above the average of New Jersey towns. The bars and barber shops are closed, and anyone who secures a sup of soda-water or a cigar does so because of personal favoritism, as none are regularly on sale at the drug stores.—Plainfield Correspondent New York Tribune.

Stepped on a Nail.

A colored man named Cawley, in the employ of the Plainfield Gas & Electric Light Co., stepped on a nail a few days ago which penetrated his shoe and entered his left foot. He has great difficulty in walking as it causes him considerable pain.

Clothes Line Thieves.

Several people in the city have had clothing stolen from clothes lines in their yards of late and have not been able to catch the guilty ones. One man sits by a window with a shot gun in his hand, and declares the first intruder will get all the benefit.

HISTORIC IMPOSTORS

SEVERAL INSTANCES OF SWINDLING ON A GRAND SCALE.

In 1823 French society was much interested by the reappearance of the Comte de St. Helene, a wealthy and agreeable young man of high family, whose death in Spain two years before had been reported. He had not the least trouble in proving his identity, for every one recognized him, the royal family included. For form's sake, he produced his papers, which were quite correct. The king, delighted, gave him "a step," and when he rejoined his regiment officers and men recognized him unanimously. We find no mention of the comte's relatives, but it must be supposed that they did not object. For two years he enjoyed himself mightily. At the end of that time, when parading with his squadron at some open ceremony, a drunken loafer greeted the brilliant captain vociferously as "Ami Cognard." He would not be allowed and the police arrested him. Much recovered was related that the Comte de St. Helene was his old comrade of the hulks. In brief, so it proved. After a week's imprisonment he was condemned to the galleys for life and died at Toulon 16 years later. But such impostures are mean beside the grand school of antiquity. The tale of Alexander the Paphlagonian, or that of Peregrinus, which Christian antiquarians have not ceased to discuss—both told with spirit and humor by Lucian—or the career of the Comte de St. Germain is mysteriously interesting even yet. It is not to be hoped that the will of his mother, who died last January in Brooklyn and left an estate amounting to upwards of $200,000.

As Mr. Catlin left no will, there will be considerable legal work necessary.

Yesterday Judge Coddington made application to the Orphan's Court of this State asking that Mrs. Catlin be appointed administratrix of the estate. STORIES OF SPIRITS.

STRANGE CASES OF MANIFESTATIONS BY SPOOKS.

Investigated by the Society For Psychical Research, They Are Presented With Strong Backing—Examples Furnished by Widely Separated Countries.

Reverting to the lore of the Psychical Research society, here is a case in which apparitions of the dead and the living were unmingled. The latter doctor says that in 1869 she was living in the family of a retired naval officer, Mr. R., and his wife, two miles from a seaport town. Mrs. R., who was the sister of the British consul at Cadiz, married her husband, a widower, in that city. When, after the marriage, they came to England, her husband was unable to find the nurse with whom his youngest child had been left. After a vain search they came to London. One night Mrs. R. saw the sitting room door open. A beautiful lady came in, followed by a common looking woman, carrying a child about a year old, dressed in a yellow pelisse. The lady came up to the bed and said, pointing to the baby: "This is Johnny. You will remember Johnny." She smiled, and Mrs. R. was just going to answer when the vision was gone. Her husband, said she had exactly described his first wife, and that the child's name was Johnny. Some days afterward, rummaging from Westminster abbey, they lost themselves in a narrow congeries of streets. Suddenly Mrs. R. recognized the woman as the woman of her vision carrying the baby with a yellow pelisse. She told her husband, who spoke to the woman. After discreet inquiry it turned out that she was the nurse that was wanted, and that the baby was the missing child.

The antithesis of unconscious spiritual manifestation is that of the unconscious severance from the body and a foretaste of death's mystery. Dr. Wiltse of Shiddy, Kan., related the case of Mrs. Hubbard in the St. Louis Medical Journal in 1889, apparently died of fever. He was declared to be dead by the physician who attended him. Then he made some assumption, needles were thrust deeply into the flesh. This was done many times. The doctor who pronounced the patient dead subsequently said, that he had his symptoms closely, and if there are any symptoms marking a patient in articulo mortis that were not present in his case he is ignorant of them." Meanwhile, the spirit of the man alleged to be dead had, according to his own story, disevered itself from the body. This double spirit-form contemplated the dwelling of clay it had just quitted. The liberated Dr. Wiltse was conscious of two weeping ladies in the room (his wife and his sister) and of two gentlemen at the door. With one of these gentlemen he came into contact and, very much to his surprise, perceived that the other party was unconscious of the collision. "I now attempted to gain the attention of the people with the object of comforting them as well as of impressing them of their own immortality. I bowed to them playfully and saluted with my right hand. I passed about among them also, but found that they did not see me. Then the situation struck me as humorous, and I laughed outright." Going out of the house, he felt the fresh air, the cold and the washes that the rain had made. Presently he found himself in the air, borne along by a pair of hands till he came to a spot where were three fabulous rocks, which, his conductor told him, was the road to the eternal world, whence he could no more return in the flesh. An attempted leap to end his path was barred by a black cloud, and he knew he was to be stopped. The cloud then touched his face. Then he recognized consciousness found himself at home in his bed very ill. Now there is abundant evidence to prove that Dr. Wiltse's wife and sister did not fall a-weeping until he was pronounced dead; there is evidence that the soil and the rain washes were as he described immediately he found utterance, though they must have been different from the last time he saw them with his bodily eyes; there is evidence that he told all these things as soon as he could speak and as often as he was permitted.

The Rev. L. J. Bertrand, a Huguenot minister of Neuilly, Paris, writing in 1819, gives a strange experience that befell him in the Alps 30 years previously. The sleep of death had come upon him as he crossed, in the company of a guide, a precipice. His mind continued active, though his body was benumbed. The approach of death was not painful till the last, when he felt there was only a single pain of momentary duration. "Then," he says, "my life went out." His spirit soared above his body, to which, however, it was still attached by a kind of elastic string. With the spiritual eye he saw the remainder of his party and their guide in a position which he recognized, and he saw them from the place where his body lay. He saw that the guide had disobeyed instructions as to the route to be traversed. He saw that the guide was about to lead the recipient's own Madeira and eat the abstracted leg of a fowl. Still more wonderful, he saw his wife, who was always anxious when he was in the alpine climbing, going to Lucerne till the following day. "Well, wife," he soliloquized, "I am a dead man. Good-by, Madeira." Recalled by a shock, realized that his party had returned and that the guide was rubbing him with snow to reanimate him. His first attempt at speech was to reprimand the guide. "If you had simply cut the string!" he peevishly exclaimed. By and by he dozed the guide with his small intellect, and the delinquent ran off in dismay. When he reached the inn, the guide became delirious, being convinced that the deceased pastor was after him. It appeared that Mme. Bertrand had set off for Lucerne exactly under the circumstances her husband had noted with the spiritual eye.—Illustrated Modern Art and Literature.

Bismarck and the American Girl.

Dr. Stefansson retells the story of a beautiful American girl from Colorado who went to Kissingen to see Bismarck, who was then staying there. Having feasted for some days on the sight of the great man, she one day summoned up courage, walked straight up to him and said: "Durchlaucht, I am going to Colorado today. May I shake hands with you before I go?" She took his offered hand and attempted to kiss it, but he promptly said, "In Kissingen we do not kiss hands." And then and there he kissed her on the mouth as tenderly and affectionately as may be. And Countess Dora Stolberg-Wernigerode, some people will try to make out that Bismarck is blind to a woman's charms.—Westminster Gazette.

Too Far.

A good natured traveler fell asleep in a train and was carried beyond his destination. "Pretty good joke, that, isn't it?" said a fellow passenger. "Yes, but a little too farfetched," was the rejoinder.

Tea Trays.

It is a mistake to clean tea trays with boiling water, for this is liable to crack and spoil the varnish. The best way is to sponge them over with warm water and soap, then dry and polish with flour. Trays often get marked from hot teapots, jugs, etc., standing on them. These marks should be rubbed with a little sweet oil before the tray is washed.

The Constitutionalist.

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED AT

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

A. L. Force, Editor and Proprietor

The members of the Common Council whose terms expire with this year are as follows: At-large, Messrs. Erickson, Westphal and Dumont. First ward, Elias Bird; second ward, George H. Frost; third ward, Harry Stockton; fourth ward, V. L. Frazee.

The State Board of Assessors has finished the work of assessing the value of railroad property for the purpose of taxation. There is an increase in the aggregate assessed valuation of $1,805,000, making an increase of tax due the State this year amounting to about $21,000.

A woman has been convicted in Elizabeth of being a common scold. It is a pity that this old offence is confined, so far as the law is concerned, to persons of the feminine gender. We know some male politicians who could be convicted under it, says the Evening Sun.

It is a source of congratulation to the citizens of Plainfield to know that the ordinance authorizing the extension of the electric street railway passed the Common Council on its final reading last night, and now only awaits the necessary ten days advertising and the signature of the Mayor, which is but a formality. The facilities of pleasant and rapid communication with the suburbs, which the completion of the extensions will afford, will have the effect of instituting a building boom that cannot help but prove advantageous to all classes of citizens. To the already many admirable public acquisitions which Plainfield possesses as an attractive resident place the trolley extension comes as a climax that is most welcome.

In years past the Democracy of New Jersey has been considered almost invincible, but their defeat yesterday was so overwhelming that there can be no question but that the people are earnestly in favor of a change of administration in the State government. The unusually large plurality rolled up for Griggs would give credence to the statement that it was not so much of a Republican victory by Republican votes as a Republican victory by Democratic votes. Notwithstanding that the Democrats never had a more ideal candidate than Chancellor McGill, whose private and official life stood unimpugned by the most partisan and bitter opponent, there is no denying the fact that there is an element in the party whom the members of the party themselves are unalterably opposed to, and rather than elevate Mr. McGill to the Gubernatorial chair, they preferred to see him defeated in the attempt to rid the party of the men against whom this prejudice and opposition prevails. What has been termed as the "silent vote" in the political parlance of the nineteenth century, the Republicans can congratulate themselves on as having contributed to their success. Taken as a whole, there seemed to be a wonderful unanimity among the Democrats, even more so than among the Republicans, but the prospects of one party or another winning on the lack of open dissension in their ranks, are jeporadized and nullified by the good citizen, who, though classed as a Democrat and Republican, goes to the polls and casts a ballot that is not dictated by party affiliation. Mr. Griggs will be the first Republican Governor in thirty years, and as The Daily Press expressed the opinion on Monday in reference to whoever might be elected, his official acts, outside of those having a direct political bearing, will prove generally acceptable to the people.

Contributions For the Kirmess.

All those having any contributions for the fancy table in the Kirmess are requested to send them on or before Friday to Mrs. Albert H. Atterbury, of 211 East Ninth street. Mrs. S. A. Cruikshank asks that any donations of candy be sent to the Columbia Cycle Academy any afternoon next week at 3 o'clock.

Funny Chicken Head.

Walter Lane, the West Front street butcher, has very peculiar chicken head which is attracting the attention of many. The head is exactly the shape of a rats head, and has the same expression. The teeth are unusually large and altogether is a great curiosity. Mr. Lane is going to preserve it in alcohol.

JUST HALF A DOZEN DRUNKS.

THAT IS THE SUM TOTAL OF SATURDAY'S POLICE DRAGNET.

Oratorical Jim Emmons Before His Honor—Two Brothers Try to Clean Out Buck Day's Place—Other Offenders.

Drunk and disorderly was the charge against all of the half-dozen victims who appeared before Judge Coddington in the city court Monday morning.

The first culprit was Jim Emmons. He has been found on West Third street by Officer Flanagan Saturday afternoon in a disorderly state and spent the night in the lockup. Emmons pleaded guilty and the Judge gave the choice between paying $15 or spending thirty days in jail.

James Smith called Officer Hartpence some unpleasant names on South Second street Saturday evening and was just drunk enough to be ugly. "Five dollars or twenty days," said the Judge when he heard the story, and Smith handed over the cash.

Officer Frederickson brought in Howard Bush Saturday evening for trying to paint North avenue a reddish tinge and he was given the same punishment as Smith, and paid his $5 also.

John Hodkins was beastly drunk on Park avenue Saturday evening and disgusted all who saw him, until Officer Frederickson dragged him to the lockup. As his financial standing was not the best he preferred twenty days in jail to putting up $5.

Day's saloon on West Third street was the scene of a lively little fracas on Saturday evening and the two men who started it, Joe and Patrick Donnelly, were arraigned before the Judge on complaint of Officer Flanagan.

"When I appeared on the scene" said that officer, "Donnelly was trying to clean house for Day."

The two men had been drinking heavily and went into the saloon where they tried to pick a quarrel with any and everybody. The Judge decided that forty days in jail or a fine of $10 was not a bit too good for them. The brothers were not deadbroke and paid the fines.

There was only one lone man to appear before Judge Coddington this morning and he was up on complaint of Borough Marshal Doud. His name was Edward Bergen. Last evening he was wandering about on Somerset street, slightly under the influence of liquor, when Marshal Doud came along. Bergen, who was almost on the city line, applied some not very complimentary names to the Marshal and then skipped over the line where he became more abusive. Doud rapped for Cooney and Bergen was unpleasantly surprised to find himself in the grasp of a city policeman. The Judge gave him his choice between paying a fine of $5 or going to jail for twenty days. Bergen thought the commitment cheaper than the fine and went down to Elizabeth.

A NEW CHOIR.

New Departure Inaugurated in the Congregational Church Yesterday.

A new departure was made in the Congregational church yesterday morning when the music was led by a choir instead of a precentor. The choir will be continued for some time, when the question of making it a permanent thing will be considered.

The choir yesterday consisted of Miss Eda Beekman and Miss Effieda Whiting, sopranos; Miss Julia Belknap, alto; Horace J. Martin, tenor; John C. Whiting and H. Tomlinson. A number will be added for next Sunday. They will meet for practice next Saturday evening.

Entitled to Only $3 Out of $200.

The appeal case of Dr. Henry H. Lowrie against Charles McGinley, which has been tried in Justice Newcorn's court by two juries, was brought up in county court at Elizabeth yesterday, and Judge McCormick decided that the plaintiff was only entitled to $3 out of the $200 verdict awarded him by the second jury. Harry G. Runyon represented the plaintiff and S. S. Swackhamer the defendant.

—Miles, the Somerset street florist, has had considerable trouble with boys trespassing on his property and destroying it. A few visits by Special Marshal Goodwin has broken up the practice.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury.

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces, such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

IS THIS THE BANK ROBBER.

A PINKERTON DETECTIVE LOOKING AFTER THE BANK THEFT.

He Was in Town Yesterday and Had a Photograph Which Miss Marion Johnston Identified as the Man in the Bank.

At least one of the men who participated in the robbing of the First National Bank some time ago is in a fair way to come before the bar of justice. Yesterday, Detective Murphy, of the Pinkerton Detective Bureau, came to Plainfield with the likeness of a man who it was supposed might have aided in the robbery. He showed the photograph to the employes at the bank but they did not recognize the features. Murphy then went to the home of H. C. N. Johnston, of Carleton avenue, to see his daughter, Miss Marion Johnston, who happened to be in the bank at the noon hour when the robbery is supposed to have taken place. "Did you notice that man before?" asked the detective.

"Yes," affirmed Miss Johnston; "I saw him in the bank the day it was robbed."

Miss Johnson has been shown numerous other photographs and has recognized none of them. This one, however, she was sure she had seen.

The detective was not inclined to talk so no information was obtained as to who and where the man was, but more light will probably be thrown on the subject, as soon as the supposed robber has been secured.

GOLDSTEIN ARRESTED.

The Park Avenue Clothier Charged With Embezzlement.

The excitement over the supposed disappearance of Jacob J. Goldstein, the Park avenue clothing merchant, yesterday, was brought to a climax last evening when Sergeant Kiely arrested Goldstein after the out-of-town detectives had been looking for him all day. He was arrested on the charge of embezzlement which was preferred by Hugo Trendenthal, a New York wholesale clothing dealer. Goldstein claims that he bought the goods with the best of intentions and expected to pay for them. The New York man thought differently. He says that Goldstein tried to secure the goods by fraud. Goldstein purchased $440 worth of clothing from Trendenthal some time ago. He did not pay cash for them but allowed the debt to run on. His brother-in-law, Charles Jacobs, held a chattel mortgage on Goldstein's property and yesterday he foreclosed it. The New York merchant claims that it was merely a device to get possession of his goods without paying for them. He made the charge and Sergeant Kiely brought Goldstein last evening before Justice Newcorn to answer to the charge. Judge W. A. Coddington appeared for Goldstein and Justice Newcorn allowed the prisoner to go in the custody of his lawyer. The trial will be held in a few days.

CHARITY WORKERS.

Delegates Elected to the State Convention To be Held at Newark.

The Union County branch of the State Charities Aid held a meeting in All Souls' church last night, which was very well attended. President Newhall was in the chair. The secretary, Rev. Hobart Clark, read his report which showed that the various institutions in the county are in good condition.

President Newhall, of Plainfield, Vice-President, Dr. McAllister, of Elizabeth, and Rev. Hobart Clark, of Plainfield, were selected as delegates to attend the State Convention to be held at Trenton, November 13th, at which time David P. Hall, of this city, will read an important paper on "The Necessity of Caring for Incurable Paupers Outside of the State Almshouses." At the same time important action will be taken regarding the reform of the penal laws of the State, for which purpose Governor Werts appointed a commissioner sometime ago.

Standard Bowling League.

The Standard Bowling League, of Union county, was organized Tuesday evening at the clubhouse. The following teams have entered the league; Westfield Club, Cranford Athletic, Park Club, of Plainfield and the Roselle Casino. P. B. Matthews, of this city, was elected president, and G. C. Worth, of this city, secretary and treasurer. The league will be composed of five men teams and will bowl for a trophy given by The Westfield Standard.

ENGLISH FOR VOCAL ARTISTS.

ENGLISH REVEALS THE BEAUTIES OF SONG BEST OF ALL LANGUAGES.

Miss Annie J. Bronson Says that We Should Be American in Song as Much as American in Any Other Phase of Life.

A novel but very interesting kind of entertainment was given at the Y. M. C. A. hall on Saturday afternoon before an audience which was exceptionally large, considering the weather. It was a "Ballad Lecture Recital" and consisted of a lecture on "The English Language in Song" by Miss Annie J. Bronson and selections by two of her pupils, Miss Gertrude D. Irwin, soprano, and Miss Grace H. Irwin, mezzo-soprano, and Mrs. Anna Taylor Jones, contralto, and Miss Helen A. Hasbrouck. The programme passed off very successfully and was greatly enjoyed by all, each number receiving hearty applause.

Owing to a severe cold, Miss Grace Irwin was obliged to substitute "Two Hearts" by Cowen in the place of her first song on the programme, and resign her solo part in the duet "The Nightless Land" by Pensuti, to Miss Gertrude Irwin.

Mrs. Jones is the second artist trained by the vocal scientist, Edmund J. Myer, whose themes Miss Bronson teaches, who has received such a cordial welcome in Plainfield, the other being Mrs. Terzah Hamlin Kelland.

Mrs. Jones possesses a fine voice and is naturally dramatic in style, but besides this she showed the skill of an artist in the effects she made in the varied tone colors she produced in the song "Sands of Dee," and her control of soft tone on high notes.

Miss Helen Hasbrouck is to be congratulated upon the artistic manner in which she accompanied Miss Gertrude Irwin's voice, it was as noticeable as her fine technique in her solo playing.

The feature of the entertainment was the lecture. Miss Bronson's words were listened to with much attention by all her hearers. She took for the keynote of her lecture that "English is the language of languages for an American vocal artist."

"She said in part: "It belongs to us and we belong to it. We must not listen to French or Italian operas; American opera demands our loyalty as much as any thing else America. Italians and French sing their mother-tongue, we must sing ours. There is peculiar rise or accent in an unfamiliar tongue which cannot be overcome. English takes more concentration to get the true musical meaning than any other language. Singers in America do not study enough to get the pure pronunciation and so are severely criticised. Yet English operas and English composers will come. English reveals the hidden beauties of song as no other language will do. Music is the language of emotions, but the intellect must work with the emotions.

"Why should we hide our prayers in a foreign tongue? It is better to sing five words which are understood and will teach others than ten thousand words not understood at all. Sacred music is a power for God, chants should not be sung in the unintelligable way they are. People will be inspired by a clear sweet tone, correct pronunciation, and a singer who is filled with the spirit of what she is singing. Singers must study all vocal sounds, accented syllables should be more spiritual and intelligent.

Italy was the cradle of song. Have we not out grown that? Students must expect to spend as much time in studying the English language in song as in studying anything else. The mind and soul must be cultivated. We must not strive for celebraty but for excellence. It would be as sensible for poets to write in Latin or Greek as for singers to sing in German and Italian.

The time is coming when we will have a national opera. Students must study the methods of our best masters and those of Italy, Germany and France before choosing their teacher. Few return from abroad with well trained voices, showing there are many poor teachers and few good ones. The time will come when students will come to America to get their voices trained. Let us raise the standard of music. Italian was the language of past for song, English will be in the future.

Barber Shop Sold.

The chattel mortgage sale of goods belonging to P. M. Decker, the North avenue barber, took place this morning. The goods were purchased by Lemuel Perry, of Somerville, and he will do business at the same stand. Justice Newcorn conducted the sale of and Hezekiah Hand was auctioneer.

Mrs. Bottome to Speak.

Mrs. Bottome will address a union meeting of the King's Daughters, in the chapel of the Crescent avenue church, on Thursday afternoon.

THE TROLLEY PUSHED ALONG.

THE COUNCIL PASS THE EXTENSION ORDINANCE ON FINAL READING.

After Months of Dilly Dallying the Street Railway is Put Through and Work Will Soon be Commenced—Other Matters.

There was a considerable amount of preliminary work to be looked after before the regular November meeting of the City Council could be called to order Monday, and the fact that it was election eve did not help matters very much. As a result it was 8:45 o'clock when President See rapped his gavel for order.

In response to the roll call Councilmen Fisk, Erickson, Dumont, Frost, Ginna, Moore, Frazee and Bird answered to their names.

On Mr. Fisk's motion the regular order of business was suspended for the purpose of treating with the property owners on Watchung avenue along the proposed extension. President W. D. Murray, of the Y. M. C. A., was present in the interests of the latter and stated that the association would lose forty-nine feet, and averaging $117 per foot, which they paid originally, would amount to $5,733. Providing the city would not assess benefits the association was willing to sell the city what was needed for $5,000, which would be $733 less than the original cost. Messrs. Derlach, representing Hannah Derlach, said that providing the city would move the houses, which are located near the brook, back five feet, put them on new foundations and make improvements, they would let the city have the necessary property and call it even.

Mr. Fisk moved that Townsend Rushmore, Wm. T. Kirk, and J. C. Manning be appointed commissioners to access damages and benefits on the property and report Tuesday evening, November 26th, and that the same be advertised. It was so ordered.

The regular order of business was then returned to and on motion of Mr. Fisk the reading of the minutes was suspended.

S. S. Starkey asked for permission to erect an awning, corner of Richmond and Third street. The matter was referred to the Street Committee.

W. D. Manning and others asked for a light on West Second street between New and Liberty streets. This was referred to the Committee on Police and Public Lights.

The reports of the collector, treasurer, and city physician were received and filed. The report of the latter showed that twenty-five cases had been treated during August, September and October.

A long list of persons who had failed to lay stone walks as required by law were read and on motion of Mr. Fisk they were ordered laid, and steps were ordered taken to effect a lien on the property for the payment thereof.

A communication was read from the Y. M. C. A., which stated that a concrete walk had been placed in front of the building and they asked that a fire alarm box be located there. On Mr. Erickson's motion one was ordered placed at that point.

Mr. Frost stated that the sewer bills were all correct except Washburn & Washburn's, which had not been sworn to. He offered a resolution, which was carried, that they be paid also, the latter when sworn to.

Mr. Dumont moved that notes on $500, $2,000 and $1,000 on Poor, General and Fire funds which are now due, be renewed for sixty days. It was so ordered. He also made a motion which was carried that one week before the city election a statement of receipts and expenditures on sewer work for the past year be advertised in the city papers.

Another resolution by Mr Dumont provided that the notes for $15,500, $7,000, $8,500 and $20,000, on Harvey Fisk & Sons be renewed so that a firm to conform to the new contract, at the four per cent interest. Mr. Dumont presented a specified blank form to be used specially for the money transaction between the city, Harvey Fisk & Sons and the Dime Savings Institution, and offered a resolution that the same be adopted and that the City Clerk be authorized to have the same printed. It was so ordered. He also moved that $3,000, $15,000 and $27,000 be drawn to pay notes of Harvey Fisk & Sons for money borrowed, with $1,000 added interest. It was so ordered.

Another resolution was offered by the same Councilman that $21,000 be borrowed for sewer work. It was adopted. Mr. Dumont stated that he had received a communication from the Corporation Counsel in regard to the possibility of the new law affecting the office of the City Collector and on his advice thought it best to have the City Clerk insert in the election notice that a City Collector would be nominated to serve three years. He offered a resolution to that effect and it was so adopted.

Mr. Frost then asked the City Clerk if the property owners consents for the trolley had been filed and examined. The latter replied in the affirmative, and the Street Commissioner then stated in writing that 50 per cent of the property owners' consents had been secured and filed November 2, 1895.

Mr. Fisk then called up the street railway ordinance and moved it be placed on the third reading. The City Clerk read it, and on Mr. Ginna's motion was adopted, all voting aye.

It will now be advertised for ten days, go to the Mayor for his signature, and if he signs it, the ordinance at once goes into effect and the street railway company are obliged to complete the extension within nine months.

There being no further business the Council then adjourned.

At the boys' meeting there was a very large attendance. The boys were addressed by Sumner F. Dudley, of Orange.

PREPARING FOR PLAINFIELD '96.

The Christian Endeavor delegates from Plainfield who attended the State Convention at Atlantic City last month will hold a big rally on November 21st. An address is to be made by Rev. Dr. J. Clement French, the State President, and the plans for the State Convention to be held in this city next fall are to be perfected. It has not yet been decided where the rally is to be held but it will probably be in either the First or the Park Avenue Baptist churches. It promises to be a big event.

Went at His Wife.

Charles Perrine, residing near Greenbrook road, visited Hipp's saloon Saturday night and indulged too freely at the flowing bowl. He was present when the trouble between the proprietor and Theodore Wilson was in progress and narrowly escaped getting into the racket himself. He went home rather late and commenced to beat his wife. Marshal Hansen happened to be going by the house on his beat, and on hearing the noise he went to the door and found that Perrine was treating his wife badly. On the appearance of the officer the trouble ceased and no arrest was made.

Lunch-Box Social.

A dramatic entertainment, followed by a lunch box social, will be given Thursday evening, November 7th, at eight o'clock, in the parish house of the Church of the Heavenly Rest on Clinton avenue. There will be no admission fee at the door. For those who do not wish to purchase boxes, coffee and ice cream will be provided.

New Sea Food Market.

E. P. Thorn will open next Friday in the store formerly occupied by him on Park avenue a sea food market, where he will deal in fresh fish, clams and oysters. He asks the public for a share of their patronage and deserves it.

SCRAP ACROSS THE BROOK.

DUCK WILSON SAID NO MAN COULD PUT HIM IN THE STREET.

But Proprietor Hipp Essayed the Act and Mike Seader and Marshal Wilson Got Mixed-up, and Arrests Followed.

While patrolling his beat on Somerset street late Saturday night Marshal William Wilson was attracted to Hipp's saloon by what seemed to be a fight. It appeared that Theodore Wilson, better known as "Duck" Wilson, and who has served a term in State Prison, was under the influence of liquor and visited the saloon. When the proprietor noticed his presence he ordered him to leave, but Wilson refused to go and said there wasn't a man in the crowd that could put him out. The proprietor then attempted the task and while accomplishing the feat Wilson grabbed Michael Seader by the coat and the three all went down on the floor. A lively time was in progress when Marshal Wilson appeared. It is said that several blows were struck previous to the latter's arrival.

However, Wilson was arrested by the marshal and taken to the lockup. On the way down Marshal Doud was met and on the request of Marshal Wilson the former went back and arrested Seader, whom he found in Rene Allen's house, upstairs. At first Seader refused to go, but on the advice of his freinds he consented, and he was also locked up.

This morning Theodore Wilson and Mike Seader were given a hearing before Justice Crosley, on the charge of fighting as stated above, and they were each fined $10, which they paid.

TO ARRANGE THE PROGRAMME.

The following have been appointed by Rev. Dr. French, President of the State Christian Endeavor Society, to arrange the 1896 programme for the convention to be held in the Crescent Cycle Academy in this city: Rev. Cornelius N. Brett, D. D., of Jersey City, chairman; Rev. F. B. Everett, of Trenton; Miss Alice Spangenberg, of Nethertwood; Rev. C. E. Herring and E. E. Anthony, of Plainfield. Such a committee of earnest workers as this gives evidence that it is the intention to make the convention the best ever held in the history of the society.

Dr. Lighthill Here Again.

Press readers will be glad to learn that Dr. Lighthill, of New York, has opened an office at 134 Crescent avenue, next to his former residence, where he will receive patients on Tuesday and Friday of each week. During his former residence in Plainfield Dr. Lighthill has won the confidence and esteem of the community, and the praise and gratitude of his many patients. Some of the cures which he effected on well known residents of our city and vicinity are of a remarkable character, and reflect high credit on his medical skill and ability.

Have You Ever Been to Florida by the "Clyde Line?"

Their new, fast, steel steamships, sailing from pier 29, East River, New York, Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays at 3 p. m., are the largest, safest and fastest on the Atlantic Coast. RAIN AGAINST THE SUNSHINE'S.

The Mission Band Have to Contend With Bad Weather at Their Sale.

The rain of Saturday prevented any large attendance at the cake and candy sale of the Sunshine Mission Band of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church held in the parlors of the church in the afternoon, but most of the members were present and a very pleasant time was spent, despite the storm. The tables, one covered with a tasteful assortment of home-made cakes and the others with candies of home manufacture, were under the supervision of all of the members. The president of the Band, Miss Mabel Bonnell, took general charge of the sale. The orange tree was especially successful, finding great favor with the younger people who attended.

The Coming Festival.

The entertainment and festival to be given November 13th and 14th in the Gesang and Turner Hall on Somerset street by the Children of Mary of the St. Joseph's R. C. church will be an elaborate one. A rehearsal was held yesterday by those who are to take part in it.

Entertained His Sunday-School Scholars.

Thomas E. Hazell, of Westervelt avenue, entertained his Sunday-school class of Trinity Reformed church at his home on Friday evening. A musical programme made the evening pass very pleasantly while dainty refreshments brought it to an end.

Another Postponement.

The Plainfield Camera Club has decided to postpone its slide exhibition until Tuesday of next week instead of next Wednesday.

GOLDSTEIN GOES UNDER.

A Number of Creditors Left Out in the Cold, With Not Good Prospects of Getting Their Pay—The Creditors.

It is usually understood that when you buy goods you have to pay for them, and as Jacob J. Goldstein, the proprietor of the Plainfield Bargain House, seemed in no way likely to pay for the goods that he had purchased on credit from firms in New York, and as his goods were about to be sold under a chattle mortgage, the New York firms decided it was about time to take some action.

The creditors were all New York firms and were Weinberg & Company, Freudenthal, Shey, and Rosendorf & Company. They learned of the chattel mortgage sale through the Mercantile Agency, and Weinberg & Company were the first to take any action. They secured a writ of replevin, giving bonds for $3,500, and selected their goods.

Out of nearly $600 worth of merchandise that Goldstein had bought, about $250 worth was found and that was packed up.

They brought with them two detectives in case any trouble should occur. At about ten o'clock Goldstein was seen about his store, but he suddenly disappeared and neither the police nor the detectives could find him.

A representative of Charles Jacobs, of New York, the brother-in-law of Goldstein, who held the mortgage was present and protested against the packing up of the goods. At two o'clock the sale began and Auctioneer Carey sold all the goods that were left. The other creditors appear to be left out and are not likely to get back any of their goods.

Surprised Saturday Night.

Miss Bessie Martin and Miss Emma Line arranged a pleasant surprise on Willard Martin, of Fairview avenue, Saturday evening. Games, singing and dancing were enjoyed and the evening passed too quickly for the young folks. Refreshments added much to the evening's pleasure. There were about forty young people present.

You want Scott's Emulsion. If you ask your druggist for it and get it—you can trust that man. But if he offers you "something just as good," he will do the same when your doctor writes a prescription for which he wants to get a special effect — play the game of life and death for the sake of a penny or two more profit. You can't trust that man. Get what you ask for, and pay for, whether it is Scott's Emulsion or anything else.

INVENTIONS IN GLASS

FREAKS OF VITREOUS INGENUITY IN THE PATENT OFFICE.

Glass Houses to Live In, Glass Clothing to Wear and a Glass Coffin to Rest In at Last—Strange and Uncommon Devices That Are Not Yet Publicly Known.

There is an inventor who is known at the patent office in Washington as the glass man. His name is C. W. McLean of New Bern, N. C., and during the last few years he has obtained patents for a surprising number of devices in glass. Among these is a glass coffin, which is guaranteed proof against decay and rats. So long as the deliberate attempt is made to smash it it ought to last forever. Another contrivance is a staircase made wholly of glass, steps, landings and newel post being all of that material. Yet another is a glass barrel. But perhaps the most remarkable invention of the glass man is a billiard table of glass.

The day may yet arrive when people will live in glass houses. A patent has been secured by another inventor for glass bricks of a peculiar pattern. The material of which they are composed being a first rate nonconductor, these bricks will keep the cold out of a dwelling built of them, while admitting all the light. In addition they will exclude noise, being hollow. Furthermore, the inmates of a glass house need not be afraid of being under constant observation by neighbors, inasmuch as it is not requisite that the bricks shall be transparent. They may be of opaque ground glass or any color that may be suitable for decorative effect.

Thus before many years have passed it may be considered the height of luxury to occupy a dwelling built of glass bricks, of course, are expensive. People who live in glass houses will be able to afford to wear clothes of glass. That sounds like nonsense, but the fact is that beautiful and most delicate fabrics are made out of spun glass. Nearly 20 years ago there was shown in the Centennial exposition in Philadelphia a bonnet composed entirely of glass. It was a love of a bonnet. The flowers on it were glass, and so were the ribbons, and the strings were the finest satin. The patentee of this process describes it as suitable for the manufacture of neckties, shawls, table covers, etc.

In fabrics of this kind a very fine quality of glass is used. It is spun in threads of exceeding delicacy, and of these several colors may be produced at the same time. They are woven in a loom of ordinary pattern. Anybody may observe that a thin sheet of glass is somewhat elastic. The threads employed in weaving are of such fineness as to be perfectly pliable and soft at all bridle. With a gown of glass would naturally go a pair of glass slippers.

A Pittsburg gentleman named Smith has invented processes for making glass slippers in molds. They would not do very well for dancing. There is no reason why a glass gown should not be woven of iridescent glass, so that the wearer would look like an animated, rainbow on a ballroom floor—one dazzling shimmer of ever changing hues. Iridescent glass was the last branch of iridescent glass was set down in the list of the lost arts. But in 1879 it was rediscovered, and now it is a common commercial article. It is made by exposing ordinary pointed glass to the vapors of salts of sodium. At the Metropolitan Museum of Art, in New York city, are exhibited a large number of bottles, plates and other articles of glass which were made and used long before Christ was born. They were dug up in Cyprus and elsewhere. Many of them have a beautiful iridescence, but it is the result of decay. Glass will rot like anything else, and decay has split the structure of this ancient glass into laminæ, or flakes, which interrupt the light so as to produce brilliant red, green, purple and other rainbow colors.

The splendid hands of the glass house of the future will be of glass, of course. That is another patent, and the inventor suggests that such blinds may be made of which slats are slatted. Baby in the nursery perhaps will play with glass building blocks and at a suitable age he will receive as a gift a pair of glass roller skates with glass rollers. Both of these ideas have been patented. When he is old enough to go fishing, he will not dig worms for bait. Instead, he will be provided with artificial bait in the shape of a hollow minnow of glass, coated on the inside pearly with a solution of gold or silver and gaudily with a luminous paint.

Glass bedsteads may be proof against lightning and bugs, but it is hardly to be suspected that glass houses should be free from mice. The inmates could hardly do better than to employ glass traps for the capture of such vermin. The great advantage of the glass mousetrap, according to the statement of the inventor, is that "if one mouse enter the trap he may be seen by others of his species to go that way, and they will be inclined to join the one inside, especially when they observe that he is nibbling a choice morsel." Up to date the glass mousetrap has not made itself popular, notwithstanding the important arguments in its favor, and of most of the other devices described it is unfortunately true that they have not proved profitable to the persons who contrived them. This remark, however, by no means applies to the glass lemon squeezer, which is already a familiar household utensil. The inventor of it is said to have sold his rights for $50,000. One of the most remarkable inventions of them all was the way, was that of a Venetian named Joquin, in 1656. He noticed that the scales of a fish called the bleak gave a milky hue to the water, and that glass beads dipped into such water looked like pearls when dried. Subsequently the idea was conceived of making hollow beads of glass and lining them with the pearlie substance from the scales of the fish, and it is in this way that the so-called Roman pearls are now manufactured. It is in this substance that the iridescence of the scales of many species of fishes is due.—Washington Cor. Philadelphia Times.

To Increase Rex Begonias.

If you wish to raise a number of new plants of Rex or other large leafed begonias, take a sharp knife and make a cut at the intersection of the veins. Then lay the leaf, veined side down, on a saucer of wet sand, place in a sunny window and keep damp. They plants will form at the cuts. When an inch high, they may be lifted into thumb pots. This is a very fascinating way to grow begonias.—Womankind.

Pio Nino's Fad.

Pope Pius IX. was a collector of slippers. He always had 24 pairs in his wardrobe, made of red cloth, embroidered with gold and ornamented with a solid gold cross, his chamberlain being strictly enjoined not to put on with a single pair, however well worn they might be, to any of the many devout applicants for them.

THE GALLERY GODS.

OUTSPOKEN CRITICS WHO SIT IN THE CHEAP SEATS NEAR THE CEILING.

The Kind of Plays and Players That Please the Habitues of the "Heaven"—Their Fondness For Particular Actors and Actresses—How They Applaud.

This is all because St. Louisans have their irrefutable opinions made to order. Attractions before reaching here have been tried by the fire of eastern criticism. The local theater goer, a most indolent appreciator, accepts the dicta of others rather than energize sufficiently to formulate an opinion of his own. In this atmosphere of Philistinism the gallery is stifled. Indeed on the rare occasions on which it has attempted to assert its independence, physical force has been employed to coerce it into uniformity with the pit.

A case in point occurred some years ago, when Mary Anderson brought here her all English production of "A Winter's Tale." Mary was bad enough, but her troop of barnstorming supernumeraries was too much for the gallery. The pit and boxes were filled with the elite of the city, and they were in ecstasy over the beautiful scene that first stamped to assert its independence, physical force has been employed to coerce it into uniformity with the pit.

A case in point occurred some years ago, when Mary Anderson brought here her all English production of "A Winter's Tale." Mary was bad enough, but her troop of barnstorming supernumeraries was too much for the gallery. The pit and boxes were filled with the elite of the city, and they were in ecstasy over the beautiful scene that first stamped the Princess of Wales. But the "gods" could not understand the thick speech of the Englishmen nor appreciate their histrionic action. Unassisted by the display of fashion, they boldly gayed the performance. Four ushers were pretty badly beaten for attempting to restore order, and for a relay of police was finally necessary to bring about quiet. There were a dozen broken heads as the result of the evening, and there has not been a noisy gallery in either the Grand or Olympic since.

One of the marked characteristics of the gallery boy—there are others—is his fondness for the sensational. The late Lawrence Barrett was a rodhot favorite with the gallery boys from one end of the country to the other. Beautiful and most delicate fabrics are made out of spun glass. HALLOWE'EN BARN FESTIVAL.

INTERESTING FEATURES ARRANGED FOR ST. STEPHEN'S CHURCH.

The Rain Prevented Many From Attending, but Those Who Did Go Spent an Enjoyable Evening—Those in Charge

Hallowe'en was not a success last Thursday owing to the weather, for a hard, driving rain, which commenced early in the afternoon from the east, drove all the romance out of any out of door performances. Although the severe rain kept many from attending the Hallowe'en festival in the barn of C. P. Ralli, of Belvidere avenue, there were quite a number present. The illumination of the lawn with Japanese lanterns had to be given up, but the interior of the barn was most wonderfully changed from its every day appearance. Jack o' lanterns grinned from the stalls and secluded the corners, while flags and greens were draped over the doors and windows. Ferns and flowers were also tastefully arranged about the barn. The candy booth was the first to draw the attention of the new arrival. Coming in from the pelting rain, the visitor was almost dazzled with an artistic arranged table loaded with sweets, both home-made and of the most celebrated New York make, and brilliantly lighted with electric lights. Here Miss Beatrice Potter and Miss Josephine Simmonds were stationed and looked after the interests of the candies. In the next booth, Miss Clara Woltmann was prepared to tell some startling secrets of the future of all who wished.

In the main room of the barn the rest of the booths were to be found. On a prettily decorated table a handsome display of cakes was shown, while Mrs. A. J. Beal, Mrs. N. P. T. Finch and Miss Grace Edson were ready to give the purchaser full value for his money.

The mystery table brought many of the young people to it by its name and when there they were allowed, for a small sum, to select any of the mysterious packages. Miss Trotty Smith, Mrs. Woodward and Miss Clara Woodward were in charge here.

The artistic tea table was presided over by Mrs Foote and Miss Mary Ellis.

Another table covered with fancy articles, mostly the work of the women who gave the festival, was looked after by Miss Maud Lord, Miss May Sandford, Miss Abbie Burt, and Miss Ellie Braine.

One of the chief attractions of the evening was a short one-act play entitled "Six Cups of Chocolate." One end of the barn was tastefully fitted up as a stage and curtained off from the maid floor. The play was given with the following cast and was received with great applause:

Belaide von Linden.....Miss May Simpson
Jeanette Durand.....Miss Anthony
Hester Beacon.....Miss Syracuse
Marion Lee.....Miss Beale
Dorothy Greene.....Miss Maud Lord
Beatrix VanKorthoven.....
Miss Madeline Ostermoor

After the performance American Beauty roses were presented to the cast.

The festival was given by the Altar Society of St. Stephen's church, and the committee who took charge of the arrangements consisted of Mrs. S. S. Guion, Miss Edith Clark and Mrs. A. J. Beal.

ONLY TWO EXPERIENCE DOLLARS.

Rain Prevented Temperance Women From Turning Out.

On account of inclement weather the attendance at the W. C. T. U. yesterday was small and little was done. Mrs. S. R. Krom, Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson and Mrs. R. K. Case gave reports of the recent State convention held at Paterson, which were full of interest to all. The feature of the session that of each member giving a dollar and telling how it was earned, did not come up to the expectation of those present, as there were only two present who had earned their dollar. One had secured a dollar by selling books, and the other by selling flowers.

At the close of the session chocolate and wafers were served to the members.

Victors at Progressive Euchre.

The Young People's Progressive Euchre Club, of Dunellen and North Plainfield, met at the home of Miss Janie C. Churchill, of Dunellen, last week. The first ladies' prize was won by Miss Mattie T. Barrett, Miss Janie C. Churchill took second. John C. Churchill was the victor among the other sex and Fred Haynes and Robert Carpenter tied for second prize. Haynes won on the cut. A most enjoyable evening was spent. The club meets again next Friday evening.

Carrier Boy Hurt.

Charles Pawson, one of The Daily Press' faithful carriers, while returning home from the North Plainfield public school yesterday afternoon, was knocked down and run over by a horse and wagon on Somerset street, driven by some farmer. Besides being covered with mud, he luckily escaped with a few bruises on one of his legs.

KIRMESS MATINEE DANCES.

PRETTY GIRLS AND MANLY BOYS TO FORM AN ATTRACTIVE FEATURE.

Dancing in Measured Steps to Musical Accompaniment They Will Be the Cynosure of Admiring Relatives and Friends.

Although not much has been heard of the matinee dances of the Kirmess, it does not signify that they are not as beautiful and as enjoyable as any of the evening dances. Indeed, according to the testimony of those who have seen the Kirmess in other cities, they are even better, if that were possible. The young folks glide and whirl about as gracefully as their older brothers and sisters.

The old English custom of celebrating May day with song and dance about the May pole furnishes one of the prettiest dances in the Kirmess. The graceful maidens, clad in the simple gowns of the country, gather about the May pole and celebrate the beginning of summer. The boys are given a chance to distinguish themselves in the Hornpipe. In this dance the onlooker thinks that he has either run afoul of one of the white squadron or a party of fishermen. The sailor lads come out in full costume and go through their manœuvres in a catchy way.

The Carnival dance explains itself. The young people, dressed in fancy costumes, glide and whirl through various fancy figures and group themselves in many pretty tableaux.

The Flowers and Bees meet together and the insects hum about while the flowers wave back and forth in the wind. This is one of the most artistic dances in the Kirmess.

The little Japs give one of the most amusing of all the dances and yet a very pretty one. The foreigners, with solemn faces, dance about in the most natural manner until everyone is transported to the "Land of the Rising Sun," and we only brought back when the last strain of the catchy music dies away.

The rehearsals for the Kirmess are going on and those who are to take part in it are hard at work preparing. The lists of the participants in the dances have all been completed and the list of the dances, published in The Daily Press several days ago, is completed. They are as follows:

German—Hostesses—Chaperones, Mrs. Miss E. Scoiper, Mrs. Evarts Tracy, Mrs. J. F. Wrechers; the Misses Alice Barlow, Cornelia Faber, Helene Graff, Marion Henderson, Antania Methfessel, Elvira Methfessel, Anna Miller, M. Stirling, E. Stirling, Helen Taylor, May Tracy and Edith Tracy. Messrs. Siegfried Arens, Barlow, Walter Douglass, Charles Faber, Bryant Harman, Edward Rushmore, McAnery, Stevens, E. C. Talking to the Boys.

Prof. John Gifford, State Forester of New Jersey, addressed the lads in the room of the Boys' Club last evening. He spoke of forest fires, their cause and the means of preventing them. Among the causes are locomotives, lightning, careless small boys and vicious men, some of whom will cause disastrous fires to spite a neighbor; one such fire which the professor witnessed was twenty miles wide and traveled as fast as a horse could gallop, burning over 197,000 acres, worth $10 an acre at a low computation, besides burning dwellings and destroying the birds throughout the region. The boys and their friends showed great interest in the address.

A strictly first-class vaudeville company will appear at Music Hall tomorrow evening, when James Thornton's Elite Vaudeville Company will be the attraction. Mr. Thornton is known through the country as one who stands at the head among the many song writers before the public, known as the man who has set the world a singing. Bonnie Thornton, who heads his well selected company, alike the star, is well known as a comedian and singer.

RELIEF CORPS ENTERTAINMENT.

Many Pleasing Numbers Rendered for Those in Attendance.

The attendance at the entertainment given by the Woman's Relief Corps last Friday was excellent and all were well pleased with the programme. Vincent W. Nash was master of ceremonies and opened the affair by introducing Miss Ada Nash, who rendered a pleasing piano solo.

A dialogue followed, entitled "Farmer and Dude," by W. Sherwin and W. Nash, which was very amusing. Miss Anna Cooper, of Westfield, gave a delightful recitation and was obliged to respond to an encore.

A feature was the broom drill by the Misses Bird, Hand, Riker, Nash, VanNess and Casey. It was heartily received. Another dialogue was given by Miss A. Ward and Miss L. Sheldon, entitled "Genius and Application."

The Peake Sisters from Alaska were then introduced and amused the audience with recitations, vocal and instrumental music and bell ringing.

Miss Radin and Miss Fish rendered an excellent piano duet, which preceded a dialogue entitled "Story Telling." Those taking part were Miss May Howlett, Mrs. Cox, Mrs. Bowman, Mrs. A. E. Dobbins, Miss Ada Nash and Walter Magie.

A pantomima, "Jesus Lover of My Soul," by Miss Cooper, with singing accompaniment by Miss Morse, was finely rendered.

A recitation by W. R. Mattox, and a tableau, "North and South," brought to a close an evening that all thoroughly enjoyed.

LOTS OF NEW MEMBERS.

The Board of Directors of the Y. M. C. A. Met Last Evening.

The Board of Directors of the Y. M. C. A. met last evening and elected one hundred and six new members, the largest number ever elected at one meeting. The principal object of the meeting was to settle on some agreement to present to the city for the damages done to the property by the cutting through of Watchung avenue. About fifty feet of the Y. M. C. A. property is to be taken by the city but the Board is in favor of the extension and a satisfactory agreement can, without a doubt, be made. The Board received an anonymous subscription of $150 from one of the original members of the New York City Y. M. C. A. The routine business of the Board was then transacted.

SOLD THE STOVE TO BUY CANDY.

An Incorrigible Twelve-year-old Boy's Remarkable Prank.

Constant Daruchetti, twelve years old, of Linden, was committed to the Union county jail Thursday afternoon on a charge of larceny preferred by his mother. The boy is said to be incorrigible. He has frequently stolen money from his mother, and it is alleged that one day last week he robbed the Linden Post office of a small amount in stamps.

Tuesday his mother left him in charge of the house while she visited a neighbor. During her absence Constant raked the fire from the kitchen stove and sold the stove to a junk man for seventy-five cents. He spent the money for candy, and then ran away, fearing his mother's anger. A constable found him yesterday morning hiding in the woods half a mile from the village. The boy will be sent to the reform school.

THE REDS WIN.

End of the Y. M. C. A. Membership Contest With 115 New Members.

The membership contest at the Y. M. C. A. closed last night with excellent results. The contest was for one month and during that time 115 new members were secured, representing over $600. The "Reds," with D. A. McPhie as captain, were victorious, with 88 members, while the "Blues," championed by George Cornwell, finished with 27 to their credit. The Board of Directors met and went over the work, which was very satisfactory.

It was decided that the Ladies Nine should get up the supper for Monday evening, Nov. 9th, when the winning side will partake of the good things to eat, and the losing side will sit by and see them eat.

Both sides have done good work and their efforts are much appreciated by the officers of the association.

A Unique Wedding Ring.

A precious heirloom in the possession of the Misses Shreve, of North Holly, New Jersey, is a wedding ring, on the inside of which is engraved this inscription:

"In Christ and thee
For short be."

The ring is of plain gold, and was given to their great-grandmother, Mary Cook, on the day of her marriage, in 1757, to Jonathan Lippincott, of Monmouth county, New Jersey. The father of this Jonathan Lippincott was David Lippincott, who, in 1731, married Rebecca Stockton, a granddaughter of the first Richard Stockton, who settled in Burlington county, New Jersey. This pioneer was born in 1707, and was the grandfather of Richard Stockton, the signer of the Declaration of Independence.

THE FIRST LARGE RECEPTION.

MRS. FRANK SARGENT GRANT RECEIVES AT HER HOME.

The first large reception of the season was given Thursday afternoon when Mrs. Frank Sargent Grant received her own and her daughter's friends from four until seven o'clock at her residence, 59 Jackson avenue. The morning clouds that threatened rain developed by the afternoon into a steady down-pour, preventing many persons, especially out of-town friends, from enjoying the hospitality generously proffered by Mrs Grant. Those who braved the elements were all repaid by the good cheer awaiting them. Mrs. Grant was assisted in receiving by her daughter, Miss Smock, a fair debutante, the Misses Florence and Minnie Marsh, Miss Grant, from Brooklyn, a sister of Dr. Grant, Madenoiselle Rangel, from Paris, France, Miss Wills, from Newburyport, Mass., and Miss Risley, from New York. The parlor decorations were palms and white chrysanthemums, pink shaded lights shedding a warm glow over the pretty scene.

The same colors and decorations prevailed in the tea room and dining room where ices and confections were served. Mrs. Child, from New York, a sister of Dr. Grant, and Mrs. S. St. J. McCutchen presided at the table over tea and chocolate. The rare old mahogany table in the dining room was beautifully decorated with broad white satin ribbons laid in squares, terminating in bows at the sides. The centre piece was a large bowl of exquisite white chrysanthemums surrounded by smilax.

In the evening a dance pondre was given by Miss Smock for her young friends and the powdered wigs of stately dames and picturesque peasants gave a quaintly pretty charm to the graceful figures gliding through the dances. The supper room, where a delicious repast was served, was decorated with American flags and chrysanthemums, the artistic table being a pleasing feature of the room. Rogers and Conde furnished the music.

Dr. Grant and family are planning to spend the winter in New York, expecting to leave in about two weeks.

Fears Tramps Kidnapped Her Child.

Mrs. F. Josephs, a colored woman, of Cranford, has asked the aid of the police to find her ten-year-old daughter, Mary, who strangely disappeared Monday afternoon last. The child was sent to school at 3 o'clock to get her weekly report. The child never reached the schoolhouse, nor has any trace of her been found since. She was bright and quite good looking. Her mother fears she has been kidnapped by tramps.

Terrorized By Tramps.

A gang of about twenty tramps assembled at El Mora, near Elizabeth, Tuesday night, and marched, yelling and hooting, along the country road to the tramps' headquarters in the woods between Westfield and Garwood. Couples in carriages and wheelmen were insulted and stoned, and the crowd chased one wheelman nearly half a mile, threatening to kill him because he answered back to them.

ADVANTAGE OF SEWAGE BEDS

NO STREAMS TO POLLUTE AND NO QUESTIONS TO SETTLE.

Trouble Caused by Sewage Running Into the Passaic—Raritan River Would be the Same if a Pipe Line Was Built.

The residents of Plainfield may congratulate themselves over the construction of their sewerage system with its proposed purification plant, when they consider the present condition of the Passaic River and the difficult problem of preventing the further pollution of that stream by the sewage of the cities and towns along its banks. Had the sewage of Plainfield been discharged into the Raritan River in its crude state, Plainfield would have been contributing towards a future possible condition of that stream such as now exists in Passaic, but which the construction of the filter beds will render impossible.

The pollution of the Passaic River has been steadily increasing for a number of years with the growth of the population in the valley and the construction of sewerage systems in towns and cities one after another with outlets into the river. Paterson and Passaic both discharge their sewage into the river, and so do numerous smaller places along the stream until beneath the bridge of the Greenwood Lake Railway at North Newark, the combined sewage of the cities of Orange, Montclair and Bloomfield empties into the stream. These municipalities, together with East Orange, which has just been connected with the Newark sewers, are none of them upon the river but find it the most convenient outlet for their sewage. A large portion of the sewage of Newark also goes into the stream and is bandied back and forth by the tide. During the past summer the water of the river was extremely low, exposing to sight and smell a most disgraceful pollution of the banks and bed of the stream. It is alleged that some of the persons occupying summer residences along the river have been compelled to abandon them on account of the intolerable odors, and that the great popularity of the river drives is steadily diminishing for the same reason.

This summer the residents of the upper part of the river became so agitated over the matter that they held public meetings and called upon the State Board of Health to aid them in stopping the nuisance. A conference of the local Boards of Health in the cities and towns concerned, with the State Board of Health, was held at Trenton during the latter part of September and the whole situation discussed in detail. A resolution was adopted at this meeting providing for the appointment of one representative from each of the Boards of Health of the different communities concerned, who should constitute a committee to take steps to devise some means of solving the difficult problem. The committee thus appointed met at Passaic on Tuesday, October 29th, and after discussing the situation agreed to secure the introduction, as early as possible in the next session of the Legislature, a bill referring the whole matter to the State Board of Health for investigation. A bill with the same provisions was introduced late in the last session of the Legislature, but did not pass, largely owing to the confusion at the close of the session, it may be. This bill will be re-introduced.

It authorizes the State Board of Health to employ engineers and in general to present plans for the abatement of the nuisance. What means should be adopted to this end it is left for the board to decide after a careful investigation. An appropriation of $10,000 is provided to carry on the work. Having decided on this measure the committee named above adjourned after having appointed as a committee to secure the introduction and passage of the bill the following gentlemen:

In supporting the adoption of the proposed bill by the committee Mr. Baker pointed out the great difficulties that were involved in solving the problem from an engineering, legal and financial point of view, and explained the absolute necessity of laying before the Legislature a well-considered scheme. He urged that the State Board of Health was a body already in existence in which the health interests of the State are confided and therefore that it was the proper body to carry on the investigation. He also called attention to the fact that while the solution of a problem of this kind was without precedent in the State of New Jersey that Massachusetts had been over the same ground in a very successful way. In 1889 the Legislature of that State referred to the State Board of Health the question of devising some system of sewerage which would prevent the further pollution of the streams and beaches in and around Boston and a number of adjoining municipalities. The recommendations made by the board were adopted by the Legislature, which provided for the appointment of a commission to construct the necessary works, and these works are now drawing to completion, after the expenditure of large sums of money. The funds for the work were provided, in the first instance, by the issuing of State bonds, a course which at present would probably be impossible in this State. These bonds are redeemed, the interest on them paid and the cost of maintaining the system raised by taxation upon the several municipalities benefitted.

If the proposed New Jersey bill is passed and the investigation carried out with success it may be expected that it will be but the beginning of other investigations looking to the preservation of the purity of other rivers of the State, notably the Raritan and the Rahway.

TRAMPS IN FULL SWAY.

For the past week this place has been overrun with tramps who rendezvous in Ripley's woods at Garwood, about a mile from this village, says The World correspondent from Westfield. They annoy the people living in the neighborhood by begging eatables and money. In the summer months the town was rid of these fellows, but of late they come in gangs, and it is estimated that there are nearly two hundred tramps in and around Westfield at the present time. Each day a number are detailed to get provisions for the gang and with the regular tramp story they are most of the time successful in securing provisions from merchants. Of late the farmers have complained to the authorities that they have lost their chickens and attibute it to tramps.

At night the hoboes build acampfire and enjoy themselves with a dinner in tramp style. Late last night about thirty gathered on the county road near Boselle and started on a march along the county road towards Garwood. They sang and shouted and created a disturbance. Wheelmen and others on the road were greeted with insulting remarks and jeers. In several instances persons in carriages indiscreet enough to reply to them got a volley of stones.

The tramps had the road to themselves. Everybody got out of their way as quickly as possible. When they reached Garwood they went into their camp in the woods and enjoyed themselves in their own peculiar way. The authorities will consider the tramp question.

COAL GOES UP FIFTY CENTS.

Retail Dealers Say That It is Necessary Because of Wholesale Advances.

The retail price of all grades of domestic coal was raised last night fifty cents a ton. This action was taken at a meeting of the members of the New Jersey Coal Exchange held at the office of John Thickstun. This makes the price $5.50 a ton, which is fifty cents a ton higher than last winter and the same price that was charged two years ago.

The advance is made by the local dealers on account of the sharp advance made by the wholesale dealers. It was announced that it will be because of the lack of water and the unusual demands made by the western States for coal.

BECKWITH PROPERTY ATTACHED.

Receiver Evarts Granted a Big Writ in the Union County Court.

The largest writ of attachment ever issued in the Union County Court has just been given by Judge Van Syckel against Leonard Forbes Beckwith, an absent debtor, for $300,000 at the instance of Allen W. Evarts, receiver for Arthur Beckwith, a supposed lunatic.

Mr. Evarts claims that Leonard Forbes Beckwith is indebted to him as receiver for $180,154, and to partly recover this money he has attached five and a-half acres of valuable land in Linden township with a frontage of several hundred feet on Staten Island Sound.

WINDOW SMASHERS.

The young tough characters of this city seem to think Madison avenue an especially good field for operations. Last evening several of them came to the little shoemaker shop of John Sullivan at 131 Madison avenue, and broke one of the front windows.

There was a light inside and Sullivan was asleep on his lounge when the glass was broken. Sullivan is at a loss to see why they should attack him as he has done none of them an injury. Five years ago, some one threw an immense stone through his window, just missing his head and a lamp.

Who Is He?

It is understood that there is a dark horse in the race for the city judgeship and when his candidacy is known there will be some surprises.

A POOR WOMAN BUNCOED.

ACCEPTED A $50 CONFEDERATE BILL FOR GOOD CURRENCY.

The Woman Keeps a Polish Boarding House on Cottage Place, But Her Ignorance Made Her the Dupe of Another.

A Polish woman came into the Postal Telegraph Company's office Friday afternoon at about 1:30, weeping and wringing her hands. After considerable trouble Manager Martin heard her story and telephoned to Sergeant Kiely who took the matter in charge.

Her name is Mrs. Henzell, and she keeps a boarding house at 401 Cottage place. About two weeks ago, a tall Polishman, spare in build and rather old in appearance called there. He took board and worked on the sewers. He gave up his job a day or two ago and said that he did not like the work and was going back to his home in Pennsylvania.

This noon he brought a $50 bill to Mrs. Henzell and asked her to change it. She had $35 in gold and bills, the hard earned savings of her husband who works on the farm of a Mr. Jones. She gave him all but a $5 bill.

Joe Denman, another of the boarders, accompanied him to the corner of Front and Somerset streets, where he left him. The stranger, for no one seems to know his name, said that he was going to buy a box of beer and a pair of overhauls. In the meantime Mrs. Henzell wanted to change the $50 bill.

"I went to the Italian store on Cottage place," she said to a Daily Press reporter in her incoherent combination of Polish and English, "but he say no good! Then I go to the depot, but he say 'no good,' too, and my money is all gone, all gone!" and she burst into tears.

She was accompanied by Joe Denman and the Pole named Al Van Dyke. The three came to the Postal Telegraph office to tell their tale of woe. The bill was a $50 Confederate one and Mrs. Henzell, not knowing the currency of this country well enough, had exchanged $50 of her good money for it.

Sergeant Kiely accompanied by Denman and VanDyke, went up and down Front and to the North Avenue station in their endeavor to find the tramp. They had the road to themselves. Everybody got out of their way as quickly as possible. When they reached Garwood they went into their camp in the woods and enjoyed themselves in their own peculiar way. The authorities will consider the tramp question.

MR. MORRIS'S WORK.

The City's Testimonial to Dr. Coles Artistically Engrossed.

The testimonials to be presented to Dr. Jonathan Ackerman Coles by the Mayor and Common Council as a memorial of the city's recognition of his gift of the bronze group of statuary, to be place in Lincoln Park, is a beautiful specimen of the art of engrossing. The memorial is in album form, bound in dark leather of the finest quality, the fly leaves being of rich white moire silk. The body of the memorial contains the communication of the Mayor to the Common Council announcing the offer of Dr. Coles, the resolutions passed by the Council in accepting the gift and the announcement by Mayor Lebkuecher to Dr. Coles of the acceptance. The entire work is engrossed in India ink on a surface of Payn's gray, with high lights of silver and gold, which render a beautiful effect to the lettering. The groundwork has the appearance of rolled paper, surrounded by oak and ivy branches and leaves. Mayor Lebkuecher, members of the Common Council who have seen the memorial are highly pleased with and warmly commended the delineator, John B. Morris, secretary of the Board of Assessment. Mr. Morris himself considers it to be the best thing he has ever done in the engrossing line.—Newark Advertiser.

MEDAL FOR WALTZING.

The third ball under the auspices of the Jersey Central club, held in Red Men's hall last evening, was a successful affair. The hall was prettily decorated with Chinese lanterns and bunting. The evening was pleasantly spent in dancing to the strains from Naylor's orchestra, which was kept up until early morn.

The main event that was looked forward to with great interest was the prize waltz which took place at 12 o'clock. About thirteen couples contested, but out of these six couples were picked for the final heat. Ten minutes was given for the waltz, and at the finish the handsome gold medal was awarded amid loud applause to James Wilson, of Chester, Pa., and Miss Jennie Kilpatrick, of this city. The five judges that were selected by the committee were G. Barry, E. O'Reilly, G. Greder, D. Curtis and P. J. Doughery.

Plainfield Cyclist Transferred.

In the official bulletin of the racing board of the L. A. W., George Taggart is transferred to Class B.

THIRTY YEARS A FIREMAN.

Presented With a Beautiful Gold Watch as a Token of Esteem by the Various Members of the Fire Department

It was 8:45 Friday night when First Assistant Chief Engineer Martin mounted the stairs of the fire department headquarters and tip-toed to Chief Doane's office, where the Councilmanic Fire and Water Committee were in session, and called the Chief out and informed him that he wished to introduce him to a Newark fireman on the floor below. The two officers came down, preceded by Councilman Fisk, who expressed a desire to breathe a little fresh air.

"They say boys," said Councilman Fisk ascending to an elevated position on a step of the stairway, "that there is a band of fellowship among the fire boys. They tell me, too, that thirty years ago there was a young fellow who left home to become a fire boy by joining Engine Company No. 1. They say he always expressed a determination to be at the head, and I guess that his head is about the best thing about him. He went to war and was shot through the head; then he came home and fell off a ladder and struck on his head; he went to a fire and got hit in the jaw with a hose nozzle, and finally a short time ago, we are told, he was thrown out of his wagon, but he escaped because he struck on his head. But his determination to get up to the head has been reached. He went into the ranks, was chosen second assistant foreman, then first assistant and now he is the chief.

"Thirty years is a long time to be in active service, and now, Chief," said the Councilman addressing himself to Mr. Doane, "the boys in the different companies want to express their friendship and appreciation of your interest in the department by presenting you with a little token of esteem." Here Mr. Fisk handed the Chief a neat little package, but as the Chief said himself this morning "I couldn't open it to save my life," so surprised was he at the proceeding which had just been enacted.

But the dexterous fingers of Assistant Chief Martin soon brought forth the present—a beautiful solid gold Waltham watch, chain and charm. On one side was engraved the initials "T. O. D." in a monogram, and on the opposite side "1865" was engraved. The charm is a miniature chief's fire helmet.

"Well boys," said the Chief, "this has so taken my breath away that I don't know what to say, but I thank you all from the bottom of my heart for this evidence of esteem and especially when I consider from where it comes."

The Chief tried to make an appropriate reply, but his surprise was so great that he was unable to find words to express his feeling. Those who were present extended their congratulations but when he left the Chief over his thirtieth anniversary of service in the department.

The presentation was to have been made by Councilman Erickson, but he was unable to come out from New York in time. He telephoned the following:

Congratulations and best wishes. Plainfield is proud of this fireman; no man more deserves our applause and sympathy. He is the slave of the alarm gong as it sounds at all hours of the night. Instantly he is on the alert and carrying the possible signal of danger. Flames are nothing to him. He rushes through the flames as though he was a salamander, but he is not, as some frightful scars and many funeral processions, abundantly testify. All honor to the men who do not hesitate because their duty is perilous. They are the heroes of many thrilling adventures, and a recital of these duties during the past thirty years would seem like a story of imagination.

Mr. Doane became a member of Engine Company No. 1, on November 30, 1865. In 1868 he was elected second assistant foreman of the company, and a year later was made first assistant. It was during this year that the big Schepflin block fire occured and Mr. Doane performed one of the heroic deeds of his life, when he rescued from under the falling debris of the building William L. Force, John Case and Thomas Dunn. Later on he was chosen foreman of the company. In 1876 he was elected chief engineer by the department and re elected the following year. He refused the office in 1877, but in 1878 was prevailed upon to accept office again. During these years the borough and city fire companies were all under one head, but in 1888 the two departments were separated and the city made a paid department and the office of chief engineer appointive by the Mayor. Mayor Male selected Mr. Doane for the position and ever since he has served with satisfaction and efficiency and it is through his efforts principally that the department has the reputation of being one of the best in the country.

PRESERVING A SKIN.

IT WAS STILL ON THE TIGER, AND THE TIGER WASN'T DEAD.

A Sportsman's Mistake Nearly Resulted In the Loss of Human Life—After This an Extra Hole In the Hide Will Not Be Such an Important Consideration.

Arriving at the village of Deypoora, three miles from Ruttenghur fort, we were here told of a tiger that had lately killed very many bullocks, so we started with several men to look him up. We were taken to a ravine in the plains named Loonee Nullah, which ran up one side of a rocky ridge when we were recalled by a man who had seen the tiger. He directing us to the spot, we cautiously advanced, and looking over the steep bank of the ravine saw the tiger stretched out at full length just three yards or less below us. He looked as if he had been mauled horribly. We instantly gave him a bullet each, whereupon he sprang into the cover below and was out of sight even before we could get a second shot. On going down the bank we soon found drops of blood and easily carried these on for some distance down the ravine, when all at once they entirely ceased. The ground was bare sheet rock, or large slabs of flat stones; so no footprints could be discovered. After going on some little distance I noticed a man attending a herd of goats who denied having seen the tiger pass, and indeed it was but too evident from the unconcerned manner in which the animals browsed and cropped the bushes around that they had seen no such formidable animal lately. So we retraced our steps, but could not find the blood, when suddenly a man by signs pointed to a cave formed by a large ledge of rock that had fallen from above. We knew he was there, but much to our surprised us, for we had only just passed close by this very place, looking for the tiger's prints.

All the men, as usual, were at once ordered to a safe distance in the rear, while, placing our spare guns before us, we knelt down to fire. We fired at the tiger instantly close distance, for we were prevented by a steep bank behind us from going farther back, and a view could not be obtained from any other point. As fire we all we could make out were the tiger's eyes shining very clearly in the dark cave with an indistinct outline of his face. We agreed to fire together on the word, "One, two, three," being given by one of us. On the smoke clearing away, we were delighted to see the shrubbery cut stiff on his back, the white of his belly being uppermost and very visible. On going nearer, two small holes, one over each shoulder, with streams of blood flowed, caused us to congratulate each other on our good aim. We now walked up and, to our astonishment, in which the tiger had tried to hide himself, although it had but a small entrance, was large enough inside.

While talking over our lucky shots we observed one of the tiger's arms slowly move, but as if from mere muscular action, caused by its weight and the position the animal was in. On noticing this I suggested that another shot should be given to make sure, but Little slightly objected, as he thought it was only uselessly making holes and so spoiling the skin. On this I agreed to fire where our knives would first be used in taking off the tiger's head, and so the men were knives looking into the cave, without putting my gun to my shoulder, I placed its muzzle opposite the tiger's chest and fired the remaining loaded barrel. All this time the men, who from a distance had seen us so near the tiger's den, came running up lowered us in a great state of delight at the enemy being killed, for so they and we both thought was indeed the case. Instead of which, no sooner had I fired than, with a ghastly growl, out sprang the tiger as lively as ever. With one bound Little, who is remarkably strong and active, gained the top of the high ledge of rock from which the tiger had sprung, but he kept guard with his spare loaded barrel pointed over the mouth of the den; our other guns were left with the men and on walking up to first look at the tiger. For my part, in the most dreadful state of alarm, I at once rushed through the men in the cave to the open and were crowding around us, upsetting three or four and myself in so doing.

For the moment there was a terrible panic, and the ground being very uneven and stony, everybody seemed to fall over and trip up everybody else. Some climbed trees like squirrels, while others in their fright ran clean out of sight without stopping to look behind. All this time the tiger was roaring awfully. I fully believe, in the confusion, he was killing each man as he caught him, instead of which, being much confused, he luckily remained in the den, sound and around having only seemingly very recently cut out being able to find his way out. At last, gaining my legs, I snatched up a gun and, climbing up a neighboring tree just in front of the den. There were two men already in this slight tree, so its branches bent down unpleasantly close to the ground with the weight. From this point I fired 19 more shots, at only as many yards' distance, into this tiger before he was quiet. Only his fore arms and lower part of his belly could be hit every time he appeared at the mouth of the cave. All now being still, we came down from our high perches, and found that the beast really dead, riddled with balls. The appearance of the ground was very laughable. Guns, drums, bows, spears, shoes, and turbans were strewn all over the place. Some poor fellows were sadly bruised. It appeared that our shots had merely for the time stunned this tiger, and not killed him. He lies in a long narrow cell directly between the eyes and on the extreme top of the forehead. The shot in his chest must effectually have finished him.

This was a most extraordinary and lucky escape for all of us, for, supposing him quite dead, we should have begun to haul him out by the tail, when he would proceed to skin him on the spot, during which operation the hunters usually all crowd around, and should he have risen and seized the first one he has occasioned in his day. Taking off his skin would, no doubt, have revived the tiger, when the consequences would have been too awful to be terrible to conceive. Doubtless more than one life would have been lost. This little adventure served as a good caution to us never to fancy a tiger dead, or a beast's skin to fully ascertain whether he was dead or not. At this time we were but young hands at tiger killing, but we have learned by experience many such valuable lessons. This tiger was a very large old one.—"Tiger Hunting in India," Lieutenant Rice.

DOCTORS IN CHINA.

DANGERS MEDICAL MISSIONARIES HAVE TO ENCOUNTER.

Instructions Disobeyed and Various Obstacles to Prevent the Recovery of the Afflicted—Ingenious Dispensing Hours to Obscure Hard Patients.

The life of a medical missionary in China is filled with difficulties any one of which may become a source of positive danger at any time.

In the making of a diagnosis many perils lurk. The fever thermometer, the tongue depressor or the stethoscope may be remembered as an evil implement in the hands of the foreign woman, calling down upon the patient a bad spirit, if she should happen to die even at some far distant time, while the use of more complicated instruments in auscultating the throat, nose or eye is advisable only in selected cases.

In prescribing medicines not only is the fear of a future accusation of poisoning ever present, but the possibility that it may prove to be a reality. Thus a bottle of liniment curing the venerable grandmother of rheumatism is sure to lead to a neighbor stricken with smallpox as an infallible remedy, or the entire contents of a bottle of cough mixture may be administered in one dose to a teething infant. And without exception the heathen Celestial reason that if a small portion of medicine is of some benefit to the patient, if taken at once, multiplies its usefulness in a corresponding ratio. Therefore, if not prescribing the entire contents, it behooves the missionary to make it an infallible rule never to dispense a poisonous remedy or one which could do harm if the entire quantity were taken at once. Liniments and toothache drops compounded of non-poisonous drugs may not be highly potent, but they are at least harmless.

When it becomes absolutely necessary to administer a powerful remedy several times or for several days in succession, the doctor prepares the dose in powder, oval powder or capsule, and, leaving them at the dispensary with a trained American nurse or other foreign helper, directs that a surgeon's orderly or a native assistant there for one every three hours, or three times a day, as the case may require; otherwise he would be left with them at once or divided among ailing neighbors.

In rare instances, where the sufferer belongs to the household of a great dignitary or is otherwise of especial importance, the doctor may remain herself or leave her nurse to administer the drafts, but this can rarely be done in a country where one has 20,000 or 30,000 patients annually.

To guard the closets containing drugs against depredations the utmost precautions are necessary, and the use of privacy in China, any attempt in that direction producing suspicion of hidden evils perilous to the welfare of a foreigner, the most ingenious devices for the windows of a dispensary, and even the well ones crowd inside during dispensing hours to observe proceedings. They watch the curious formulas, the various mixtures and powders and potions seemingly in a haphazard fashion, with the passionate desire to do likewise, which will be gratified if the closet is ever found unlocked. Meanwhile there is some satisfaction in attempting to extract a powder from the table, a bottle from the closet or even a little dust spilled from a paper bag, attempts seldom successful. The incentive is usually opium, though it may be mere curiosity.

In the matter of hours the most faithful servant in the mission hospital can never be trusted, nor can the native assistant nurses, as each one's opportunity would be allowed, as a rule, to handle or administer medicine.

The complications and responsibilities multiply themselves, and the opportunities are in China multiplied a thousandfold. For reasons explained above, an operation must never be done in private, but in a room which is generally filled with eyes to observe the mysterious rites from outside posts of observation. It is possible that having once been successful in some of the proceedings, to be appeased only with great difficulty, and the death of the patient may be followed by an open revolt. On the contrary, if the operation be successful, people afflicted with all sorts of irremedial surgical ailments in nowise resembling the preceding one are brought to the little hospital with the demand that they also be relieved.

Against the administration of an anesthetic there is the greatest prejudice, the condition of temporary unconsciousness produced by it being beyond Chinese comprehension. In the majority of cases, however, it is found that the patient, with the stoicism or the insensibility to pain of the average Chinese being remarkable. He or she will open the mouth and submit to having a tooth extracted without a grimace or a groan, and it is with apparent enjoyment that one receives the thrusts of the long, slender acupuncture needle—acupuncture, universal panacea, is the chief native surgical procedure—implanted five inches in the swollen rheumatic knee and again and again by a native surgeon.

The dread of smallpox and cholera displayed by foreigners fills the Celestial mind with surprise, and any show of absolute fear with the utmost contempt. "Why be afraid of smallpox," they ask, "when thousands of Chinamen die from it daily, and why should you foreigners be so fear from it." In these cases the forlorn hope of the Chinese leech is the famous red pills—lingo pao yu t'an, the superannuated panacea for all chronic ailments of the bigness of a pin's head, whose composition is secret and whose curative properties are to "loosen the phlegm and dry it." Advantage is taken of the fact that the powder when puffed up the nose acts like snuff in producing sneezing to prognosticate a speedy cure, and when it is known that it will not produce one sneeze, the man will die in a short time; if he sneezes once, he will live at least one week longer; if twice, he will live if 30 times, 30 days, and thus the ratio continues.

During an epidemic of either of these contagious diseases the number afflicted are daily brought to the hospital, asking for admission, but the reasons for their rejection fall upon incomprehending and disappointed minds. It is quite impossible to establish any form of quarantine or to prevent members of infected families from going wherever they desire, while the physician has great reason to congratulate herself if she succeeds in excluding them from visiting the dispensary and hospital wards.—Philadelphia Times.

French housemaids have a pet superstition that it is unlucky to kill a "money spinner," i. e., spider, and therefore spare many webs in situations where they can be left without suspicion of negligence.

TO QUELCH THE CIGARETTE.

W. C. T. U. WOMEN IMPORTUNE THE BOARD OF EDUCATION FOR HELP.

Want to Form an Anti-Cigarette League Among the School Boys and Enforce the Law against Selling the Vile Thing.

The Board of Education held its regular monthly meeting at the High School building last Monday. Messrs. Probasco, Lounsbury and Jenkins were present when the meeting was called to order, and Mr. Finch arrived soon after. Dr. Jenkins was appointed secretary until the arrival of Mr. Finch.

The minutes of the last meeting were temporarily dispensed with and a large batch of bills read, approved and ordered paid. The report of Tax Collector Johnson was next read which showed that school monies to the amount of $2,344.26 had been collected, which, with interest of $30.09, made a total of $3,274.35 which had been deposited in the City National Bank. The report was then accepted and placed on file. Clerk Clark read the minutes of the last meeting which were approved.

Superintendent Maxson announced that there were two women who would like to appear before the Board and then introduced Mrs. J. J. Coard and Mrs. S. R. Krom. Mrs. Coard addressed the Board and stated that their object in coming was to secure the co-operation of the Board in forming an anti-cigarette league among the boys of the public schools. She exhibited a number of letters signed by the Mayor and all the prominent clergymen in which they all thoroughly endorsed the plan. Principal Travell, of the High School, had, she said, signified his willingness to be at the head of such a movement. She asked that the law, which forbids the sale of cigarettes to minors, be enforced, and said that the Chief of Police acknowledged that the law was being broken all over the city. She next read the pledge and the letters written by Rev. Dr. Richards and Mayor Gilbert.

"In asking for co-operation" she said "we are not asking for funds. They are so slight, principally for literature, that the W. C. T. U. can easily furnish them. All we ask is to have at least one of your number present when it is formed, and at the meetings if possible." Mrs. Coard and Mrs. Krom both explained something of the workings of the league, that monthly meetings were to be held and reports made of the work that had been done, papers read and debates held. All the Board expressed themselves as in sympathy with the movement and willing to do all in their power to help, but were afraid they would be unable to attend the meetings. Superintendent Maxson said he thought it a very good thing but did not have time to push it along. The Board agreed to consider the matter and the women departed.

Superintendent Maxson reported that he had written to the publishers of Appleton's Cyclopedia regarding a revision and they replied that they did not intend making one at present. It was decided to let the matter drop.

Mr. Lounsbury, as chairman of the building committee, made his report. He reported that C. W. Hummer, the carpenter who made the repairs in the High School, asked for the $5,000 bond given when he took the contract. His request was granted. Mr. Lounsbury next reported regarding a safe in which to preserve the papers of the Board. He stated that the old safe was not fire-proof and entirely too small. Estimates had been received from Herring and Marvin for safes, Herring being the lowest, $220 to Marvin's $345. A vault, he said, would cost over $300. Dr. Jenkins seemed to be in favor of the vault while the rest preferred the safe. After some discussion it was decided to lay the question on the table, Lounsbury alone voting no to the motion.

The question of the purchase of a letter file was next discussed and Mr. Lounsbury reported prices, with and without a base. Dr. Jenkins and Mr. Finch favored one without a base while Dr. Probasco and Mr. Lounsbury thought that a base should be purchased.

On motion of Mr. Finch, the report of the building committee was laid on the table.

Superintendent Maxson stated that Captain Edwards said he could obtain guns from the State by giving a bond and Superintendent Maxson suggested that racks be put down cellar for the guns as Captain Edwards wished. Dr. Probasco thought that the guns would rust. No action was taken.

$526 was reported by Superintendent Maxson as having been received as tuition from non-resident pupils.

The question of the anti-cigarette league was next brought up and Mr. Lounsbury introduced the following resolution which was unanimously carried.

Resolved, That the Board of Education, recognizing the growing evil of cigarette smoking, hereby expresses its sympathy with all movements to suppress its growth, and approves of the formation of an anti-cigarette league among the public school pupils, and offers the use of the necessary room for the meeting of said league.

The annual financial statement of the Board was then read, and on motion was received, placed on file and ordered published. The statement showed a balance on hand, August 31st, 1894, of $7,702.52. The receipts amounted to $84,035.66 and the disbursements to $56,488.84. By taking out several other items, the balance left on August 31st, 1895, was $7,546.82. An Auditing Committee composed of Lovell and Lounsbury, was appointed, and as soon as they audit the statement it will be published in full. The members of the Board were all well satisfied with the statement, as for the great amount of work done, the expenditures were very small, showing that it had been done in an economical way. The meeting then adjourned.

A SURPRISE DANCE.

Miss Cuming is Given a Surprise Party in Honor of Her Birthday.

A very pleasant surprise was given Miss Henrietta Cuming, of Putnam avenue, last evening in honor of her birthday. She expected a few friends to spend the evening, but was quite astonished and delighted when a merry party of about twenty-five came trooping in.

The house was very prettily decorated with roses and chrysanthemums. The evening was mostly spent in dancing, for which Carpenter furnished the music. At about twelve o'clock refreshments were served.

Those present, beside the family of the hostess, were the Misses Mary Giles, Jennie Giles, Bessie Giles, Luella Mills, Mabel Moore, Evelyn Jenkins, Cora Richardson, Mabel Darling, May Coyn, of Jersey City, and Nellie Bockelkov, Robert Carpenter, Bert Fletcher, Mr. Randolph, Fred Haynes and George Richardson, of Dunellen, Edgar Finch, of Westfield, Will Moore, Fred Deitz, Albert Steiner, John Steiner, Will Abbott, Judson Giles and John Clark.

PUNTS AND KICKS.

The crack junior football eleven of Plainfield, the Alls team, went to Dunellen Tuesday morning and had no trouble in running up a score of ten points, while the home team made nothing. The Plainfield boys put up a splendid game, their interference being especially commendable. Cuming did the star work for them, making two touchdowns and running thirty and then forty yards. His good running was only made possible, however, by the interference of the other backs. Finch kicked one of the goals. The two teams lined up as follows:

ALLS.	DUNELLENS.
O. T. Waring.....left end.....Ernest Peters
Lindley Hillman..left tackle.....Fred Giddis
D. Stuart.....left guard.....Sidner Craig
Walter Long.....centre..Fred Hardingham
Morris Dumont..right guard..Irving Martine
E. N. Erickson...right tackle....Will Cooper
Albert Finch.....right end.....Robert Maltby
W. Wadsworth..quarter back.....L. Churchill
H. Cumming.....left half back....D. Carpenter
J. Bittenhouse..right half back...Halbert and Richardson

Roy Phillips, capt. full back. T. Thomas, capt

As soon as this game was finished, the eleven of the Spartan Literary and Athletic Society tried conclusions with the first Dunellen team. The Dunellen boys far outweighed them but it was only by the hardest work that the home team could make a single touchdown. In kicking the goal, the ball was dropped on the ground and one of the Dunellen team kicked it over the cross bar. As the kick was a punt, it did not count. The game ended with the score 4 to 0 in favor of Dunellen.

Croup is a terror to young mothers. To post them concerning the first symptoms, and treatment is the object of this item. The first indication of croup is hoarseness. In a child who is subject to croup it may be taken as a sure sign of the approach of an attack. Following this hoarseness is a peculiar, rough cough. If Chamberlain's Cough remedy is given as soon as the child becomes hoarse or even after the rough cough has appeared it will prevent the attack. It has never been known to fail. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds' pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

The market is full of cough mixtures but none trouble with most of them is that when they do a little good the patient has to take so much that he gets to loathe the taste. The Pineola Balsam is superior to other cough remedies because it is agreeable to the palate and its good effects are immediate. In a few days an ordinary cough is gone altogether. Bronchitis and asthma are more stubborn, but they too are cured by Ely's Pineola Balsam. A remedy worth trying. 25 cents is all it costs.

THEATRICAL.

After undergoing a thorough overhauling and re-brightening, Canary & Lederer's N. Y. Casino, one of the most popular amusement resorts—if not the most popular in the country—re-opened last evening, as a thoroughly fire-proof structure, with the first Metropolitan presentation of Henry B. Smith and Victor Herbert's new comic opera, "The Wizard of the Nile," with Mr. Frank Daniels in the title role, supported by a company of eighty people. This attraction brings into the steller field of comic opera a comedian who is genuinely funny—a comedian who has by original and natural methods conjured laughter spontaneously from the amusement public all over the country.

TRIED THE WINDOWS.

Policeman Cooney's Eagle Eye Observed Strange Proceedings.

Policeman Cooney in passing through West Second street near Madison avenue late last night, noticed a strange looking man standing by the office of the Electric Light Company.

He watched the stranger as he passed through the driveway next to Mrs. Krymer's boarding house, where he made several attempts to open the windows. From there he went back to the power building and was lost to view. The officer followed, and after securing a light from the engineer, he discovered the man hiding between two large boilers. He was brought out and questioned by the officer. He said that he could not get in his boarding house, but did not know where he boarded. He then stated that he had come from Scranton and was on his way to Brooklyn. The man's story was so disconnected that Policeman Cooney thought it best to lock him up which he did.

As Judge Coddington is away today on a hunting tour a hearing is deferred in the case until his return.

LECTURER UNABLE TO APPEAR.

Dot Whittier's and Phillips' Comments On Lydia Maria Child Were Read.

The Plainfield Branch Alliance of Unitarian and Other Liberal Christian Women opened the season of 1895-'96 Tuesday afternoon at three o'clock in All Souls church in a most auspicious manner, though the members were disappointed in not having Mrs. Chadwick, of Brooklyn, present, who was to have read a paper on the life of Lydia Maria Child. The Branch Alliance has planned a study of some liberal women, of which the above is one.

The members received word at a late hour that Mrs. Chadwick could not be present and a selected programme was arranged on the same subject. Mrs. S. R. Krom presided, and Miss Edith R. Leonard acted as secretary.

The first thing on the programme was the report of the religious news committee. Mrs. Leonard reported for the committee. It showed that the condition of Unitarianism throughout the country was excellent, as was also that of other denominations. Miss E. L. Reynolds then reported that twenty-five magazine and 207 papers had been distributed during the year.

Miss Edith R. Leonard read John G. Whittier's introduction to Mrs. Child's volume of letters. It was exceedingly interesting.

They were touching and paid great tribute to the life of the departed. Perhaps the most interesting feature of the meeting was the reading by Mrs. Leonard of several letters which were written by Mrs. Childs to Anron M. Powell. They were exceedingly clever and portrayed, perhaps, more than anything else to those who knew her, a better conception of her character.

After Mrs. S. R. Krom announced the next subject, "Margaret Fuller and Sister Dora," on December 10th, upon which a paper will be read by Mrs. Charles T. Catlin, of Brooklyn, the meeting adjourned.

ONE YEAR YET BEFORE A VOTER.

William J. Hartpence Celebrates His Twenti-th Birthday Anniversary.

Wm. J. Hartpence, of 315 Richmond street, passed his twentieth birthday and his friends planned to give him a surprise last night. The affair was arranged by William Wenzel and was so complete in every respect that Mr. Hartpence knew nothing of it till he arrived home about 8:30. Dancing and games helped to pass the evening in a pleasant manner.

Bert Naylor and Bert Blake furnished excellent music during the evening. About twelve o'clock the guests were served with refreshments. Mr. Hartpence received several useful presents from his friends. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Hartpence, Mrs. Henry Angleman, the Misses Arthur, Kate Apgar, Keenan, Emma Angleman, and Cora Hartpence, William Wenzel, Forester Hartpence, Robert Keenan, and Gilbert Apgar.

Two Murder Cases Set for Trial.

The October term of the county court, with the exception of two murder trials, will terminate today with the trial of an appeal case from the District Court. The trial of Frank Freehill, the Rahway murderer, who killed Special Officer Jewell, will begin next Tuesday, and the trial of the Italian who stabbed a countryman to death at Westfield will take place November 29th.

Began a Suit for $60,000.

A contract suit for $60,000 has been brought in the Union County Circuit Court by William Z. Larned, of Summit, against Reuben M. Manley, of Essex county. The suit is brought to recover the principal and interest on a coupon bond made by Luther O. Challerr, of Atchison, Kan., to the Kansas Trust and Banking Company, June 1st, 1889. The case will be tried at the next term of court.

Croup is a terror to young mothers. To post them concerning the first symptoms, and treatment is the object of this item. The first indication of croup is hoarseness. In a child who is subject to croup it may be taken as a sure sign of the approach of an attack. Following this hoarseness is a peculiar rough cough. If Chamberlain's Cough remedy is given as soon as the child becomes hoarse or even after the rough cough has appeared it will prevent the attack. It has never been known to fail. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds' pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

SCENES ALL HAVE VIEWED.

An appreciative and enthusiastic audience gathered at the Camera Club rooms in Babcock building Monday night and witnessed one of the best, if not the best, exhibitions ever given by the Club. Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis in his entertaining manner explained the pictures which added materially to the enjoyment of the occasion. The slides, ninety-five in all, belong to the club members, and every one was a work of art. Those who are responsible for them include the late G. H. Babcock, J. Hersey Doane, Walter Freeman, F. B. Stevens, Harry Coward, Otto Ahrens, H. Y. Stillman, and John Naegle.

The views were principally about Plainfield and vicinity and when shown received hearty applause. After the exhibition those present inspected the rooms of the club and were highly pleased with them. O. S. Teale announced that the Rev. T. Logan Murphy would give an illustrated lecture Monday evening, December 25th, on "Ireland," in the club rooms.

A DECADE IN EXISTENCE.

Woman's Relief Corps, No. 10, Ten Years Old.

The Woman's Relief Corps, No. 10, Auxiliary to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., was organized ten years ago Monday with a small number, and ever since there has been a gradual growth and increase, until today it is one of the most flourishing and influential organizations in the city.

The members have fulfilled their obligation in relieving the sick and needy, while at the same time they have been of incalculable value to the Grand Army of this city, assisting them in perpetuating the grand principles of Friendship, Charity and Loyalty, upon which the organization is founded. It is probable that the corps will celebrate in an appropriate manner the passing of this tenth-mile stone in their history at an early date, which would be most fitting and proper.

VICTORY FOLLOWS DEFEAT.

Unable to Win the National Trophy They Retain the State Prize.

When the whist team of the Park Club got hold of a good thing they know enough to keep it. Thus far this year they have only once failed to hold the New Jersey State Challenge Trophy any length of time and they are likely to retain it for awhile.

Tuesday the Montclair whist team, Messrs. Mulford, Kloman, Harrison and Reed, were the guests of Messrs. McCutchen, Townsend, Howell and Rogers, of the Park Club, and after an evening of enjoyment, during which there was some fine playing, the Parks won by the score of 13 to 8. The visitors were exceedingly well pleased with their reception and visit.

DINED BY SHERIFF WYCKOFF.

Sheriff-elect W. W. Wyckoff, of Somerville, entertained a few of his Somerset county friends with an elaborate course dinner at the Hotel Somerset, Somerville, Tuesday afternoon. Wit and humor reigned supreme and everybody had a good time enjoying the excellent speeches.

Those present included: Assemblyman-elect Charles A. Reed, Lawyer G. W. DeMeza, J. M. Smalley, Charles McNabb, of Plainfield and North Plainfield, County Clerk-elect F. W. Somers, of Bound Brook, ex-Sheriff Dilts, Senator Thompson, Postmaster Thompson, C. Elmi, H. D. Dilts, Judges Wagoner and Jamison, W. Hardgrove, ex-Surrogate W. H. Long and C. VanArsdale, of Somerville.

The congregation of the Park Avenue Baptist church will tender a reception to Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Richardson on Tuesday in the church parlors.

Henry Wilson, the postmaster at Welshton, Florida, says he cured a case of diarrhœa of long standing in six hours, with one small bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. What a pleasant surprise that must have been to the sufferer. Such cures are not unusual with this remedy. In many instances only one or two doses are required to give permanent relief. It can always be depended upon. When reduced with water it is pleasant to take. For sale at Reynolds' pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. R. Armstrong, Manager.

The first matinee of the Kirmess was held at the Columbia Cycle Academy Tuesday afternoon before an audience of about 800 enthusiastic people, among whom the young folks were in the majority. The curtain was slightly late in rising, but when it did, after the selection "Light Cavalry" by the orchestra, it disclosed a pretty picture. There grouped about the stage were all the little dancers in their many-colored costumes. The colored lights were flashed upon the scene and then the little court jester, like his older impersonator, signalled to his companions to rise, and the grand procession began, headed by the jester. On they marched, toddling little Japs with flat-crowned hats and queues, dainty Flowers with their attendant Bees, led by the Queen of the Bees, the brilliantly dressed Carnival dancers, the sailor lads and lassies and the sweet English maidens dressed in white, with their baskets and wreaths of flowers. The grand march came to an end at last, and the dancers disappeared behind the scenes. The court jester was impersonated by Pendleton Rodgers.

When the last of the marchers had left the stage, the orchestra played a few lively measures and then, from behind the wings, there came a funny little band moving their hands in the true Mikado style and, from their queer costumes the spectators had no trouble in recognizing the Japs. And how funny they were. They kept the audience in roars of laughter as they toddled about carrying their little Japanese umbrellas. Perhaps the funniest of all was when a mattress was dragged out and the little Japs turned somersaults on it one after another. Even Barnum's circus could not hold a candle to it. A very pleasing feature was a vocal trio, "Three Little Maids from School" by the Misses Gladys Peck, Marjorie Ross and Grace Richardson. There was also a very pretty solo dance by Miss Helen Stevens. The continued applause at the close showed to what extent it was appreciated. The chaperones in this dance were Mrs. A. C. Vail and Mrs. Charles Lawson; the dancers were the Misses Florence Stewart, Constance Wilcox, Helen Stevens, Marjorie Howard, Dorothy Howard, Grace Richardson, Hannah Thayer, Caroline Martin, Gladys Peck, Marjorie Ross, Virginia Leland, Kathleen Phillips and Louis Minford, Irving Day, Bertram Leggett, Gordon Stewart, Minty Minford, Lothrop Ritchie, Kenneth Phillips, Jack Martin, Francis Wilcox, Douglass Waring, Billy Lambert.

When the last wee Jap was gone, the dance of the Flowers and Bees took place. First in came the Flowers, sweet little maids dressed in tight waists and fluffy skirts of pink, lavender, yellow and red. Their entire costume was of one color. After they had whirled and danced about, in rushed the swarm of Bees headed by their graceful queen. Their black bodies with yellow stripes made the scene an artistic one as they buzzed about the Flowers, while the colored lights shone on them and the numerous bells, with which their costumes were covered, rang at every move. One of the flowers, Miss Dorothy Fleming, gave a charming solo dance.

The chaperone was Mrs. Edward C. Perkins, and the dancers were Dorothy Fleming, Charlotte Finch, Mary Faber, Eleanor Waring, Rosa Woltman, Alice Titus, Margaret Townsend, Mary Barlow, Helen Cruikshank, Eleanor Woodcock, Margaret Lowe, Katherine Titus, and Wickham Corwin, Dudley Barrows, Ralph Lawson, Van Wyke Brooks, Effingham Pinto, Harold Hegeman, Charles Perkins, William Barlow, Charles D. Waring, Reginald Roome, Elliot Barrows, and Dudley Wilcox. The Queen Bee was Grace Wilcox.

The Carnival dance was the next to claim attention and presented one of the prettiest sights in the whole Kirmess. They were a strange crew, from the King of Hearts to the little red and white Clown, but they danced well, keeping excellent time, and deserved the hearty applause which they received. The solo dance was given by Miss Bessie Phillips, and was called by the title of "Coming Through the Rye." Mrs. Frank C. Martin was the chaperone, and the dancers were May Murray, Ethel Murray, Bessie Phillips, Marguerite Phillips, Marie French, Made Day, Gladys Bigelow, Louise Curtis, Roxy Love, Anna Garrigues, Frances VanDeventer, Lucy Budlong, Francis A. Martin, Walter Cahoone, Pendleton Rogers, Gordon Abbot, Robert Abbot, John Phillips, Percy Phillips, Ralph Vail, Jack VanDeventer, Jimmy Scott, Barry Slauson, Brockholst Miller.

The catchiest dance of all those in the matinee was the Hornpipe. It pleased everyone, as the little sailor lassies danced out, with heads first on one side and and then on the other. The costumes were not gay like those of the Carnival, but were pretty combinations of red and white. The girls all wore sailor blouses with skirts of red and white stripes, while their masculine companions were clad in the regulation sailor costume with mortarboard hats. There was something very pleasing in the lively motions of the sailors as they danced about the stage, first forward and then back. Mrs. Charles E. Brooks was the chaperone, and those taking part in it were Elsie Goddard, Helen Harman, Marjorie Fleming, Dora Waring, Ursula Rowland, Edith Fisk, Ethel Crane, Clara Case, Leila Howard, Florence Curtis, Elsie Harman, Margaret Goddard, Virginia Hegeman, Edward Perkins, Clarence Roome, William Schoonmaker, Maxwell Perkins, George Evans, Howard Roome, Story Rowland, Frank Reinhart, Abbott Brainerd, Langdon Howard, Hollie Titus, Ralph Schoonmaker, Ames Brooks.

The last dance of the afternoon was the May dance, which was described and the dancers named in yesterday's issue of The Daily Press. The dance was much improved and was executed without a noticeable mistake.

All of the afternoon dances were heartily applauded and all that were present declared that the matinee was a great success from first to last, and that Miss Stewart was deserving of much credit for her instruction of the young dancers, the results of which were so enjoyable.

The first night of a performance is always apt to be full of mistakes which are corrected on the second evening. It was not exactly that way at the Kirmess, for there were not many mistakes on the first night, but those that were made were corrected in last evening's dance and but one slight mistake was noticed during the entire programme, which is saying a good deal for only the second evening. The Columbia Cycle Academy was not quite as well filled, but the spectators numbered very close on to the thousand of Monday evening.

There was scarcely any delay at the start and the orchestra began their opening selection, "Rob Roy," at a few minutes after eight. The opening tableau was as pretty as the night before and was again loudly applauded. Then the dances followed each other in rapid succession. The applause was, if possible, more generously given than on the night before. The Gypsy dance was especially applauded.

One of the favorite dances seems to be the Tarantella, whose bright costumes and lively measures suit the artistic eye as well as the popular fancy. The Serpentine dance was not on the programme last evening, but in its place a clog dance was executed by W. J. O'Brien. It was a novelty, as a good clog dancer is not a frequent thing, and that fact was understood as was shown by the loud applause at the conclusion of his dance.

The Indians were there again and danced, hopped and yelled in the most approved manner. The war dance was improved last evening, if that were possible, as the nervousness of the first night had worn off and the braves entered into the full spirit of their parts.

After the last war-whoop had died away and the dance was over, the jester, Wm. N. Runyon, appeared and treated his audience to an original song written for the occasion. There had been applause before during the evening, but it was not in it with the applause which Mr. Runyon received when he finished his song. The building fairly shook with the vigorous hand clapping. And it did not cease until he sang another verse. The words of the song were as follows:

My honored friends, a song I'll sing.
And the burden of my lay
Is just to urge you all to come
And make the Kirmess pay.
We've got the finest show on earth
Right here in Crescent rink.
And all that's needed for success
Is the merry golden "chink."
So come and plank your dollars down
And blow in all your "dust."
I'll Muhlenberg's old treasury
So full that it will bust.
The Building Fund we want to swell
And with sufficient wealth,
We'll have the best place in the State
For building to the health.
Chorus:—So come and bring your neighbors
To help us in our labors,
And then I think, be jabers,
We'll make the old thing go.

That "accidents will happen
In the best run family,"
Is a proverb that has been well known
Since 44, B. C.
So if your friends should break their necks,
A-tumbling down the stairs,
You'd surely want a real nice place
To send them for repairs.
And with an exciting groan.
Such as only gold can buy,
A broken neck would just be fun.
And oh what joy to die!
You cannot tell what moment you
May need the place yourself,
So the safest way is to help us out
With a great big wad of pelf.
Chorus:—So come and bring, etc.

We've wonders here from every clime,
And every foreign land;
From Greenland's icy mountains down
To India's coral strand.
We've got a supper here to sell
That's simply out of sight,
And all that it will cost you, friends,
Is fifty cents per night.
And after eating, if to smoke
The wish your minds besets,
We patronize the Spaniards for Cigars and cigarettes.
And if dyspepsia comes to you,
Whose appetites are large,
We'll send you down to Muhlenberg
And cure you free of charge.
Chorus:—So come and bring, etc.

The dances were all over at twenty minutes of ten o'clock and the rest of the evening was spent in dancing on the stage or viewing and purchasing at the different booths. The refreshment room drew many of the throng within its walls and served them a dinner which, unlike those at many restaurants, tasted as good as it looked on the printed menu. Mrs. O. T. Waring and Mrs. G. W. Van Boskerck were in command with a staff consisting of Mrs. John Bushnell, Mrs. Craig A. Marsh, Mrs. H. P. Reynolds, Mrs. George H. Goddard, Mrs. Moore, Mrs. Gifford Mayer, Miss Mary Tweedy, Miss Anna Opdyke, Mrs. E. Woltman, The Misses Embury, Mrs. Josiah Brown, Mrs. DeRevere, Mrs. Ruth C. Leonard, Mrs. Henry McGee, Mrs. George W. Rockfellow, Mrs. Van Alstyne, Mrs. N. P. T. Finch, Mrs. C. C. Guion, Mrs. Nelson W. Runyon, and Mrs. Utzinger.

Last evening the waitresses were from the Grace P. E. church, and the Holy Cross P. E. church. They were the Misses Hagan, Langdon, Betts, Elsie Smith, Helen Pfhender, Eva Noe, Van Zandt, Gardner, Louise Egan, Rachel Emmons, Ada Bartling, Georgie Fountain, Alice Barker, Ida Fountain, Jean Harrington, Clara Woodruff, Fannie Western, Josephine Hall, and Laura Higgins.

The "Summer Garden," where ice cream and soda water were sold, was also patronized by many during the evening, and the waitresses were kept busy attending to the wants of their many customers. Those in charge of this favorite resort were Mrs. Henry Lapsley, Miss Edith Allen and Miss Martine. The room was prettily decorated with greens and flowers.

Another place which was kept busy during the evening was the Garden in Wales where Welsh rarebit was sold, while in the rear of the garden was a smoking room. A stone fence, made of canvas, surrounded the garden, while greens lined the inside of the walls. This booth was under the supervision of Mrs. J. Parker Mason, assisted by Mrs. J. E. Corlies, Mrs. H. C. Adams, Mrs. J. K. Myers, and Mrs. Walton, of Newark.

Art is represented at the Kirmess by the Florintine booth. It is lined with red, and with different pictures and paintings on the walls the booth presents a most artistic appearance. The commitee that looks after this booth consists of Mrs. I. N. VanSickle, Mrs. D. E. Titsworth, Mrs. W. M. Stillman, Mrs. J. D. Titsworth, Mrs. F. A. Dunham, and the Misses Bessie Titsworth, Lulu Lewis and Louise Clawson.

Last, but by no means least, is the French booth, a turreted castle overgrown with ivy, while inside the electric lights display a varied and choice assortment of fancy articles. This booth is one of the most attractive of all. Mrs. Albert Hoffman Atterbury is in charge of this booth, and is assisted by Mrs. Irving H. Brown, Mrs. Charles B. Corwin, Mrs. George C. Evans, Mrs. Charles J. Fisk, Mrs. Ellis W. Hedges, Miss Ginna, Miss F. E. Kenyon and Miss Whiton.

GATHERING OF AGED PEOPLE.

Birthday Celebration of Abner S. Coriell, of New Market.

Ex-Postmaster Abner S. Coriell, of New Market, celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday anniversary Monday night. There was a large attendance of old friends and neighbors present to extend congratulations. All of his children, ten in number, were present, except one son. Isaac D. Titsworth, who is in his ninety-first year, was also present. The youngest person present was young Abner Coriell, of Dunellen, a Daily Press newsboy, aged fourteen years, a grandson. Revs. Martine, Fletcher and Livermore were also present, and each made a few remarks.

During the evening a count was made of the number of aged people present, and it was found that there were thirty-eight persons present over sixty years of age, whose combined average age was seventy-two years. A bountiful supper was prepared, which all present very much enjoyed. It was after midnight before the happy company dispersed.

NO RECEIVER YET.

Application was made to Chancellor McGill at the State House yesterday for the appointment of a receiver for the Somerset County Bank, at Somerville, to succeed the late William Y. Johnson.

The names of Counselor George H. Large and James Vanderveer were suggested, but objections were raised to these gentlemen because of their relationship to some of the defendants in a suit instituted by the stockholders against the directors for the recovery of certain monies alleged to have been misappropriated by the directors. The matter was finally adjourned until Tuesday next.

Results Are What The Press Brings.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Day, corner of Duer street and Park place, have just reported a remarkable recovery through the valuable advertising medium of The Daily Press. Last June their little daughter lost a gold necklace that was prized very much. Several months later the necklace was found by a borough man. The latter reads The Daily Press and he noticed the loss advertised. The paper was mailed, like that, to its home back. This time the man's wife found it, and she secured the address and returned the necklace to the owner, which was duly appreciated.

Appointed a Guardian.

The Surrogate of the county of Somerset last Monday appointed Amanda Greder guardian of her infant child, Irving Greder, who receives $2,000 under the will of its grandfather, Charles Greder, of North Plainfield. Upon the application of Amanda Greder the Orphans' Court of that county made an order that she should have the sum of $4 a week from the legacy of $2,000 for the support of the child. W. K. McClure made the application in her behalf.

A Question Often Asked.

The question is often asked, when should glasses be worn? To this answer should be, that as soon as discomfort arises for need of them, they should be adopted. If your eyes are causing you anxiety, or if the glasses you are wearing are not suited to your eyes, call on Leech, Stiles & Co.'s eye specialists, who will be at 107 East Front street tomorrow from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. Examination free.

For a pain in the side or chest there is nothing so good as a piece of flannel dampened with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain. It affords prompt and permanent relief and if used in time will often prevent a cold from resulting in pneumonia. This same treatment is a sure cure for lame back. TELEPHONE SMELLED OF GAS.

A majority of the cranky people who visit Washington make the White House their objective point, but occasionally some will wander into the departments to unfold their grievances. Not long ago a good specimen of the genus made his appearance at the postoffice department, and as he wanted to see "one of the judges" a bright messenger steered him into the room and up to the desk of one of the old clerks in the fourth assistant's office, whose gray hairs and dignified appearance helped to carry out the deception. The visitor was evidently an old soldier, as his complaint was in reference to the management of one of the soldiers' homes. After detecting in his deluded utterances for a moment the clerk wheeled around in his chair and said:

"My friend, I am not the proper person to come to with such a complaint. I am"—

"Yes, you are," interrupted the crank. "The idea of you sitting in that hall and you were just the one to fix things for me." And he continued with a long string of grievances until the clerk, who was quite a humorist, broke in with a happy thought.

"I can give you no relief for your trouble. You should go to the war department." And concluding that his troublesome visitor would not be put off, the water he continued: "Come around here and sit down, and I'll connect you by telephone with the secretary of war. That will save you the trouble of walking up to his office and waiting a long time for an audience."

The clerk seated the crank at a little table behind the high backed desk. Then going around beside his own chair he unscrewed from the gas jet the long tube which led to the top of his desk. Putting the tubing over the high back, he placed the end in the hands of the complainant and remarked:

"There you are. That puts you in direct connection with the secretary himself. Talk to him all you want to."

And he left to tell the secretary for a full hour to the great amusement of the clerks in the room. Finally, after he had relieved himself of a big batch of complaints, he laid down the "telephone" with a sigh of satisfaction, and as he took his hat to go said to the clerk:

"Some one ought to notify the war department that there is a leakage of gas somewhere up there."—Washington Star.

ARMY NICKNAMES.

The Odd Titles German Soldiers of the Day Give Each Other.

Everybody is familiar with the name of Tommy Atkins, representing the British soldier, but how many know the origin or endearment by which the German soldiers are called? Some of them are applied to the entire regiment, some to an individual soldier. The grenadiers are called "hasmel," or "sheep." The guards call the soldiers of the line "field rats." The infantry speak of the cavalry as "grooms," and the cavalry return the compliment by referring upon the infantry the names of "sand barrel" "sand carriers" and "clodhoppers." The engineers are known as "flour sacks," the pioneers as "moles," the hussars as "pickthreads" and the artillery as "cow soldiers." The latter are called also "stinkometers" and the engineers "water rats."

In these divisions again the corps have names for themselves and their rivals. In the cavalry the Seventh cuirassiers are the "whitesmiths;" the First hussars are the "death's heads," as their shako bears the emblem, and the Fourth hussars, from their white uniforms, are called the "partridges," the only brown in the German army, preserved in remembrance of Frederick II., who used to visit often during a Capuchin convent for his soldiers. The green uniform, with yellow facings, has given to the Sixth hussars the name of "cucumber rangers," and to a similar reason the Tenth hussars are called "potatoes."

In the guards the first regiment of foot are called "tinheads" in poetic allusion to their helmets; the chasseurs are "green frogs;" the First grenadiers, "potato peelers;" the hussars, "glowworms," from their red clothes; the Third uhlans, "dusties," from their dull yellow trimmings, and the pioneers, "earthworms."—New York Mail and Express.

Boston's Standard of Means of Support.

Among the cases before him one morning was one in which a rather seedy looking fellow was billed for vagrancy. The officer who made the arrest and who was the principal witness was one of those officials who never speak a good word of a prisoner if he testifies to substance that he had seen the man loafing around for several days, and as far as he knew had no visible means of support.

"Was this man searched when arrested?" asked the court, nodding his head in the direction of the man in the dock.

"I searched him, your honor," replied the officer promptly.

"Did you find any money about his person?"

The officer looked at the judge somewhat confusedly and then, after a few moments of thought, replied rather lightly:

"Yes, your honor, 10 cents."

"Can you buy a plate of beans for 10 cents?"

The officer, thinking his honor was about to crack a joke, laughingly responded:

"Why, yes, of course."

"Then, sir," and the judge spoke severely, "I understand from you that a man who has money enough to buy a plate of beans is not a vagrant. Understand further, sir, that as long as I am a justice in this court I don't want to see a man before me on a charge of vagrancy who has 10 cents in his pocket. Mr. Clerk, discharge the prisoner."—Boston Globe.

A Radical Cure.

John F. Martin, clerk in the second division, newspaper department, general postoffice, writes:

"The other day you prescribed a remedy for sleep walking. Now, will you be good enough to prescribe one for that annoying avocation who disturbs one's repose—he with the fellow that talks in his sleep?"

Certainly. Keep him awake.—New York Press.

Hat Reverence.

In medieval times the hat of a ruler was regarded with peculiar reverence, something of the respect shown for the crown as an emblem being also entertained for the hat. The story of William Tell, with Gesler's cap or hat on a pole to be reverenced by the people, furnishes an illustration of an incident often seen in the middle ages.

A STORY WITH A MORAL.

She Patched Her Chum's Quarrel at the Expense of Her Friendship.

"I hear that you and Charley have been quarreling of late," said the girl with the hair looped over her ears.

"We have," said the girl with the dimple in her chin, "but it's all his fault. He—I have just finished a letter telling him that it is all over."

"You surely wouldn't throw him over with all the money he has," said the girl with her hair looped over her ears. "It wouldn't be half as easy to get him back as it be had none. And, then, he spends it just as freely as he would if he were quite poor."

"I don't care," flashed the girl with the dimple in her chin, "I hate him. He is awfully quarrelsome, and he would die before he would ever confess that he was in the wrong."

"Well, so would you, wouldn't you?"

"I? Of course I would, but that is a very different matter. Why, he would probably remind me of it next time—men have no tact. Besides I've already given Lulu a bunch of flowers yesterday."

"Well, he was something of a flirt before"—

"I don't see how you come to know anything about it. But I'm sure I don't care how much he flirts after this—provided he can find anybody to flirt with."

"Oh, some one will flirt with him just anybody to keep in practice. There is Lulu—but you say you don't care any more?"

"Oh, she won't believe that. He will tell her"—

"I'm sure I don't care what he tells her!"

"Of course not. If you did, I would not tell you that I saw them out driving together this afternoon."

"Care indeed—not I! Did they—were they having a very nice time?"

"They seemed to be. By the way, I never noticed before that his nose was quite crooked, did you?"

"Crooked, indeed! It is perfectly straight. You must wear glasses, even if they are not becoming."

"Yes, he is an awful flirt. I believe he would make eyes at any girl who would let him. Why, Nellie, what's the matter?"

"He is not a flirt. It is not his fault if the girls will run after him!"

"Humph! I don't know about that. Besides, I think he has an awful temper, and it is just as well"—

"I don't see what you know about his temper. I consider it very good, and I object to your"—

"And then his stubbornness is a great fault. You are quite right, after all, to throw him over, and I don't doubt that Lulu—Why, what are you doing?"

"I am tearing up the horrid letter I wrote him. I—I have been treating him badly all the time. I will tell him that our quarrels are all my own fault, so there! And I hope you are satisfied, now that you have tried to make mischief between us and failed!"

"Well, I've done my duty," sighed the girl with her hair looped over her ears as she went out, "but I have certainly lost my chance of being bridesmaid."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Tagliori.

There was a dancer of whom it is impossible not to speak, not, indeed, to tell stories of her, for I know none, but to give her the first place which belongs to her in dance history—Taglioni. Nature did not most certainly intend that she should dance, although she belonged to a family of dancers. As a child she was a most wretched object—pale, crooked, wasted—but will and work made of her a wonder.

Her debut was at Vienna. Her success, however, was not great. Paris would not claims her as its own. She appeared there in 1827, but it was not till 1830 that, in "Le Dieu et la Bayadere," she took her proper place. Her ballet, "La Sylphide," a still greater triumph, in which even the physical defects of Taglioni, especially her phenomenal thinness, seemed almost to add to the effect she produced.

She made disphanousness the fashion; "toutes les femmes essayerent de se vaporiser, a l'aide de jupes de tulle, de mousseline, et de tarlatane; le blanc fut presque la seule couleur adoptee." The dance of Taglioni was a revelation of new possibilities. She was more than human. She floated. When she soared into the air, there seemed to be no reason why she should come down again. Her bounds were the flights of a bird.

She has had no successor. Stage dancing has become acrobatic. It is no longer the dream of grace which she made of it. She ceased in 1837 to dance in Paris, in consequence, I think, of some dispute with the management, it was in London that I saw her. She was not only extraordinary, but incredible. There was no believing that such aerial movements could be performed by a woman.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Woman's Trust In Man's Honesty.

Surely woman's ingenuity is unequaled. When a man takes up his abode at such a place, he lugs his key around with him or leaves it at the office, and in almost any event he as likely as not loses it. But woman has discovered a new and sure way of disposing of it. She drops the bunch of furniture up her pockets with it, neither does she leave it at the office, and rarely indeed does she lose it. Her almost invariable way is to thrust the smaller little lump before each neighboring bedroom door, so that a glance down the entry reveals a whole double row of such lumps. They speak volumes, not only the ingenuity of woman, but of her sublime faith in human nature.—Chicago Chronicle.

To Polish Furniture.

A Japanese furniture polish said to be exceptionally valuable for its purpose is prepared by mixing well together one pint linseed oil, one pint strong cold tea, the whites of two eggs and two ounces spirits of salt. When thoroughly combined, pour into a bottle, which must be shaken each time before the polish is used. Make a pad of soft linen, pour on a few drops of liquid, rub well over the article to be polished and finish the process with an old silk handkerchief or dry chamois skin. The Japanese use their fine paper both as polisher and first applier.

In almost every country in Europe there is a current belief that the presence of crickets in a house is a fortunate ones and that the singing of the crickets as night betokens good luck for the next day.

NOT COMPELLED TO PAY FARE

IMPORTANT DECISION GAINED FOR HARRIS BROTHERS BY C. A. MARSH.

Were Wrongly Informed as to a Train and When Carried Beyond Danellen Refused to Pay—Taken to Supreme Court.

George T. Harris and Fred J. Harris were about a year ago arrested on complaint of the Central Railroad Company on the charge of attempting to ride without prepayment of fare. They are gentlemen of means and high standing, and resented their arrest as a gross indignity, but on the testimony of Conductor Prawl, the Plainfield magistrate who heard the case found them guilty and imposed a sentence of $5 fine in each case. The Harris brothers smarted under what they regarded as a miscarriage of justice. They declared that they had purchased return tickets from Dunellen to Trenton and had been told to take the train in question by the stationmaster at Trenton Junction. So far from attempting to ride with out payment of fare, they repeatedly demanded of the conductor that he should let them off at Danellen, as they had been told that the train stopped there, and they had to carry a heavy piece of machinery, and as it was long after midnight. The conductor, they said, took up their tickets, and after carrying them beyond Dunellen, demanded payment of extra fare, which they indignantly refused to pay.

After their conviction and sentence, Harris brothers consulted Craig A. Marsh. That lawyer advised them that their conviction was illegal, and that he could have it so declared by the Supreme Court. Harris brothers determined to accomplish this if it took their last dollar. They were unwilling that they should stand recorded as attempted fraud-doers, who had been caught and convicted.

The Supreme Court granted a writ of certiorari and other orders so as to bring all the facts and proceedings before them.

After hearing learned counsel for the railroad company and counsel for Harris brothers, the Supreme Court yesterday, in an opinion delivered by Justice VanSyckel, declared that the complaint made by the railroad company was fatally defective, and the conviction of the defendants wholly illegal, and set aside the conviction with costs of suit. Judgment will be entered accordingly against the railroad company in this suit, and Harris brothers propose to follow up that by bringing actions for damages for false imprisonment.

Plainfield Athletes.

The Xavier A. C. and the Twelfth Regiment, of New York, will hold some indoor games on Friday night, November 15th, at the Armory, Sixty-second street and Columbus avenue. Plainfield has three men entered who are Neil Head for the sixty and two hundred and twenty yards run, and Alex. Muir and George Firtsbrook for the one mile run.

Grand Officers and a Banquet.

The grand officers of the Knight Templars visit Trinity Commandery on the evening of Monday, November 18th, when a banquet will be held.

CRESCENT BOWLERS BEATEN

THE WESTFIELDERS WIN BY A MARGIN OF THIRTY-TWO PINS.

The Home Team Started Off in Good Shape But the Visitors Took the Lead and Kept It to the End—The Score.

Plainfield saw an exciting bowling match last evening when the Westfield team outbowled the cracks of the Crescent Wheelmen by thirty-two pins. The game was not as close, however, as the one at Westfield when the Crescents won by three pins. The start proved a good one for the home team and in the first frame led by eight pins, but that was the last time that Plainfield saw the lead, for Voehl and Mangam presisted in making strikes and spares until the faces of the Crescent rooters grew pale. Gradually the lead of the Westfield increased while the hands of Wilbur and Vail seemed to lose their skill. The lucky seventh frame was an unlucky one for the Wheelmen bowlers and Westfield made her lead forty-six pins, but that was too much and Plainfield settled down to bowl in the eighth. There were a few spares but everything was quiet until Maltby shot the ball down the alley with his accustomed speed and "Strike Plainfield," shouted the umpire. Vail followed and cleared the alley also. Meanwhile C. Smith and Pell, of the Westfield's, got excited and each scored a strike. Then the excitement began to rise. Mighty Sam Wilbur followed in the line and downed his ten pins with one ball. Price did the same and Anderson also. Then after a breathing spell, Petrie capped the climax with another strike. But the effort was too much and although the home team cut down the lead materially they could not hold the hot pace they had secured.

The individual scores were as follows:

CRESCENTS.		WESTFIELDS.
Wilbur	202	Pell	179

TALK BY THE MOTHER OF ALL.

King's Daughters Listen to an Address by the National President.

The union meeting of the King's Daughters held in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church, yesterday afternoon, was very largely attended. Mrs. W. L. C. "La Sylphide," a still greater triumph, in which even the physical defects of Taglioni, especially her phenomenal thinness, seemed almost to add to the effect she produced.

BIRTHDAY SOCIAL.

Entertainment and Money Making Affair at First Church of Christ.

The birthday social given under the auspices of the Sunday-school of the first church of Christ last evening was a thoroughly enjoyable affair. There was a large audience present and all joined heartily in the festivities. The Superintendent, J. H. Staats, had charge of the affair and introduced those who entertained the audience.

The exercises were opened with singing by the Misses Mabel Benner, Ella Benner, Lillie Ackerman, Mabel Wilson and Etta Staats, after which Rev. B. W. Hand offered prayer.

The Superintendent then made a few remarks of welcome and congratulated the members on their untiring efforts. Rev. J. B. Cleaver, of Bound Brook, the founder and first pastor of the church was then introduced and delivered an excellent address. Following the address a recitation entitled "Thanksgiving Day" was admirably rendered by Miss Lottie Benner, as was also one by Miss Sadie Hand, entitled "The Fallen Star." A vocal duet by the Misses Mabel and Ella Benner was an enjoyable feature. Then came a dialogue "City Manners or Country Hearts" by the Misses Lillie Ackerman, Mabel Wilson, Ella Benner and Percy Hand. "The World Was Made for Me" was the subject of a recitation given by Miss Mabel Hand, and Miss Ada Van-Horn recited "Grandfather's Spectacles," in an excellent manner. The programme closed with the following recitations: "Two Kinds of People," Henry Staats; "Company is Coming," Miss Etta Staats, and "Transformed Pie," Miss Belle VanNest.

The collection was then taken and every one present gave a sufficient number of pennies to correspond with their age. The receipts will be used in the church and Sunday-school work.

After everyone had been bountifully served with refreshments an evening of pleasure was brought to a close.

$13.84 was realized from the social, and a vote of thanks is extended by the Sunday-school to the following who arranged the affair: Mr. and Mrs. Bush, Mr. and Mrs. Hand, Mrs. Wilson Clayton Ackerman and Mrs. Staats.

RUPTURED A BLOOD VESSEL.

Mrs. H. A. Thorne Dies From the Effect of Sudden Excitement.

Sorrow entered the home of Henry Anthony Thorne, of 411 LaGrande avenue, last night at 10:45, when his wife, Herrisene Caroline Thorne, suddenly passed away. Yesterday, when at lunch at about 1 o'clock, Mrs. Thorne was thrown into a state of great excitement, during which a blood vessel was ruptured in her brain. She never rallied but died at the hour above stated. She leaves behind a sorrowing husband and three daughters, Mrs. Mortimer Day, Miss Katherne Thorne and Miss Caroline Thorne.

Mrs. Thorne was born in New York, fifty-four years ago, and lived there with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Abel Hardenbrook Rogers, for some time. She has resided in this city for a number of years with her husband.

Mrs. Thorne was a true Christian woman, greatly beloved by all who knew her, a loving wife and a kind and gentle mother. She attended the Crescent Avenue church, where she was quite prominent in the work. The funeral services will be held on Sunday. The interment will take place at Montville, N. Y.

Decorations for Spanish Booth.

Mrs. Cruikshank has had donations for the Spanish booth at the Kirmess from Mrs. I. N. Field, Mrs. E. H. Moser, Mrs. A. D. Shepard, Mrs. William Sandford, Mrs. W. L. Chrysanthemums.

The chrysanthemum show at Short Hills is now in full blast and a number from this city have attended. The chrysanthemums are very late this year and have just begun to open so that the exhibition will be much better in a few days.

The Endeavor Rally.

At the Christian Endeavor rally of the local union in the First Baptist church Thursday evening, November 21st, there will be several excellent talks and Dr. French, of Newark, will make the address of the evening.

THE ORCHESTRAL CONCERT.

PROF. CONDE'S THIRD ANNUAL EVENT A GREAT SUCCESS.

The Performance of Each Participant Showed Him to Be an Artist—Prof. Conde Renders an Original Composition.

The orchestral selections in the third of the series of Conde's concerts were admirably rendered last night in the Y. M. C. A. Hall. P. Ludwig Conde, as conductor of the twenty members of the New York Philharmonic Club who composed the orchestra, selected the programme with good taste and regard for the refined and intelligent audiences that assemble at these concerts. The work of the Philharmonic Club last night was up to the standard it set long ago for its concerts in this city. The various selections were familiar to most of those present, and their presentation was in every way satisfying to many critical hearers.

The tenor solo, "Because I Love You," of Raymond Wheeler Smith was sung in a voice of much clearness, and, although Mr. Smith's voice may not be designated as powerful, his method is graceful and pleasing.

Mr. Conde distinguished himself as a genius of his instrument in his Mendelssohn Concerto, which is one of the most difficult pieces for the violin. In his beautiful rendition of Faust Mr. Conde showed himself a leader in bringing out all the richness and beauties of this greatest composition of Gounod.

David A. Gober, Walter Damrosch's 'cello soloist, played with wonderful power and expression an Andante and Capriccio by Schubert, and received the heartiest applause accorded anyone during the evening; and the expression of favor was not undeserved.

C. G. Davis, a pupil of Mr. Conde, showed evidences of his training in a violin solo by DeBeriot. The appreciation of the audience was manifested in the hearty applause, and he then played Gauser's Cradle Song very effectively.

In the Mazurka Mr. Conde appeared as a composer. This selection was with sextette accompaniment. It was a most enjoyable number and the audience were most hearty in their applause. Mr. Conde was forced to give the Carnival of Venice, with the original Paganini variations, as an encore.

Wm. E. MacClymont was a praiseworthy accompanist, and those whom he led did many give him a portion of the credit of a finished performance.

A Protest From Bound Brook.

Whoa, Emma! Plainfield people recently made fools of themselves by changing the name of their time-honored Peace street (upon which stands the Friend's meetinghouse) to Watch Hung avenue, and now some bothering boroughites in North Plainfield want to change Emily street and call it Lincoln or Garfield avenue. A plague on such simpletons!—Bound Brook Chronicle.

Scott Presses Sent to Russia.

C. W. Hall, of the Walter Scott Printing Machine Company, sails next Tuesday for St. Petersburg, Russia, where he will erect a Scott press in the printing office of D. Marx. The press was shipped about a month ago and is now in St. Petersburg awaiting Mr. Hall's arrival.

THE PICTURESQUE KIRMESS

THE NATIONAL BOOTHS WILL BE SOON READY FOR DECORATORS.

Various Countries Will be Represented by Pretty Girls Dressed in National Costumes, Whose Ways Will Bring Cash.

If next week is not by far the liveliest week Plainfield has seen for a long time, then it will not be because the entire city has not tried to make it so. The Kirmess at the Y. M. C. A. fair was a great success, but the one which begins next week will completely eclipse it.

There is always some guiding hand in every great enterprise and, in the dances, that position is filled by Miss Lila Agnew Stewart. It is no slight task to teach a multitude of children and young people the complex figures of a dance, and it is still harder to manage them all without causing hard feeling and keeping up the interest of the dancers in the work. The manner in which Miss Stewart has trained the dancers for the coming Kirmess certainly exhibits natural ability and a high degree of talent for this particular work.

Miss Stewart was born in Monticello, and is the daughter of Judge and Mrs. James L. Stewart. Her father, who is a lawyer of ability, practiced for several years in Sullivan county, New York, and is now located at Kingston.

But while the dancers and their instructor are hard at work, those who have the arranging of the hall at the Crescent Cycle Academy have not been idle, and the hall is fast changing from a riding school into the most delightful of places. But in the rear of the hall, a large stage has been erected and on it the dances are to be held. On the left of the stage is that queer two story structure, "Desdemonia's Palace," whose less classic name is the Venetian booth. The booth is the only one in the hall with two floors, and in it several Desdemonians are waiting to receive their Othellos and sell them some of the handsome array of dolls which greets the eye of the beholder. And if those on the first floor do not satisfy, a basketful can be lowered down from above.

The thrifty German is the good father of the next booth, the outside of which represents his home. Here, as most appropriate to his nationality, useful articles will be sold to the housekeepers and others interested.

The third booth to the left of the stage is shaped after a Japanese pavilion, and here the little children will congregate, for the Japs have been given charge of the toys and the assortment will be a varied one.

The next two booths will offer great attractions to the warm and thirsty and to them will come the great rush after the dances are over, as ice cream and soda water are always popular.

Candy, chocolate and cigars will be the principal articles for sale at the last of the booths on that side, and Spain will be the ruling country. Opposite to the Spanish booth will be the Welsh booth, where the famous Welsh rarebit will be placed on sale. Flowers will reign in the next booth on the right, and the third will see stationery of every kind and fashion awaiting the purchaser.

The Art booth well deserves its name, for here the eyes of the passerby will be almost dazzled with the artistic arrangement of paintings, engravings, glass, and painted china.

There will be no gallant knight to defend the entrance of the French castle which comes next, but instead fair faces will beguile the unwary stranger into a bower where fancy articles of every kind will be ready to be sold. The last booth, next to the stage, will be devoted to the mysteries of the Gypsies, and here the best fortune tellers of the city will be found, while other natives of Hungary will sell baskets.

The dances have all been described, but after they are over the stage will be devoted for the rest of the evening to all who care to dance, as Rogers, with an orchestra of twelve pieces, will furnish music during all the evening.

A misunderstanding seems to have arisen regarding the admission fee. The fifty cents that is charged in the evening and the twenty-five cents in the afternoon admit to the hall, the dances and everything. The gallery will be devoted to boxes, which are selling quite fast, and are rented out for one day, including matinee and evening dances, and entitle to six admissions each time.

Missionary Life in Japan.

Mrs. G. P. Pierson, a returned missionary from Japan, will address the Sunshine Mission Band of the Crescent Avenue church on Monday afternoon at four o'clock, in the church parlors. All the women of the congregation are invited. Tea will be served at five.

A Zither for Ducts.

J. VanEps, of Park avenue, is drawing the plans for a new departure in zither making. When the zither is completed it will be the largest ever constructed. It is so designed that two can play at once.

A GOOD WOMAN GONE.

In the death of Mrs. Rachel Bogert, widow of the late Henry A. Bogert, which occurred yesterday in her sixty-eighth year, at her home, 522 East Second street, Plainfield loses a most valued and estimable woman. She had been seriously ill for several months past and her death was not unexpected.

As a Christian woman she did all that she could, and her well directed efforts in the cause of religion will reap a rich harvest. She was a staunch member of the Friends Society, and the W. C. T. U. A large circle of relatives and friends will feel her absence, and the family have the sincere sympathy of them all. Three daughters and two sons survive her.

The funeral services will be held Saturday afternoon at 1:30 from the decedents late home, 522 East Second street.

FORTNIGHTLY WHIST CLUB.

Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Woodruff Entertain the Players Last Night.

The Fortnightly Whist Club held their first meeting of the season at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Woodruff on Westervelt avenue last evening.

The playing throughout was very interesting. Mrs. L. B. Woolston won first lady's prize, a decorated China cracker jar, while Mrs. Peter Emmons secured second prize in the form of a very pretty vase. For the gentlemen, L. B. Woolston and J. F. Buckle captured first and second prizes. The first was an alligator card case and the second a silver-mounted blotter.

After the playing refreshments were served.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Woolston, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Buckle, Mr. and Mrs. R. I. Tolles, Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Woodruff, Mr. and Peter Emmons, Mr. and Mrs. John Emmons.

UNEXPECTED VISITORS.

Merry Friends Give Mrs. Wilson a Happy Surprise.

A very pleasant surprise party was tendered Mrs. Wilson, of Harmony street, last evening, when a number of friends gathered at the house for a good time. Games were indulged in until a late hour. Refreshments were served in abundance and all were sorry when the evening's pleasure came to an end.

Among those present were: Misses Wilson, Dunlap, Hattie Wilson, Maud Coles, Sarah Hummer, Mamie Wilson, C. Dunlap, and Mr. and Mrs. Z. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bach, Mr. and Mrs. George Watts, Mr. and Mrs. John Sharkey, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, Henry Seader, Theo. Martin, John Stocker, Jas. Pangborn, A. Gallaway and Geo. Wilson.

PILGRIMS PROGRESS.

An Illustrated Lecture at the Park Avenue Baptist Church.

Rev. Dr. Adam Chambers, of Roselle, will give his illustrated lecture on "Pilgrims Progress" at the Park Avenue Baptist church on Sunday evening. The illustrations consist of a panorama of one hundred artistic oil paintings. The same lecture was given under the auspices of Rev. Charles Spurgeon, of London, for a hundred consecutive nights.

At the close of the lecture, a collection will be taken for the benefit of the Roselle Baptist church which is largely in debt.

Father's Writing Found By the Son.

J. T. Vail is having the front piazza to one of his houses on LaGrande avenue thoroughly repaired. Mills is the builder in charge of the work. When one of his carpenters, named Sheppard, was tearing down the old piazza he found a block of wood on which was written "C. Sheppard, October 2, 1871. Warm and smoky." C. Sheppard was the father of the man who found the block and had built the house.

State Sunday-School Convention.

The fifth triennial convention of the New Jersey Sunday-school Association will be held in the First Methodist Episcopal church, Millville, November 12th to 14th. Twelve delegates have been elected by each County Association, and a general invitation is extended to Sunday-school workers throughout the State to attend. Special attention will be given to State, county and township organization.

Raised the Century.

Three rare old paintings are on exhibition in Garret Q. Packer's window. One is by Inman and all are over a century old.

Republicans Rejoicing.

The Union Colored Republican Club will hold a meeting on Tuesday evening when the members will hold a general rejoicing over the result of the election.

RECEIVED BY THE LADIES AID.

Young People of Warren Chapel Entertained in a Pleasant Way.

The young people of Warren chapel were given a pleasant reception last evening by the Ladies Aid Society of the chapel. The receptions and socials have become a feature at the chapel and they are extremely pleasant on account of the sociability shown on the part of all.

The main part of the building was well filled with young people and older ones. During the evening a very interesting programme was rendered. The first number was singing by the scholars of the Sunday school which was followed with a recitation, "Somebody's Mother," by Miss Lilly Mirox. Other recitations included "Who's Boy Am I," Franklin Whitely; "What Grandma Said," Miss Jessie Stants; "The Inventor's Wife.' Miss Try Mattox. An inermission was then given, during which all were served abundantly with refreshments.

Part second opened with singing by the scholars, a recitation by Miss Try Mattox, and a recitation by W. R. Mattox, entitled "The Volunteer Organist." Every number was well given and received hearty applause.

L. N. Lovell made an admirable master of ceremonies. The women who had charge of the refreshments included, Mrs. McKelvey, Mrs. Taylor, Mrs. Francis Whitely, Miss Rachael Mair, Miss Taynor, and several others.

Flowing Wells at South Plainfield.

Many people have formed the improvement that the Plainfield Water Supply Company has purchased the South Plainfield pond for the purpose of furnishing water to their customers from the pond itself. Such is not the case, however. The property about the pond is full of springs and it is the intention of the water company to drill a number of wells and get their supply from this source. Already a test well has been sunk to the depth of sixty feet and a stream flowing five and a half gallons a minute is the result. The flow was struck at the depth of thirty-seven feet.

Was It Stolen or Borrowed?

A wheel belonging to Martin Korff, of Grandview avenue, was stolen from his yard Tuesday night about seven o'clock. Chief VanHorn was notified to look after it. Wednesday night the wheel was returned to the house next to where Mr. Korff lives, and it was found there by the owner. The thief is not known.

Trinity Reformed Church Officers.

At the annual meeting of the consistory of the Trinity Reformed church held on Tuesday evening, Daniel VanWinkle was re-elected clerk and George Gale, treasurer. The pastor also announced the standing committees. The Board of Deacons then elected E. E. Anthony, chairman and W. F. Oliver, treasurer.

If the Republican newspapers had said as many complimentary things about Chancellor McGill before election as they have since the day of landslides the result might have been different. That is the one consoling feature of the defeat for the Democrats.

The State census compilation has just been finished, showing that New Jersey's population now is 1,672,942, an increase in five years of 228,003, or nearly sixteen per cent. Among the cities Newark has the largest population, viz: 215,816. Jersey City comes next with 182,713.

A DOG'S UNLUCKY RUSH.

KNOCKED DOWN AND DISCHARGED A GUN WITH BAD RESULTS.

John Shepherd's Leg Shattered by the Weapon, While Alfred Denise's Head Narrowly Escaped—Taken to the Hospital

A poor little innocent dog was the cause of considerable pain and worry yesterday afternoon when the little animal upset and discharged a shot gun, most of whose contents struck John Shepherd in the calf of the leg, inflicting a very serious wound.

John Shepherd, of 96 Westervelt avenue, and Alfred Denise, of 29 Emily street, started hunting yesterday. Each of the young men, who are about twenty years old, carried a doubled barrelled shot gun and they were accompanied by George Deal's little dog "Jip." They tramped over to the Passaic river but game was scarce and when dinner time came around they had not had the best of luck. They ate the lunch which they had carried and started home by way of Dugway Hill.

They had reached the second valley when they saw a red squirrel run for shelter in a hole in a bank nearby. Denise rested his loaded gun against the tree. The catch was loose and so he left one hammer up to prevent the gun from opening. Shepherd stood on top of the bank ready to shoot should the squirrel appear, while Denise tried to dig it out. In the meantime Jip had been wandering about and seeing that something was to be found, made a rush for the hole. But as he went he knocked over the gun. The hammer struck something and the next instant there was a crash and a cry of pain. The charge missed Denise's head by about six inches and struck the calf of Shepherd's leg diagonally, tearing off the skin and flesh and exposing the muscles. The accident occured at about half past two. Shepherd limped back and called to his comrade who came up to see what damage had been done. He bound up the injured member with handerchiefs and assisted the injured boy to some place where assistance could be obtained. At the home of H. J. Smith they found that the horses were all at work in the fields and there was no way to transport Shepherd to Plainfield.

At that very moment on to the home of Henry Rogers who quickly harnessed up and started the two hunters homeward. They stopped first at Dr. Adams, but he was not at home. Dr. Zeglio and Dr. Carman were both visited, but both were out and, as Shepherd was feeling faint, Rogers drove to Randolph's pharmacy. Here he was directed to Dr. Probasco who was at home and ordered the injured lad to the hospital at once, where under the skillful treatment of the doctors, it is expected that his limb will be saved and put in as good condition as ever. The escape was a very narrow one, however, as had the shot struck one inch nearer the centre the leg would probably have had to been amputated.

SHOT IN THE HEAD.

The Irrepressible Flobert Rifle Causes a Painful Wound.

The irrepressible Flobert rifle in the hands of a youngster came near causing a serious accident last Thursday, and, as it was, caused a painful wound in the head of Wallace B., the young son of John Morton, the ice man, of 734 West Front street. The Morton boy, his older brother and Agnew Nicholl's, who lives with his parents at the corner of Second and Liberty streets, were playing about the ice houses on West Front street with the toy and supposedly harmless rifle, when young Nicholls accidentally discharged it, the bullet striking the Morton lad in the back of the head and making a bad abrasion of the skin. The injured boy went home and endeavored to make his mother believe that the accident was caused by some other thing than the rifle, intending to thus relieve his comrade of any blame, but when Mr. Morton came home in at night the older brotehr confessed to him the true cause of the hole in his brother's head. The wound is healing so that no bad results are anticipated.

Victory for Mr. Swackhamer.

Justice T. R. Crosley, before whose court the case of Morris'C. Ballentine against Samuel K. Bowers, was tried last Friday, rendered his decision yesterday morning, awarding judgment to the plaintiff for the full amount of his claim, $94.75. The issue had been stubbornly contested. S. S. Swackhamer represented the plaintiff and James J. Meehan, ex-Prosecutor of Somerset, appeared for the defendant. No notice of appeal has been given.

LINCOLN'S HESITANCY TO MARRY

Apprehensive That the Pathway Was Not One of Flowers and Sunlight.

Letters from Lincoln to his closest friend, Joshua Fry Speed, subsequent to the latter's marriage, betray an anxious and impatient desire to learn if marriage is a pathway of flowers and sunlight and not of darkness and pain the two had mercifully denied it to be. Miss Gilmer Speed presents these hitherto unpublished letters bearing upon "Lincoln's Hesitancy to Marry," in The Ladies' Home Journal. In one Lincoln says:

"It cannot be told how it now thrills me with joy to hear you say you are 'the happiest man in Kentucky' entitled to be." That much I know is enough. I know you too well to suppose your expectations were not, at least sometimes, extravagant, and the reality exceeds them all I say, enough, dear Lord. I am not going beyond the truth when I tell you that the short space it took me to read your last letter gave me more pleasure than the sum total of all I have enjoyed since the fatal 1st of January, 1841. Since then it seems to me I should have been entirely happy but for the never absent idea that there is one (referring to Miss Mary Todd) who is still unhappy, whom I have contributed to make so. That still kills my soul. I cannot but reproach myself for even wishing to be happy while she is otherwise. She accompanied a large party on the railroad cars to Jacksonville last Monday, and on her return spoke so that I heard of it of having enjoyed the trip exceedingly. God be praised for that. Now, dear Speed, I can tell you which I know you will be glad to hear, and that is that I have seen Mary and ascertained her feelings as well as could and am fully convinced she is far happier now than she has been for the last 15 months past."

Eight months after Speed had married, Mr. Lincoln wrote him:

"But I want to ask a close question: 'Are you now in feeling as well as judgment glad that you are married as you are?' From anybody but me this would be an impudent question not to be tolerated, but I know you will pardon it in me. Please answer it quickly, as I am impatient to know."

Mr. Lincoln's object in asking this "close question" was evident. Mr. Speed gave the answer quickly and satisfactorily, and on the 4th of November, 1842, one month exactly after the question had been submitted, Mr. Lincoln was married.

KEATS AND SHELLEY.

Leigh Hunt Tells What He Thought of the Two Poets.

Before I end these rambling notes of the life imparted me it may be of interest to mention that once I had the pleasure of meeting a gentleman who had known Leigh Hunt in his later years and had often heard him speak of Keats and that "heart of hearts," Shelley. "I loved them both," Hunt would say in his tender, sympathetic way, "Keats not so well as Shelley, but he was more to me. I can never forget the manner in which his genius first impressed me. Of all men I have met, he had most of the true poetic spirit. Shelley was largely a politician and a reformer, Wordsworth a philosopher and teacher, but Keats was pure poet. In the midst of London and all he was in the thick of the wild woods; in the woods he never looked at an oak tree without seeing the dryad. He lived with all those beautiful muscles and dreams which made the earth once so divine a place to the old Greeks. In character he was strong and manly, had a keen and fine and earnest spirit. I respected him as well as loved him. At the last, when he was so sensitive, so suspicious, so miserably restless, we all knew it was not a revulsion of evil, but a real character, but a manifestation of his disease."

My informant told me that once he was with Hunt when Mary Shelley, accompanied by her son, visited him. In the midst of their tender reminiscences he remembered that Hunt spoke of Keats and regretted that he had not more commonly taken his part against his infamous reviewers. "He did not need my help," Hunt would say, "for he bore the shafts from those cowardly hunters with smiling courage, and indeed my defense would have hurt his cause far more than it would have helped. A few years more, and all men good people all over England will be speaking of Keats and doing homage to his rare intellectual qualities. They will acknowledge that I was right in my proper way, published some time ago, that he was as true a man of genius as these latter times have seen, one of those who are too genuine and delicate to be properly appreciated at first, but whose time for applause will infallibly arrive with the many." And then Hunt would relapse into silence, his eyes would close, and Mistress, as though he saw unutterable visions,—"Keats In Hampstead," by Kenyon West, in Century.

Straightened It Out.

In a city within half a thousand miles the street car conductor has a beam about 8 or 9 inches square suspended at one side of the front platform with one large letter upon it. A means the car goes to Allentown, B to Bowersville, C to Brown street, and so on. Four members of a family that recently moved here from the country have learned to tell a current joke, due to the signs.

"They have a colored E on the front platform," said one.

"No," corrected No. 2, "they have an African sign."

"You mean," added No. 3, "that the car's a negro and they're aboard."

"That isn't it," inserted No. 4. "It's something about the motorman being colored."

"Oh!" exclaimed the almost bewildered listener, "I suppose you mean they always have a darky on the front platform."

All in chorus: "Yes, that's it. There's a darky on the front of each car."—Philadelphia Call.

That Exasperated Him.

"What are you so cross about?" said one card sharp to another.

"That duffer did me out of $10," he growled.

"That's nothing. You'll get it back off the next man that you meet."

"Oh, it isn't the money that makes me mad. It's the disgrace of the thing. The cove said he was from Philadelphia.—Detroit Free Press.

SPRING SONG.

In the recurrent pauses of the night
Not all unmeet is pain;
But how shall I endure it when the light
Of morning comes again?

When the black clouds of winter hedge me round,
Grief is no alien thing;
But how shall I support the sight and sound
And ardor of the spring?

USED A TRAINED HORSE.

A Robber Band That Captured Its Victims In a Novel Manner.

"When I was in Nebraska, near the Snake river country, I was located in 1859," said a Lewiston citizen, "we had four camps situated about 18 miles apart, and to go from Thorne's camp to Dunham camp I was compelled to go through a long piece of pine woods. For a number of months every one who had gone through the woods alone never came back. One day it was necessary that I should go through with a lot of money and no escort, and I set out on a horse that I got from a stable keeper near Thorne camp. When I had nearly reached the woods five miles out, my horse was taken ill and foaming at the mouth and refused to go on. Clearly he had been poisoned, as he had been colored slightly by some one. A man not so well up in medicine might not have known it. Soon what looked like a hunter came along on a horse and offered to trade, taking mine back to the stable if I would leave his near Dunham camp with a trapper. I ought to have seen through this, but did not.

"I got on to the powerful horse of the stranger and started through the five miles of woods. As soon as I struck the open apparent reason, the horse broke into a trot, a gallop and finally a run, and dashing off the trail through the woods, picked his way among the trees as nicely as if he had gone that way 100 times. Pull as I would at the bridle, he paid no attention, but ran the faster. When he had leaped a brook and landed on the sand beyond, the marks of footprints alarmed me, and I slipped off at the risk of my life. He ran on up a ravine and I succeeded in getting him to stop, as it afterward proved. In a little while three men armed with rifles came back on the trail, one riding the horse, now as calm as a lamb. I quickly picked my way to the road and got to the camp.

"Two weeks later 19 of us followed a man who had a horse at the same place I did. It was taken ill, and the same trapper came along on the same horse. When the horse dashed into the woods as he had been trained to do, all of us dashed after him, and finally arrived at a mountain camp of the robbers. We took every man—seven of them, and—well, law was not well supported out there, and I had the pleasure of court sat nearer than 200 miles. We didn't carry the rascals away from their own campfire. Two were hanged and the fate of its owners."—Lewiston Journal.

Disinterested.

It is said that the extraordinary influence which Agassiz exerted over men who had only a slight perception of the scope of his wonderful mental powers was due as much to his unfeigned and all disinterestedness as to his magnetic personality. Mr. E. P. Whipple once told an incident which illustrated this fact.

On one occasion when his museum was in need of money for a purely scientific purpose, he invited the members of the legislature to make it a visit. Many consented to visit it, with the design of inducing them to vote the sum he required. After a short, persuasive address delivered in the hall of the museum, in which he urged the building, pointing out the great things that had been achieved and the still greater things that were to follow if his plan was carried out.

In ascending the stairs I happened to overhear two intelligent legislators, evidently those who were opposing the propriety of giving the proposed legislative aid.

"I don't know much," said one, "about the value of this museum as a means of education, but of one thing I am certain —that if we give Agassiz the money he wants, he will not make a dollar by it. That's to his face."

The appropriation was made a day or two after, though it was generally considered that no other man could have wrung the sum from the reluctant hands of that economical legislature.

Death and Rest.

The lines engraved on Professor Huxley's tombstone show a confusion of thought that one would not expect in the burial place of a great scientist.

And if there be no meeting past the grave,
If all is darkness, silence, yet 'tis rest.

It is not rest. There is no rest where there is no consciousness. Rest implies consciousness. When we sit down, we sit down to rest; we enjoy the repose. If death is annihilation, there is nothing; neither light nor darkness, neither joy nor pain. There is nothing. There are no words by which we can express annihilation, because there are no thoughts by which we can attach any meaning to the word. To me this total inability to understand nothingness is one of the thousand indications of the continuity of life.—Walter Besant.

Bad Spellers.

Sarah Bernhardt cannot spell well, and one of our own most cherished actresses does not always spell correctly. In a recent autograph letter she here we find "secured," "Bismarck" Bismarck never could spell. He himself has confessed to "a lack of diligence at school," as a consequence of which his letters abounded with many spelling errors. John Bright was another statesman somewhat weak in the same particular. Even Oliver Wendell Holmes made a similar confession, adding the rather comical word "indispensable," which he wrote "indispensible."

The First Inquest.

The nearest approach to the holding of a judicial inquiry into the cause of death in England occurred as long ago as the year 1900, when, according to an old writer on the subject, "six and twenty venerable persons were summoned together to hear and examine the testimony of any who could speak with authority regarding the death of a digger in the fields named Martin Bolsover."

The Constitutionalist.

UNWISE DISCRIMINATION.

The Ohio Supreme Court has recently rebuked a favored method adopted by Legislatures of evading the Constitutional provision requiring the enactment of general laws relating to cities. The Legislatures of many States, including that of New Jersey frequently enact laws relating to cities having a population of over a certain number and less than a certain other number, and this is taken as a general law, although there may be only one city having a number of inhabitants between these designated in the law. The Ohio Legislature passed an act providing for the redistricting of "every city of the fourth grade of the second class which had at the last Federal census a population not less than 5,550 and not greater than 5,560, or which at any subsequent Federal census may have a population of not less than 5,550 and not greater than 5,560." This was making a finer distinction than in the laws usually adopted. The Supreme Court disposes of this attempt to pass a special law under a false guise in a short opinion containing this sentence: "We discover no reason why cities of the fourth grade of the second class, because at the last Federal census they had a population of not less than 5,550 and not greater than 5,560, should require exclusive legislation; and the classification of such cities in themselves upon such a basis is, in our judgment, too restrictive, uncertain and illusory, to relieve the act from the Constitutional infirmity of not being uniform in its operation throughout the State, but local and special in its character."

GOVERNMENTAL TELEGRAPHS.

They who advocate governmental telegraphs for this country might well pause before the statistics from England, where the last report of the Postmaster-General shows that the annual deficit on the service "will not down," but goes from bad to worse. In seven years the loss now amounts to nearly $13,000,000, and this in spite of, or perhaps because of, a good increase in the business done. To put it bluntly, the English telegraphs are bankrupt, and are only kept up by heavy drains on the national purse. There are now 9,661 telegraph offices in the United Kingdom, and the number of messages has reached 71,589,064 per year, on an average per head of population somewhat larger than our own, though by no means evincing the rapid acceleration seen in the use of the telephone. In this country there are now ten times as many telephone conversations exchanged as there are telegrams sent each year.—Evening Post.

The Tribune says that Foster M. Voorhees can have the presidency of the Senate if he wants it, but that he would rather be the leader on the floor.

There will be but four Democrats in the next State Senate. That is getting pretty close to the Michigan record of three years ago, when there was but one unterrified in the Legislature of that State.

There is a plan on foot in Washington of having the President put fourth class postmasterships under civil service classification. The idea is to authorize the Postmaster-General, whenever he deems it of advantage to the public interests, to consolidate a number of suburban fourth-class postoffices with a central free-delivery office, the suburban offices thereby merging their separate identity and becoming simply branches of the central office, the branch office coming under the civil service rules which govern the central office.

City election will be held on Tuesday, December 3d. The officers to be elected are: Three Members of the Common Council at large, City Treasurer, City Judge, City Collector, three Commissioners of Appeal, one Member of the Board of Education; and from each of the wards a Member of the Common Council, Justice of the Peace and a Constable. The Boards of Registry and Election will meet at the various polling places in the city on Tuesday, November 26th, for the purpose of correcting and revising the registry lists.

It is for a worthy cause and is deserving of all the patronage and profit that the people of this city can bestow.

A dark cloud has overshadowed the life of Miss Essie Jacques, the Westfield woman who was indicted by the Grand Jury for being a common scold, according to her sisters in the W. C. T. U., and they have rallied around her in her hour of trouble by resolving "that she has patiently endured misrepresentation and the odium of unfriendly criticism." Evidently there is wide difference of opinion between the Grand Jury and the W. C. T. U.

The decision rendered by Judge Lippincott declaring unconstitutional the act providing that the Courts of Common Pleas should have equal jurisdiction with all borough and town authorities in the granting of liquor licenses, shows that the legislation was special and applied only to Warren county. This decision upholds the construction put on the act by Borough Counsel Reed at the time when some of the North Plainfield officials claimed that they had the same rights in the license matter. Though Mr. Reed's advice was throught by some to be wrong, the error of their own opinions is now evident.

According to the election returns the Republicans will gain five United States Senators—two from Utah and one each from Kentucky, Ohio and Maryland—and the Democrats lose three—one each from the last three States named. None of these changes, however, take effect until after the 4th of March, 1897, except in the case of the two Senators from Utah, who will take their seats as soon as they are chosen. Thereafter the Republicans will have 44 Senators, the Democrats 38, the Populists 6, and one vacancy—Delaware. If the Delaware vacancy is filled by a Republican, the Republicans will have half the membership, and the Vice President will have the deciding vote.—Trenton True American.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury.

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces, such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. DANCES GAY AND PRETTY.

The Kirmess Opened in a Most Successful Manner.

A GREAT CROWD ATTEND THE EVENT

The Ladies Who Are Working Hard for the Muhlenberg Hospital Are Greeted With a Thousand Patronizing People Who See, Admire and Applaud—It Is a Galaxy of Bright Home Talent and a Panorama of Pretty Young Girls and Stately Young Men—Every Night Will See Them Improve in Their Performance—Light Fantastic Steps and Picturesque Booths to Represent All Nations—Description of the Dances and Names of Participants.

It was cold and dark last Monday evening with only the stars for a light, but inside the Columbia Cycle Academy, where the Kirmess was about to open, all was life and brightness. There was a look of expectancy on every face and even the gaily decorated booths could not attract the attention of the crowd that thronged the hall before the the time came for the curtain to go up. As each newcomer entered the hall and the brilliant picture of people, decorated booths, flags and Chinese lanterns, blended into one harmonious whole, caught their gaze, there was that long-drawn exclamation of satisfaction from the fairer sex, while the men looked around completely dazed by the great change which had been made in the once barren-looking Cycle Academy. The hall was beautiful—there was no denying that fact—while the booths which encircled it made the scene almost like fairyland. The electric lights shining out from every nook and corner, the gaily-costumed dancers flitting by and the animated throng added to the illusion. It would take a Ruskin to describe the scene and he could scarce do it credit.

There was the usual first night's delay, but the spectators, who had by this time filled every available seat, forgave the brief delay when the curtain rose. There grouped on the stage were all the dancers, the Indian brave with gaudily painted face and brilliant costume, the fair maidens of the May Dance, the gay flaxen lads and lassies of sunny Italy—they were all there forming a picture well worth coming to see, and as the different colored lights were flashed on them the building fairly shook with the applause.

At a signal from the court jester, represented by William N. Bunyon, the tableaux was changed into a grand procession which wound back and forth on the stage until finally they disappeared behind the wings, and with a parting bow the jester followed.

After a pleasing selection by a male chorus from the Plainfield Sangerbund, the North Country Harvest Dance of the Germans was the attraction. On they tripped, the country lads in purple coats and knee breeches, with straw hats placed on at any convenient angle, and their lassies in light-blue skirts, white waists and back bodices.

They were a rustic gathering and they danced as if life had no cares for them, for the harvest was over and they were happy. Miss Helen Taylor and Charles Faber led the dancers and then danced together. Miss Taylor was especially good, entering into the full spirit of her part. The chaperones were Miss Emilie Schipper, Mrs. Evarts Tracy and Mrs. J. F. Wiechers, and the dancers were the Misses Helen Taylor, Antonia Mettfessel, Cornelia Faber, Anna Wilmiller, M. Sterling, Edith H. Tracy, Helene Graff, Emma Sterling, Marion Henderson, Elvira Mettfessel, Alice Barlow, Mary E. Tracy, and Clias. Faber, Siegfried Areus, Henry Wells, H. N. Stevens, S. W. McAneny, Carl Brown, Walter Douglass, Allen Taylor, E. N. Spraul, L. Barlow, Albert Woltman and Bryant Harman.

Scarcely had the harvesters left the stage than the music changed. It was now in wierd quick strains and then out flashed the Gypsies in their brilliant barbaric costumes, with flowing hair. They rushed and whirled about in a fascinating dance, in which they were joined by the gorgeous Hungarian peasants. Miss Emma Schoonmaker and Miss Florence Abbott danced the duet with perfect grace, and well deserved the loud applause which was given them. The chaperone was Mrs. F. H. Andrews and the dancers were the Misses Florence A. Abbott, May E. Waring, Maude Middledith, Mabel W. VanDeventer, Jessie J. Bushnell, Clara A. Frost, Emma Schoonmaker, Marion P. Bowen, Gertrude Andrews, Katharine McClure, Lahra Worthington, Bessie Evans, and Carl Walz, Roger Erickson, Robert A. Beebe, Walter Bunyon, Stockton, Morris Dumont, William N. Runyon, Arthur C. West, George F. Schoonmaker, Clarence Peck, Jack B. Dumont and Laurens K. VanBuren.

As the Gypsies glided out, the audience was transported to merry England on a bright May day and saw the fair maidens of the village, clad in white, with flowers in profusion, gather for a dance. Soon the May pole was brought and the ribbons were braided and then unbraided. A pretty trio was danced by the Misses Constance Patton, Hattie Goddard and Eleanor Williams. Mrs. Samuel F. Huntington was the chaperone and those that took part in it were the Misses Elsa Pfeiffer, Ethel Bowen, Mary Anderson Reinhart, Agnes Minford, Hattie Goddard, Constance Patton, Bessie Cahoone, Bessie Bowen, Florence Cahoon, Clyde Burnet, Marguerite Burnet, Elsie Martin, Edith Burt, Ada Woodruff, Lucile Rockwell, Mildred Cone, Eleanor Williams.

There was another pause and then the orchestra struck up a lively measure and in danced the Italian fisher lad and lassies for the Tarantelle. One of the number has been bitten by the deadly tarantula and the rest assist in the cure. The first part of the dance was slow and filled with pretty tableaux, but gradually the dance became more rapid and the music became more wierd. The dancers then came to a sudden halt and one of their number, Miss Meredith, sprang forward and one of the prettiest solo dances of the evening followed. Afterwards the natives of Italy go through the quickening measures and then they left as they came, while hearty applause rang forth from all sides.

The dancers were chaperoned by Mrs. S. A. Cruikshank, while those that took part were the Miss Maud Lord, Miss Fuller, Miss Bogardus, Miss Emma Bogardus, Miss Annie Horton, Miss Meredith, Miss Arline Crane, Miss French, Miss Langdon, Miss Titsworth, and Messrs Arthur B. Horton, Albert Sampson, B. O. Bowers, Jr., Wilbur F. Cornwell, Sydney R. Titsworth, H. O. Nightingale, H. L. Day, Clarence Bogart, William Langdon, and Nathan Titsworth.

Russia was the god father to the military dance and out came the warriors with helmet and brilliant uniform, while the Russian ladies in half military costume also appeared. Half marching, half dancing they circled about the stage in excellent time, executing difficult figures without making a misstep. Then as the soldiers rested, the Russian Mazourka was danced by Miss Henerietta Goff in a catching manner. Miss Verden acted as chaperone to the following dancers: Misses Alicia McIntyre, Katheryn Flynn, Katheryn Darty, Mamie Motly, Lizzie Casey, Julia Keeley, May Day, Helen Kelly, Heneritta Goff, Nellie Keeley, and Messrs Patrick Gleason, Edward Flynn, Dennis Bagley, M. J. Higgins, W. J. O'Brein, Cornelius Guinee, Morris Owens, Arthur Sherman, Daniel Guinee, and Michael Kane.

In striking contrast to the simple peasants and fishermen were the elegantly costumed brave knights and fair ladies of the French court. They entered with slow and and stately step and passed through the difficult figures of the minuet with dignity and ease. The costumes were the most elaborate of any in the Kirmess, the knights in their court costumes with powdered wigs and the ladies in rich gowns and long trains. They also wore powdered wigs. The dance passed off with scarcely a mistake and was heartily applauded at the close. The chaperone was Mrs. Walter K. Stewart, the dancers were Mrs. William L. Saunders, Mrs. L. G. Timpson, Miss Annie Murphy, Miss Elizabeth Stewart; Mrs. James Scott, Miss Nella B. Whiton, Mrs. J. W. Reinhart, Miss Vail, Mrs. J. H. Hallock, Miss Annie Stewart, and Laurens Van Buren, L. G. Timpson, Harry Patten Charles Faber, Howard Beebe, Harry Johnson, Fred Walz, Edward R. Finch, J. H. Hallock, F. W. Frost.

Then the orchestra played the familiar strains of a Scotch reel and out came the Highlanders, with tartan and plaid. The bonnie red-cheeked Highland lassies, with skirts of plaid and white waists, danced with a simple grace that pleased all the spectators and they deserved the long and hearty applause which followed their exit. One of the prettiest parts of the dance was the duet by Miss Lillian A. Force and H. C. Vanemburgh. Mrs. J. F. Mac Donald was the chaperone in this dance and those who took part in it were the Misses Force, Schlicker, Florence Hunmons, Emma Gillem, Minnie Williams, Pansy Herring, Etta Krymer, Louise Holmes, Lillian A. Force, and George Snediker, Judson R. Giles, Herbert Case, John McLaughlin, Frank Flannery, Robert Bruce Douglass, P. O. Dayton, H. C. Van Emburgh.

The other dances were all beautiful, as everyone said, but the novel War and Moon Dance of the American Indians caught the popular fancy and was the favorite dance of the evening. As soon as the Highlanders disappeared the stage grew darker and the weird music began. It gilded a band of squaws, dressed in true Indian fashion, running from one side of the stage listening for a sound that soon was heard. There was a lull in the music, and then to the steady tum tum of the drum, in came the braves. They did not walk nor was it a run, but a genuine Indian war dance. Round their brown squaws they circled, their gaudy costumes and glittering tomahaws changing color as the different colored lights were flashed on them. Then there was a wild, blood curdling yell, a sound of falling bodies and every brave lay upon the ground with his squaw kneeling at his side. And so they danced in true Indian style while the inspiring music made the spectators keep time. At last the Indians grouped themselves about the stage in picturesque attitudes and Miss Genevieve Daniel sprang forward and gave the Shadow dance. The large calceum light was turned out and only a small one behind the scenes was used, the light following her as she glided about the stage. Again the native Americans whirled about the stage, and then they were off. The applause was tremendous and the audience would not cease until the smiling Indians came out and bowed again and again. Mrs. H. M. Bilish was the chaperone for this dance and the unrecognizable participants in it were Mrs. S. Clark, and the Misses Genevieve Daniel, Edith Little, Henrietta Bilish, Nettie Langdon, Grace Barlow, Halla VanDeventer, Alice Thompson, Ethel Green, Euphemia J. Johnson, George O. Stevens, Arthur F. Freeman, Samuel Clark, Edgar L. Serrell, Meredith Dryden, Charles Delette Stillman, Blanchard Randolph, Frank Richards, Fred Bettman, Volney F. Green.

While the stage was yet dark, a vision in white voluminous skirts glided in and the Serpentine Dance by Mrs. Lemuel William Serrell was begun. A small calcium light was turned upon her as she glided to and fro and the different colored lights were thrown in rapid succession. A Plainfield critic, who has seen the best dancers of that kind in the world, has only the greatest praise for Mrs. Serrell's dancing, her performance is equal to any of the present stars on the stage. That her dancing was appreciated was shown by the great applause.

The last dance of the evening was the Toreador Dance of Spain, and a graceful one it was. The senoritas were gorgeously costumed in gold and black and made a pretty picture with the equally gorgeous senors with their long spears. The figures were all pretty, especially in the Spanish Cachucca, which was danced by Miss Mary Anderson Reinhart. Their chaperone was Mrs. J. T. Scott. The dancers were the Misses Annie Murphy, Laura Underwood, Mabel Pierson, Clara Woltman, Ayune McCready, Margaret Holly, Mary A. Reinhart, Shelah McCready, Edith VanBoskerck, Elsie McClure, Mary Holly, Elinor Underwood, and Harry Johnson, Louis G. Timpson, Carl Pfeiffer, William McClure, O. G. Warring, Irving West, Harry West, Howard Huntington, C. C. Hutchins, Ernest Swazye, T. VanBoskerck and F. E. Richards.

After the last dancer had disappeared and the first evening's dances were over, the crowd began to take in the beauties of the hall itself. From the iron frame supporting the roof large American flags were hung at intervals and festooning of Chinese lanterns were suspended the length of the hall. Directly over the stage was an immense flag that almost covered it, lent for the occasion by the Standard Oil Company; a large Japanese umbrella and more lanters were arranged in artistic figures about it. Around the sides of the hall above the booths were smaller American flags and flags of the Red Cross Society, while the gay lanterns of China were in profusion. The front of the gallery was tastefully draped in light blue and white bunting and American flags.

The booths were none of them alike but all were most tastefully arranged. A very pleasant feature of the decorations was the great number of electric lights, which were placed in every available nook and empty corner.

The most novel of the booths was the two-storied Venetian booth painted and draped to represent the front of a house in that famous old city. Here were dolls of all kinds, from the football doll to the little colored baby.

Mrs. Hugh Hastings was in charge and was assisted by Mesdames G. A. Chapman, Conklin, Samuel Huntington, Emil Woltman, W. E. Lowe, F. Herring, Samuel McCutchen, C. B. West, and the Misses Schipper, E. B. Cock, Huntington, Maude Vanbokerck, Macready, Ayune Macready, Clara D. Finley, Ahrens, Graff, Pierson, Xerkes, Waz, Montanari.

In the solid little brick cottage of Germany, useful articles were sold, and many were the purchasers. Mrs. Mason W. Tyler was in charge of this booth and her assistants during the week are Mesdames T. Logan Murphy, Charles J. Taggart, J. E. Turrill, John H. Carman, Benjamin R. Westen, John Haviland, Arthur T. Galloy, Anna Hannegan, Hopdey Barker, George Wright, William L. Saunders, William Wright, and Misses Annie Murphy, Western, Haviland, Bartling, Emma L. Adams, Anna Thorne and Helen Wyckoff.

Japan was selected as the home of the toys and in a pleasant pavilion the Japanese maidens attended to the wants of their customers. This booth was under the charge of Mrs. Charles Seward Foote, whose assistants for the week are Mesdames George Clay, E. L. Finch, C. P. Ralli, William Lewis Brown, S. P. Simpson, L. Dennis, William Pelletier, and the Misses Ellis, Anthony, Morgan, Dryden, Rodman, Lawrence, Bowen.

In a grove of fur trees, the Gypsies camped out with their tent and tripod, and here they sold baskets and told fortunes. Mrs. J. W. Reinhart and Mrs. Howard Fleming were in charge and they were assisted by the Gypsy dancers.

Flowers and plants were on sale at the Parisian flower stall and a beautiful place it looked, daintily trimmed as it was with grass and flowers. Mrs. H. M. Stockton was in charge and her corps of assistants consisted of Mesdames E. H. Ladd, Evarts Tracy, T. S. Wheeler, Daniel Ginna, Frank Raymond, Fred Yates, and the Misses Dumont, Ginna, Huntington, Van-Boskerck, Baker.

HOW AN ADVERTISEMENT SAVED A WOMAN'S LIFE.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

"For four years I suffered with Female Troubles. I was so bad that I was compelled to have assistance from the bed to the chair. I tried all the doctors and the medicines that I thought would help me.

"One day, while looking over the paper, I saw the advertisement of your Vegetable Compound. I thought I would try it. I did so, and found relief. I was in bed when I first began to take the Compound. After taking four bottles, I was able to be up and walk around, and now I am doing my housework. Many thanks to Mrs. Pinkham for her wonderful Compound. It saved my life."—MRS. HATTIE MADAUS, 184 North Clark Street, Chicago, Ill.

A SUNDAY NUPTIAL EVENT.

Pretty Wedding Solemnized in the German Lutheran Church.

The pretty little German Lutheran church on Grove street was well filled last evening with relatives and friends when Miss Sophia Derfler became the wife of John Wedemeyer, both of the borough. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Edward Kionka at 7 o'clock.

The bridemaid, Miss Amelia Miller, wore a becoming gown of blue silk, trimmed with lace. Pauline Schmidt and Amelia Wedemeyer acted as flower girls. They were gowned in white and carried choice bouquets of roses. The best man was Reinhard Eckner. Richard Menzel presided at the organ and rendered the two favorite marches of Lohengrin and Mendelssohn. After the ceremony the bridal party were taken in carriages to the Arlington Hotel, where a reception was held, and the bride and groom were showered with congratulations by their many friends. They received a large number of handsome and useful presents. Mr. and Mrs. Wedemeyer will reside on Stone street, where the groom has furnished a home.

WORK AMONG THE NEGROES.

Miss Bella Hume Speaks of Her Work in New Orleans.

A very interesting address was made before the Christian Endeavor Society of the Congregational church last evening by Miss Bella Hume on the work among the colored people of the south She told of the great evils among them and of the Central church, at New Orleans, the only one of its kind in the country. She spoke very feelingly of the work that had been done and described the different lines of work, telling incidents which happened in each. Her address was listened to with great interest by a large audience.

Rev. C. L. Goodrich led the meeting. Miss Hume's object in speaking was to secure the aid of the society in supporting one of the different lines of work.

UNABLE TO WIN THE TROPHY.

PARK CLUB WHISTERS DEFEATED BY THE HAMILTON CLUB.

The Plainfield Players Put Up a Good Game, But Were Unable to Equal the Score of Their Opponents—Cup Record.

The crack whist players of the Park Club went to Philadelphi on Saturday afternoon and played the team of the Hamilton Club, of that city, for the national trophy of the American Whist League. The Park Club players put up an excellent game, but the present holders of the cup put up a better one and won by the score of 27 to 11. The Plainfield players were Messrs. Rogers, McCutchen, Townsend and Howell. The Hamilton Club was represented by Messrs. Work, Remak, Moridge and Ballard. Dr. Neff, president of the Philadelphia Whist Club, acted as umpire. The score was the average one by which the cup has been won. The previous match, when the Park Club won by one point, being an exceptional game.

The victory of the Hamilton Club was a clean and fair one and was due to their superb playing. The Hamilton team is the strongest team in this country and can hold its own with any in the world.

The visitors were received in the most hospitable manner and, after the afternoon playing, were given a dinner at the University Club. Then followed the evening session of the match. The entire treatment of the guests by the Hamilton members was in every way satisfactory, and it was duly appreciated by the Park Club men.

The trophy for which the two teams fought is a very handsome cup. It was exhibited in Plainfield when won by the Park Club. It was first contested for at the National Whist Congress held a year ago last spring and then it has travelled all over the country. It was first won by the Minneapolis Club and finally came east where the Hamilton Club has held it the longest. The cup is to become the property of the club which wins it at three successive or twenty regularly played matches. The Hamilton Club has now won eight matches. There are already ten challenges for matches with the holder of the trophy and they will be played off during the next two or three months, when the western clubs will have another chance to take it on their side of the continent again.

In June comes the annual whist congress, which will be held at Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Whist Club. Robert H. Weems, of that club, is in charge of the arrangements for it. It is expected that out of the one hundred clubs which belong to the league about fifty will contest for the trophy at that time. The Park Club expect to enter a team.

On Tuesday the same players of the Park Club will meet the Montclair Club in a match for the Stanhope whist Club. Robert H. Weems, of that club, is in charge of the arrangements for it. It is expected that out of the one hundred clubs which belong to the league about fifty will contest for the trophy at that time. The Park Club expect to enter a team.

SUFFERED A PARALYTIC STROKE.

Adam Utzinger Falls Down Stairs and is Seriously Injured.

Adam Utzinger, aged 40, of McDowell street, had a paralytic stroke on Friday evening while at his home, and fell down one flight of stairs. The noise frightened his family who hastened at once to his assistance. He was placed in bed where his condition continued for the worse.

Last evening it was thought best to take him to the hospital, where on examination it was found that there was a concussion of the spinal cord.

Mr. Utzinger lies in a very critical condition and the outcome of the accident cannot be determined.

Rest of Catering.

There is a firm of caterers in Newark which has in recent years made a reputation so high that the leading society people of that city now prefer that Days' shall furnish refreshments for their teas and receptions, rather than any New York caterer. Days' cafe at 899 Broad street, therefore, is a busy place during the winter season, but although there may be a score of society events at which Days cater on one day, none is neglected or slighted. To have Days the catering is quite the proper thing in Newark, and Plainfielders will doubtless be glad to know where the most exquisite table service may be obtained at reasonable cost.

FUNERAL OF A. D. MELLICK.

Last Sad Rites to an Intelligent and Respected Man.

There was a large gathering of relatives and friends at the funeral services of the late A. D. Mellick, Jr., which were held Saturday afternoon at 2:45 from his residence, 312 La Grande avenue. There were also several members of the Sons of the Revolution of which decedent was a member.

The Scripture selections were read by Rev. Mr. Jones, of Bergen Point, and Rev. Dr. Richards, of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, conducted the services.

During the services the choir of the above church consisting of Miss Banta, soprano; Miss Anna Hartenberg, contralto, E. E. Runyon, tenor and C. Lewis, basso, rendered two touching selections and Mr. Lewis sang an affecting solo. The organist, Frank J. Smith, was in charge.

Dr. Richards made a few remarks in which he bore rich testmony to the beautiful character of the decedent. He spoke of the vast amount of good that had been accomplished through suffering and through it all there had been a gradual purifying of his life, preparing it for the life to come. The doctor also spoke of the great influence the decedent had through helpful thoughts and writings that had been read by an innumerable host.

At the close the doctor offered prayer and after a selection by the choir, the benediction was pronounced. An opportunity was then given those present to look on the lifeless form of one whom they had learned to love.

The floral gifts were beautiful, simple and impressive, consisting of white chrysanthemums, palms, bunches of carnations, tied with satin ribbon, and a large wreath of autumn leaves intermingled with red roses. Interment was in Hillside cemetery.

TESTIMONY FROM THE HEART.

Impressive Funeral Services Over the Late Mrs. Bogert.

The funeral services of the late Mrs. Rachel Bogert, which were held Saturday afternoon at 1:30, were as unassuming and modest as the life of the decedent.

The absolute home was filled with a large number of relatives and friends, including members of the W. C. T. U.

The speakers were Charles Robinson, of Chapiequa, N. Y. J. McDowell, of New York, who had known Mrs. Bogert fifty years and Henry Adams, who had known her twenty-three years. They all spoke of her excellent Christian life. Mr. McDowell testified that during the fifty years acquaintance with her she lived the same Christian life every day from morning till night, and was always ready to visit the poor, sick or dying. Much such personal testmony was given about the departed.

There were several beautiful floral tributes, including a large bunch of white chrysanthemums from the W. C. T. U. of which she was a member, and several smaller bunches of choice flowers.

Interment was made in the Friends burying ground, beside her husband.

The pallbearers were George Bogert and Peter Bogert, sons, Henry Palmer and John Poole, sons-in-law of the decedent.

TRAMPS HAULED IN.

One Sent to Jail, and Two Sent on Their Way Rejoicing.

Two individuals, who are usually known as tramps, were brought before Judge Coddington at the city court Saturday afternoon. One, who gave his name as Edward Snyder, was brought in by Special Officer Murphy for trespassing on the Central railroad near Terrill road. Snyder did not like the idea of going of jail, so the charge of being disorderly was added. The Judge did not respect his wishes, and imposed a fine of three dollars or ten days in jail.

John Mullin, the other Knight of the road, was brought in by Officer McCue, but he appeared to be an innocent specimen and the Judge suspended sentence on him.

One lone man came before the bar of justice this morning and he was one of the same kind as the others on Saturday. Officer McCue caught him begging on West Seventh street and brought him in. The Judge allowed him to go on the promise to "get a wiggle on" as soon as possible, which he did.

Working to Preserve Forests.

The autumn meeting of the New Jersey Forestry Association, held at Lakewood on the eighth and ninth of this month, was attended by a number of Plainfielders, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. Davis P. Pond, Mrs. E. D. McCarthy, Howard Turrill, Dudley Kyte, Prof. Dalziel. It was suggested at this meeting that the next annual session be held in this city, where there is an active movement being made to interest people in the preservation and propogation of forests. The interest shown at the convention was very marked and there is hope that it will prove of lasting benefit.

NO RATS WERE ANNIHILATED.

BUT INSTEAD PETER CONDIT SHOT HIMSELF IN THE LEG

Colored Boy in McVey's Starts to Kill Rats But the Flobert Rifle is Prematurely Discharged—The Bullet in His Foot

Rats have been invading the cellar of McVey's restaurant lately, and this morning Peter Condit, one of the colored boys employed in the kitchen, started out on the warpath against them, and ended up by shooting himself in the foot. He took a 22-calibre Flobert rifle and a pocketful of caps and started down cellar. After various adventures he saw a good shot and dropped the muzzle of his rifle while he cocked it.

For some reason the hammer did not catch and as he let go it came down, exploding the cartridge. The ball struck him in the left foot just on the joint. When Condit found that he was hit, he put on his coat and went upstairs again. He told the cook of his mishap and started to walk home. He went as far as the North Avenue station when his foot pained him so that he took a cab the rest of the way. He lives on Sycamore street over Tunison's stable. The accident occurred at about half-past ten o'clock. The bullet remained lodged in his foot and Dr. Hedges was called to attend to the injured lad.

LOST PART OF HIS FOOT.

John O'Brien, of 612 South Second street, met with a painful accident early Saturday afternoon while trying to steal a ride on a coal train between Dunellen and Bound Brook.

He made an attempt to jump on a coaler, but slipped and fell. His right foot went under the car and was badly crushed.

He was first taken to Bound Brook, but as there was no place to care for him there he was assisted to Plainfield and taken to Muhlenberg hospital. Dr. E. W. Hedges was called and found it necessary to amputate about one-half of the foot.

The young man is getting along nicely and experiences but little pain.

The Census Classification.

In Union county the total population is 85,404. The number of white males, 30,387; white females, 32,529; colored males, 1,455; colored females, 1,825. Honesty Rewarded.

Mrs. A. D. Shepard, of Scotch Plains, stepped from her carriage into Reynolds' pharmacy on Saturday, and her pocketbook fell in the street without her knowledge of the fact. About the same time Sergeant Kiely came along, picked it up and stepping in the pharmacy he asked if any one had lost their pocketbook. Mrs. Shepard at once recognized it as her property and rewarded the honest policeman.

If you have not engaged your work I should be pleased to do it for you.

I buy only first-class Marble and Granite and do not sell unless at prices that will enable me to put up the work with credit to myself and justice to the parties purchasing.

I employ no agents and therefore am enabled to make a reduction in the price of my work to the customer, of the commission generally paid to agents.

I am under a very small expense in running my shop, myself and my son doing the larger portion of the work, and we personally attend to the setting of all work, and look upon business in this light, that Good Work and Good Material, at Fair Prices, is a standing advertise for my business, which will tend to build up trade, and I feel safe in warrant that no dealer can sell you the same work and same stock any cheaper than I can.

Hoping to be favored with your patronage, I am yours respectfully, self-help

You are weak, "run-down," health is frail, strength gone. Doctors call your case anæmia—there is a fat-famine in your blood. Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil, with hypophosphites, is the best food-means of getting your strength back—your doctor will tell you that.

He knows also that when the digestion is weak it is better to break up cod-liver oil out of the body than to burden your tired digestion with it. Scott's Emulsion does that.

WHEN GREEK MEETS GREEK.

Could Not Get the Lost Purse, but Neither Could That Other Woman.

Where they all came from was a mystery. And why so many women had selected this day to shop was incomprehensible—at least to the flinte masculine mind. But the big shop was packed and jammed with them. They all looked utterly fagged out, and many showed signs of growing irritation.

Two women of widely contrasting types paused for a moment on the outskirts of this human vortex. They stood at opposite points, equally distant from that portion of the long counter dedicated to "remnants." Neither was young. The one, evidently a country woman, had the placidly stupid gaze of a ruminating cow. The other was distinctly a product of New York. She was dressed in rusty black. Bits of crape were pinned at uncertain intervals upon her costume. Her shabby bonnet, with its drunken plume, was very much over one ear. She wore the suspicious but alert air of a terrier that has been fooled too often by the cry of "rats!" The illusion was heightened by a peculiar habit of carrying her elbows close to her sides and letting her hands flop down from her extended wrists, as if "sitting up, begging."

A common impulse put both women in motion. On the floor by the remnant counter lay a purse. Apparently no one else saw it.

The small woman, by a vigorous application of her sharp elbows, worried her way toward the prize. But here size defeated agility. By sheer force of her own weight the country woman projected herself upon it. Victory was hers.

The little woman gave a yelp of disappointment as she saw her rival's hand open the purse and disclose a goodly sized roll of bills. Instantly her face gleamed with malicious triumph.

Leaning over the counter, she called in a shrill voice: "Miss, here's a lady"—with scathing emphasis—"as has found a purse with money. Won't you take her to the department for lost articles?"

The country woman's eye filled with tears of rage. "I guess it ain't your business. I'll take care of it myself, I reckon."

But it was too late. The ever present floor-walker had heard the request, and he condescended to lead the crestfallen country woman to the cashier's desk. With a last exultant snarl the small woman corkscrewed her way through the crowd and disappeared.—New York Herald.

WON HIS CASE

A Philadelphia Lawyer's Idea of Thrift and How It Worked.

Over in Philadelphia dwelt a young law student who fell in love. Just as he was about to be admitted to practice. The girl's father also belonged to the profession and was reckoned pretty smart, as Philadelphia lawyers go. The old fellow gave a partial consent to the young man's pleadings, but concluded he would try the student and see if he was worthy to be his son-in-law. So he said:

"The case of Blank against Blank has been on the calendar several years. It has been tried, appealed, decision reversed, tried again, appealed up again for argument at the next general term. I am counsel for the plaintiff. I have had the case four years, but now I turn it over to you. Here are the papers. See what you can do."

The young man took the papers and went to work in vim and love—for if he won the case would he not also win a bride? At last life seemed to him worth the living. He studied the case thoroughly. He consulted the authorities and was loaded and primed for a brilliant argument when the court convened. He made his plea and won the case without any trouble.

With a heart overflowing with joy, he returned to his prospective father-in-law, and, slapping down the papers, he exclaimed:

"See here, sir! The case is won! These are the proofs. What you tried for years to do I have accomplished at a single term of court. Now, may I have your daughter?"

"I think you a fool and you can't have my daughter. But I will just give you a little gratuitous advice: It is true I had the case four years without winding it, and it is also true that I made thousands of dollars out of it. But you have gone and settled it, and what have you made? About $30. Now, you can't have my daughter!"—New York Journal.

A Stunning Speech.

A distinguished traveler who had made the ascent of an Alaskian mountain (which may be here called Upapol) was to return thanks for the visitors at a dinner of the Alpine club, but though he was a bold mountaineer, he was a timid orator. "Got to make a speech?" said a friend whom he consulted at the club. "Then there is nothing like taking a glass of champagne bitters first." So said other friends, one after the other, and on each occasion the prescribed dose was conscientiously swallowed. The effect on a nervous organization was nothing less than confusion worse confounded.

When his achievement had been described in glowing terms by the proposer of the toast and the celebrated explorer rose to reply, he contented himself at first with muttering blindly at his audience for a minute or two as he swayed backward and forward. Then he began: "Gentlemen, Upapol is 17,000 levels above the feet of the sea. . . ." There was a roar of Homeric laughter, but the orator smiled still and continued: "No, that is all—nonsense. Of course I mean 20,000 seas above the level of the feet. . . ." Then about made him think that this statement, too, had something wrong about it, and then he gave up in utter despair, and we never heard particulars of an ascent which, we were quite prepared to celebrate as the most remarkable feat of modern climbing.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Mary Mapes Dodge and Emerson.

It is interesting how strong the influence of one soul can be. A friend of Mary Mapes Dodge, who had occasion one day to go with her into a private room in her charming apartment in Fifty-eighth street, stopped for a moment by the door to examine a large framed photograph hanging on the wall. It was a very beautifully finished head of Emerson.

Mrs. Dodge turned back and exclaimed: "You are admiring my Emerson! It is one of the dearest things I possess. It goes with me everywhere, though I do not often carry about his essays. The look is a constant enough help."—New York Herald.

What man in his right senses, that has wherewithal to live free, would make himself a slave for superfluities? What does that man want who has enough? Or what is he the better for abundance that can never be satisfied?—L'Estrange.

NEW FREIGHT HOUSE ASSURED

PRESIDENT MAXWELL SAYS THE IMPROVEMENTS WILL BE MADE.

Soon as the Freight House is Completed the Work of Adapting the Passenger Station to Needs Will Start.

One of Plainfield's citizens forwarded to President Maxwell, of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, the item published exclusively in The Daily Press of the 5th inst., commenting favorably upon the action of his company in restoring the waiting cars for the 7.53 a. m. train. President Maxwell replies as follows:

"Your letter of the 6th confirms our opinion that the people of Plainfield are ever ready to appreciate anything we do for them. We think they will be still further gratified to learn that we are about ready to begin work on a new freight house there, and as soon as that is finished it is our intention to take up the question of improving our passenger station.

"Yours truly,
(Signed) "J. R. Maxwell,
"President."

This news is, indeed, cause for rejoicing, and when a passenger station is improved it will remove the only source of discomfort arising through local railway service. It is understood that the plans are for the construction of a proper approach to the railway station on the side now occupied by the freight depot, with tunnels under the tracks for the convenience of foot passengers. These plans have been long under consideration and the completion of them has been deferred in consequence of the late business depression. The fact that the company now undertakes the work is evidence of its returning prosperity.

THE BANNER TOWNSHIP.

Charles A. Reed Expresses His Appreciation of His Neighbors' Good Will.

After the council meeting in the borough last night the recent election was discussed and Charles A. Reed stated that North Plainfield had placed itself at the head of the column and was now recognized as the banner township of Somerset county. It gave for every candidate on the ticket, except the opponent of Dr. Zeglio, the largest majority given for any candidate in any township. Dr. Zeglio received many Republican votes in North Plainfield and ran far ahead of his ticket. Even Bridgewater township, which includes Somerville, had to take off its hat to North Plainfield and admit that the latter is the most important factor in county politics. Personally, Mr. Reed said, he was proudest of the fact that in Raritan, his former home, and North Plainfield, he received many more votes than were cast even for the Governor-elect, and that he felt most grateful for the support he received and particularly for that accorded to him by those Democrats who allowed friendship for their neighbor and pride in their town to over-ride mere partisan spirit. He said that he would never forget how nobly the citizens of North Plainfield, without regard to party lines, stood by their fellow townsman.

JOHN DALY MANAGER NOW.

He Will Look After Music Hall Affairs After Next Week.

Bristow Aldridge, who has been the resident manager of the Drake Opera House in Elizabeth and Stillman Music Hall in this city for Rich & Maeder, the lessees, will next week become the manager of Rhea for the same firm.

The direct and active management of Music Hall will be placed in the hands of John Daly, who has been the assistant manager since the opening of this season. This will be pleasant news to Mr. Daly's host of friends in this city who will congratulate him on this recognition of his ability and services by such experienced theatrical agents as Rich & Maeder.

A large number of the best attractions on the road have been booked to appear before the end of the season, among whom are Modjeska, Chauncey Olcott, Rhea, Charles B. Ellis, Eight Bells, Trilby, The Capitol, and various other standard performances.

OFFICIAL VOTE OF UNION.

The official vote of Union county, as compiled yesterday afternoon by the County Board of Elections, is: Griggs, Republican, for Governor, 8,421; McGill, Democrat, 6,883; Reim, Socialist, 411; Wilbur, Prohibition, 295; Ellis, Populist, 45; Griggs' plurality, 1,538.

For Assembly, Codington, Republican, 8,459; Roll, Republican, 8,482; Clauss, Republican, 8,335; Green, Democrat, 6,761; Febrey, Democrat, 6,759; Mead, Democrat, 6,758; Wilson, Prohibition, 306; King, Prohibition, 315; Sayre, Prohibition, 298; Faulkner, Socialist, 436; Bill, Socialist, 428; Bobertz, Socialist, 425.

Coroner, Keefe, Republican, 8,389; Dolan, Democrat, 6,638; Myles, 315; Hanson, 430; Keefe's plurality, 1,751.

TOO MANY BED BUGS.

A rather amusing defence was made in the case of Lucy Warmington against Horatio C. N. Johnston, on contract, that came up before Justice Nash and a jury of twelve men yesterday afternoon. The jury was a representative one, and cosisted of A. Love, J., William Greenwood, Jerry Cash, W. W. Stratton, P. M. Decker, John Petrie, R. Walker, W. J. Benton, G. Sanders, F. M. Bacon, M. Keefe and G. Cook.

The suit was brought to recover two months rent which the plaintiff claimed that the defendant owed her. She owns the property at 417 Central avenue, which, sometime ago, was leased to Mr. Johnston for three years. After a month had passed, Johnston moved out and his landlady agreed to settle for $60, the amount of two months rent. This Johnston could not see, and hence the suit. J. P. Powers was the counsel for the plaintiff, and Winfield S. Angleman argued the case for the defendant. According to the terms of the lease, the rent was payable in advance, and Justice Nash ruled that the rent for only one month could be recovered as the term, "in advance," was not specific enough.

The defence had really nothing at all to bring up, but the defendant wanted to fight and so his attorney pleaded that the house was not tenantable on account of the great number of bed bugs which had taken possession. The jury then retired and brought back a verdict of $30 for the plaintiff, the amount of one month's rent.

A CROSS-COUNTRY RUN.

The Y. M. C. A. Members are Planning for One on Thanksgiving Day.

The members of the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium are planning to have a "hare and hound" chase on Thanksgiving Day. The hares will leave the Y. M. C. A. building at 9:30 a. m. and the hounds will be let loose five minutes after. Blue and red paper will be used for scent. The blue will be used on the trail from from start to the turning point and the red used on the return trail.

Messrs. Herbert Martin, Garfield Pike and Clarence Thorn will be the hares.

All who wish to join in this cross-country run can leave their names with Mr. Whiting at the Y. M. C. A. building.

T. A. Cuming will be the leader for the pursuing party.

A HORSE MORE THAN AGREED TO.

John Keiderling Clips Eleven Horses Against Father Time.

One of the local livery stables was the scene of an exciting race Thursday, and the contestants were John Keiderling, an expert horse clipper in the employ of F. A. Pope, and old Father Time. Keiderling had made a wager of $25 with a friend that he could clip ten horses from half-past six in the morning to six o'clock at night, and yesterday he tried. When the six o'clock whistle blew he had just finished clipping the eleventh horse.

An Evening with George Riddle.

All those who heard George Riddle last winter, through the courtesy of the Monday Afternoon Club, will be delighted to hear that this winter he will again visit Plainfield. On the evening of December 6th, at the Y. M. C. A. Hall, he will present a varied programme, including some of his choicest numbers from such authors as Sheridan, Victor Hugo, Frank Stockton and Kate Douglas Wiggin. The complete programme, together with a list of patronesses from whom tickets may be obtained, will be given later. The artist is now ranked foremost among readers and no one can afford to miss the opportunity of hearing him.

Topics for Gymnastics.

The topics for the gymnasium men's Bible class, held every Sunday morning at 9:15, are as follows:

November 10—"The Place and Power of Christians;" Athletics, I Timothy 4:8, I John 2:1. November 17—The Race Course, Hebrews 12:1, Psalms 19:5; Ecclesiastes 9:11, II Samuel 18:19-26. November 24—The Boxing Bout, I Corinthians 9:26. December 1—The Wrestling Match, Genesis 32:24-25, Ephesians 6:12.

Bound Brook Too Fresh.

Whoa, January—What does Bound Brook know about what is best for North Plainfield in regard to streets. The Bound Brook people have yet to learn how to put down sidewalks as they should be. The writer knows of a case where a sidewalk, 50 feet long, blue stone, too, was laid between the curb line and the street, in Bound Brook.

To Be a Handsome Structure.

The main portion of the marble front of the new First National Bank building is about completed, thus far showing that it will be very handsome. The other work is progressing very rapidly.

ALLABOUT THE SULTAN'S LAND

REV. JAMES F. RIGGS DELIVERS AN ENTERTAINING LECTURE.

The Turks are Great Fighters, But Civilization Progresses Slowly Among Them—Related Many Personal Experiences.

Nearly two hundred people turned out last evening, despite the rain, to attend the lecture on "Constantinople" by Rev. James F. Riggs, D. D., of Rutgers College. The lecture was held in the Trinity Reformed church and the attendance was very large considering the bad weather. The lecture was given under the auspices of the Ladies Christian Work Society of the church, and the women deserve great credit for securing such a noted lecturer. The front of the church was artistically decorated with chrysanthemums and ferns which were arranged by a committee of which Mrs. J. C. Van Dyke is the chairman.

Before the lecture commenced, Rev. Cornelius Schenck introduced Isaac L. Miller, who spoke of the University Extension course of lectures which is being arranged.

Dr. Riggs was then presented to his audience.

He spoke of Constantinople as the oldest inhabited capitol and as being unique in that the old and the modern cities are built up together. He next told of Constantinople's favorable situation at the meeting place of two continents and two seas and how its ruler is called "The lord of two continents and prince of two seas."

The prospect of the Turkish capitol as it is seen when approached was described, and Dr. Riggs spoke especially of the wonderful blue water. The harbor was next sketched very realistically.

"The Turks are great fighters," he said, "but the mysteries of a steam engine are beyond them," and he told of the experiences of the natives with their men of war.

The Bosphorus and the beautiful palaces which line its banks were spoken of, and, from an artistic point of view, the statement refuted that the Turkish people are barbarians.

The special palaces of the Sultan were described as were also the wonderful mosques.

Dr. Riggs scored the Turks roundly for their action to the country people away from the towns and unprotected foreigners.

The Turks have their humorous stories as well as other nations and Dr. Riggs kept his hearers in roars of laughter when he repeated some of them. The city of Constantinople was partially described and something told of the customs, feasts and festivals of the people.

Dr. Riggs kept the close attention of all audience throughout the lecture and proved a very interesting speaker with his ready flow of words, his vast fund of information, and his bright humor.

Councilman Elias H. Bird and Harry W. Marshall made very efficient ushers while Street Commissioner Robert A. Meeker presided over the ticket department.

Sir Knights at Morristown.

Dr. D. C. Adams, Eminent Commander of Trinity Commandery, No. 17, Knights Templar, of this city, accompanied by W. H. Sebring, Grand Senior Warden of the Grand Commandery of New Jersey, visited Odode St. Armand Commandery, of Morristown, last evening. It was the official visitation of the State Grand Officers, and owing to the death of Eminent Sir A. C. Gardiner, of Odode St. Armand Commandery, Eminent Sir Adams, of this city, was honored by being selected to officiate as Eminent Commander, which he did with dignity and honor.

Help for the Home of the Aged.

A good variety of groceries, household articles, etc., were brought to the lecture room of the First Baptist church to be forwarded to the Home for the Aged in Newark. The reception and harvest home of this institution will take place Tuesday, November 12th at the Home, 285 Roseville avenue. Plainfield is represented in the list of officers by the following women: Directress, Mrs. O. B. Leonard; managers from First Baptist church, Mrs. William White, Mrs. J. D. Runyon, Miss Mary D. Thickstun; from the Park Avenue church, Mrs. F. K. Fish, Mrs. J. W. Johnson and Mrs. Theo. L. Runyon.

Daily Press Thanked.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—It gives me pleasure to inform you that at the last executive meeting of the Plainfield Local Union a motion was carried to the effect that a hearty vote of thanks be extended for the very efficient service rendered the Local Union through the columns of The Daily Press, as well as for the kindness manifested by the free printing and distribution of the song "Plainfield, '96."

Sincerely yours,
Florence G. Hawkins,
Secretary.

DID NOT PUT THE TOWEL THERE

A Mock Trial Affords Instruction and Entertainment.

A very interesting mock trial was held at Prof. Phelps' Business College yesterday afternoon. It was the first of a series, and they give promise of being a feature during the winter among the students. The facts of the case yesterday were that Henry Vosseller was accused of placing a soiled towel in the sleeve of a coat belonging to Miss Matie Van Horn, and she made the complaint. Walter Hetfield, Jr., acted as the defendant's lawyer, while Elwood Sebring represented the plaintiff. Prof. Ferris acted as judge. The witnesses for the prosecution were George Reynolds, Miss Keely, Miss Casey; and those for the defense Prof. Wade, Thomas Rafferty, Miss Brokaw and Mrs. Ferris. After two hours amusement the judge decided that the defendant was not guilty. Another trial will be held in a short time, when the students will have the privilege of inviting their friends.

JUST MISSED HER EYE.

Little Ida Bowers Accidently Struck in the Head With an Axe.

Little Ida Bowers had a very narrow escape from accidental death at the hands of her small brother when playing in the yard in the rear of her home on West Front street yesterday morning. She is about eleven years of age and her brother is slightly younger. The two children were playing in the yard with an axe, chopping the ground and little sticks. The lad was using the axe and when he was not looking his sister stepped directly in the stroke of it, which struck her directly above the eye. A cut about two inches long was made in the forehead just above the eye. The children were badly frightened at the accident but a man who saw the affair, took the weeping girl to one side and dressed the cut.

A YELLOW LUNCHEON.

Mrs. Henry A. McGee, of Washington Park, Entertain a Few Friends.

A very pleasant yellow luncheon was given by Mrs. Henry A. McGee at her home at the corner of Willow avenue and Orchard place Thursday. The house was artistically decorated, principally with yellow chrysanthemums. The table was also very handsomely arranged. Among those present were Mrs. Robert Stoutenburg, Mrs. Herbert Gleason and Miss Ida Dodd, of Newark, and Mrs. Alex. Gilbert, Miss Randolph, Mrs. Howard Corlies, Mrs. Ellis Barrows, Mrs. Emma F. Egg, Mrs. Laura Talmage, Mrs. Martin I. Cooley, and Mrs. Charles E. Horne, of this city.

The attention of the public has been so absorbed in the dances at the coming Kirmess the ladies in charge of the stationery table wish to turn the thought toward the opportunities they will give for the purchase of Christmas gifts, books, calendars, and all kinds of fancy stationery. The committee in charge consists of Mrs. John Gray Foster, Mrs. A. Walter Hayland, Mrs. Elliott T. Barrows, Mrs. J. Doull Miller, Mrs. James R. Joy and Miss Emily Tracy.

CHILDREN ENTERTAINED.

A Good Time Provided for Sunday-school Scholars of Holy Cross Church.

Superintendant E. R. Western and the teachers of the Sunday-school of the Holy Cross church gave a most enjoyable and highly appreciated entertainment last night to the many small scholars of the school. An exhibition of lantern slides lasting nearly an hour, with music and games, made the evening pass very pleasantly. A large number of the slides were in colors, and the mechanical ones caused many a shout of delight from the little ones present. After the slides were shown the children tried to pin a tail upon the donkey, a prize being given to the most successful. Some romping games and music completed the programme, when ice-cream, cake and other refreshments were served.

This entertainment is the first of a number to be given this winter and if all prove as enjoyable as this one, the children will look forward to them with many pleasant anticipations.

M'VEY MAY BECOME A GOLD BUG.

The Restaurateur May Have Valuable Possessions at Gloversville.

The startling announcement in yesterday's New York papers that a gold mine had been found at Gloversville, N. Y., has filled J. H. McVey of North avenue, with fond hopes and ambition, for he has 350 lots directly opposite the property on which the gold has been discovered. Mr. Mc Vey will probably have his property searched to see how much of the desired gilt he can capture. In the meantime he is anxiously awaiting further developments.

They Take a Quiet Smoke.

Complaint has been made to Chief of Police Grant that some of the young men who go to one of the local churches get up during the evening service and go out to the horse sheds to smoke. An officer is to be stationed near the spot on Sunday to prevent the continuing of the nuisance. Those who make the complaint are afraid that a fire will be started there through the carelessness of the young smokers.

Careless Work.

The attention of The Daily Press has been called to the condition of the street on North avenue, opposite the Love building. Honan & Sons yesterday dug a trench from the water main to the sewer flush tank, and the careless way in which the trench was left by Honan's men is certainly outrageous, and we hope our up-to-date Street Commissioner and the street committee, if possible, will pay a visit to the spot and either abate the nuisance or cause the contractors to do so.

Manning to Make Improvements.

L. L. Manning, the West Front street marble and granite dealer, is soon to make a number of improvements to his shop at the corner of Central avenue. The roof of the present building is to be raised and another new story added. The new story will be used as a show room for marble mantels. George Henry will have charge of the raising of the roof and J. Gulick will do the mason work.

CUPID'S NOVEMBER EVENT.

A PRETTY HOME WEDDING CELEBRATED ON WATCHUNG AVENUE.

Surrounded by a bower of beautiful palms, white chrysanthemums and smilax, Miss Zulema Schroder, daughter of Frederick Schroder, of 929 Watchung avenue, became the wife of George L. Brinley, of Birdsboro, Pa., yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

The parlor of the pretty home was a perfect garden of flowers. While Mendelssohn's wedding march was being rendered by Mrs. John M. Schorb, Jr., on the piano, the flower girls, Helen and May Schroder, sisters of the bride, entered the parlor gowned in white Swiss, wearing wreaths of pinks and carnations. They were followed by Carl Schroder, acting as page. Then came the bride leaning on the arm of her father. She was beautiful in an ashes of rose traveling gown with pearl trimmings and pearl front. She also wore a tulle veil caught up with a diamond chester, a gift of the groom, and carried white roses. Following came the maid of honor, Miss Mamie Haas, of Birdsboro, Pa., exquisitely gowned in pink fre fronce covered with pink tulle and and trimmed with pink flowers. She carried a bouquet of pinks. The bridesmaid, Miss Jennie Schroder, came next, and was gowned the same. This portion of the bridal party were met by the groom and best man, Walter Focht, of Birdsboro, Pa., and they all were received by Rev. Herbert Randolph, who performed the ceremony, after which they were heartily congratulated by those present.

An elegant supper was then served, and after a social time the bride and groom left on the 6:40 train for Philadelphia on a short honeymoon. On their return they will reside at Birdsboro, Pa. Mr. and Mrs. Brinley received many handsome and useful presents from their friends and relatives.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. H. Winter and Miss Winter, of Orange; Mr. and Mrs. William Carroll, Miss Bounell, Mr. and Mrs. Trujillo, of New York; Mrs. Charles Dolphin, Miss A. Rebecca Irvin, of Philadelphia; Miss May Laing, Miss Nellie Van Winkle, Mr. and Mrs. James Lewis, Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Randolph, Mr. and Mrs. John Schorb, of Plainfield; Miss Mamie Adams, of Brooklyn.

Dr. Reinhart, of Birdsboro, acted as usher.

House Warming.

Mr. and Mrs. Fank Briggs entertained their friends at a house warming Tuesday evening. The evening was pleasantly spent with music and games, after which refreshments were served. It was in the early hours of the morning when the guests took leave.

Those present included Mrs. Combs, Miss Isabel Finke and Edward Finke, of New York; Miss Anna Bell Hazardon, of Williams Bridge; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Startup, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Marshall, Mr. and Mrs. Ryno, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Miller, Mr. and Mrs. P. A. VanFleet, Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Bugg, the Misses Laning, Dr. Pocock, Mr. Dunbar, Miss Laura Holder, A. K. Holder, John Holder, E. M. Vail, Miss Mae VanFleet, Miss Ethel Conkee, Miss Ada Clark, Miss Burrows, Miss Edna Briggs and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Briggs.

Two Aged Women Surprised.

Mrs. James Philpitt and sister, Mrs. George Philpitt, celebrated the anniversary of their birthdays on Monday. The former is seventy-six and the latter eighty-six, and it happens that both come on the same day. In the evening they were surprised to see a number of relatives and friends walk into their house on West Front street. All joined in singing and dancing, after which refreshments were served.

Both were the recipients of many useful presents. After all had offered congratulations the happy guests left for home. Among those present were Mrs. C. Crook, and Miss Gerald, of Brooklyn, Mr. Warner, Mr. Scott, Mr. Winters, and Miss Pauline Smith, of Newark; Oscar Philpitt, Mr. and Mrs. Pexham, of Pennsylvania; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Philpitt, Mrs. Dantz, and Miss Birdie Philpitt.

Donations For the Aged.

The Baptist Home for the Aged, located at 285 Roseville avenue, Newark, will hold a harvest home and reception on Tuesday of next week to which all friends are invited. Donations for it will be received tomorrow in the lecture room of the First Baptist church from ten to four.

John Sebold Dead.

John Sebold, the contractor, who met with an accident on the trolley road between New Brunswick and Milltown on Tuesday morning by which two heavy spools of copper wire rolled upon him, died yesterday. Mr. Sebold was for many years deputy health inspector.

BOWLING GAMES ARRANGED.

Schedule of the Central Bowling League Made Out.

A meeting of the Central Journal Bowling League was held at the clubrooms of the Elizabeth Athletic Club last evening. John Petrie represented the Crescent Wheelmen, of this city, in the league. Representatives were also present from the New Jersey Athletic Club, the Cranford Country Club, and the Elizabeth Athletic Club. The only important business done was the arrangement of the schedule, which was as follows:

November 13—Crescent Wheelmen vs. E. A. C., at Elizabeth.

November 26—Cranford vs. Crescent Wheelmen, at Plainfield.

November 27—E. A. C. vs. N. J. A. C., at Elizabeth.

December 3—N. J. A. C. vs. Cranford, at Cranford.

January 8—Crescent Wheelmen vs. Cranford, at Cranford.

January 14—N. J. A. C. vs. Crescent Wheelmen, at Plainfield.

February 25—Cranford vs. Crescent Wheelmen, at Plainfield.

CORSA CANNOT GO BACK.

Judge Beekman Decides That Col. Waring Need Not Restore the Plaintiffs.

In Superior Court in New York yesterday Judge Beekman handed down a decision in the case of Henry C. Corsa, of this city, who was discharged from a deputy street cleaning commissionership by Col. Waring, and who had applied for a writ of mandamus, under the veteran act, compelling his restoration to the office.

It appeared that Corsa, after declining to resign in obedience to a private request, was notified to answer charges, and when he appeared and claimed a veteran's privilege, Col. Waring declined to swear the witness, who accused him of disobeying orders. Corsa and his counsel withdrew. When the application for a mandamus was made, the Commissioner notified him that he was restored, but Corsa, on advice of counsel, refused to abandon the proceeding, except upon condition that the pending charge should be dismissed. Corsa absented himself from duty for five days after the reinstatement, and was then dismissed again for his five days' absence. Corsa claimed that his absence was in pursuit of an agreement that he should not be prejudiced pending the mandamus proceeding. Judge Beekman denies the writ, as the respondent has already complied with any direction the Court would make, but costs are awarded to Corsa.

WORKS OF MYSTERY.

The entertainment given by Siloum Fountain of True Reformers in Reform hall last night provided an occasion for the members to gather in sociability and enjoy and entertaining program which had been arranged for their pleasure. The principal feature of the affair was the display of magic work by Prof. J. E. Bolden, of Virginia. The conjurer was wonderfully deft with his tricks and the novelty of his work was a surprise and mystery to the audience. A number of local talent participated in the programme. The committee who arranged the affair was as follows: J. H. Saunders, S. J. Wheadington, W. J. Crowley, John T. Cox, A. S. Venable, G. L. Croon and J. A. Saunders.

Failed to Return Borrowed Goods.

The case of Mira Pleasant against Amanda Dunham, both colored, in fort, has an amusing history, the details of which will be brought out in the hearing before Justice Newcorn November 11th. Some time ago Amanda borrowed a coat and pair of shoes from Mira and forgot to return them. The latter being very anxious to have them has been obliged to take the case into court. Lawyer H. C. Runyon will represent the plaintiff.

Arrested on a Serious Charge.

Charles McGuire, of Summit, aged eighteen years, was arrested this morning and taken to the county jail at Elizabeth on the charge of assault on Lizzie Sisco, daughter of George Sisco. The girl is fifteen years of age.

MIKE WATSON LICKED AGAIN.

NOT IN A FISTIC MILL, BUT IN THE SUPREME COURT.

He Still Shows Fight and Will Endeavor to Have the Common Pleas Court Decision Reviewed by Certiorari.

The litigation between this city and Michael Watson is proving to be one of the most involved and protracted of all liquor prosecutions. Watson has had not his day, but his many days, in court. Convicted and sentenced in the City Court, he appealed to the Court of Common Pleas and he there succeeded in having the conviction set aside. But his success was short lived. By advice of the Corporation Counsel the city carried the case to the Supreme Court where the judgment of the County Court was reversed and the cases remanded for a new trial. The city then had Watson's appeals in both this and a later case dismissed in the County Court and Watson was lodged in jail. His counsel sued out a writ of error, which removed the case to the Supreme Court again, and Watson was bailed out of jail. Yesterday, on motion of Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh on behalf of this city, judgment was ordered against Watson with costs by Judges Depue, VanSyckel and Gummere, for failure to assign and file errors.

Watson's next move will be an attempt to have the judgment of the Common Pleas Court reviewed by writ of certiorari.

Watson's counsel are John A. Frech, of Somerville, and Fred C. Marsh, of Elizabeth.

ECHOES OF VACATION.

The first of anything is always looked upon as a sample of those to follow, and if the rest of the socials of the Seventh-Day Baptist church are as enjoyable as the first one of the winter, which was held last evening, then the year will be a noted one as far as the social work is concerned.

The fog and dampness kept many at home that, despite them, the sociable was very largely attended and the evening was spent very pleasantly.

The programme was a novel and successful one. It was called "Vacation Echoes" and consisted of a number of short sketches of the various places in which different members of the congregation spent their vacation. The subjects and the speakers were as follows: Kentucky, Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis; Canada, Dandridge and Plymouth, Miss Lou Clawson; Lake George and Fort Ticonderoga, Miss Louise Lewis; Nova Scotia and the "Evangeline" trip, William M. Stillman; British Columbia and Vancouver, Dr. Russell; A Visit to the Shakers, Miss Lena Tomlinson; The Adirondacks, Prof. H. M. Maxson. There was also a piano solo by Miss Mabel A. Maxson and a vocal solo by Mrs. G. E. Stillman.

Photographs showing various views of the different places were passed around and during his talk Dr. Russell exhibited two tables covered with interesting souvenirs of British Columbia. The talks were all greatly enjoyed and the entertainment committee, which consisted of Mrs. D. E. Titsworth, chairman, Mrs. J. G. Miller, Miss Mabel A. Maxson, Miss Ida L. Spicer and Miss Lena Tomlinson, deserves great credit for their efforts to provide a successful programme.

After the programme was concluded, the rest of the evening was spent in conversation and partaking of the excellent refreshments which were provided by a committee consisting of Mrs. A. T. Tomlinson and J. F. Hubbard.

ALL THE BIDS REJECTED.

Charges That a Change Had Been Made in One of Them.

The Board of Freeholders of Middlesex county yesterday rejected all the bids for the construction of a macadamized road from Dunellen to Stelton, and the Committee on Highways was authorized to readvertise for bids. The first bids were rejected because it was asserted that there had been a deal in the Road Committee, which is made up of a majority of Republicans, by which the $30,000 contract was to go to a contractor in Dunellen. It was charged that the figures in this bid had been changed at the last moment by a member of the committee. When the bids were thrown down for public inspection it was found that in the bid the word "seventy" had been written over "eighty-four." The writing was in different colored ink. It is claimed that the bids was change after it had been presented to the committee.

Valuable Canines.

A number of valuable dogs belonging to William Tallman, of Nethergood, were shipped south yesterday morning to enter several competitive races. They have been in training sometime and the owner is expecting great results.

A SESSION OF DEBATE.

Red Men to Have a Novel Sort of a Meeting Tomorrow Night.

Miantenomah Tribe, No. 118, I.O.R. M., will meet tomorrow night and work the adoption degree on two candidates, the hunter's on three, and receive one, after which a select programme will be rendered as follows: Guitar selections, Harry Drier; selected humor, W. A. Westphal; song, C. L. Holstin; recitation, George Leighs; banjo solo, William Force; song, Robert Perrine; lullaby, A. J. Stiglitz, short talk, N. C. Magee; duet, banjo and guitar, William Force and Harry Drier; recitation, Robert Guttridge; song, Joseph Newman.

Following the above there will be a debate on the subject "The desirability of attaching a general death benefit to the Improved Order of Red Men, under the auspices of the Great Council." W. A. Westphal, N. C. Magee and J. A. Karet will speak for the affirmative, and William Newcorn, C. L. Holstein and Francis Whiteley will represent the negative.

A collation will be served at the close, and the pipe of peace will end the festivities.

MARRIED AT DUNELLEN.

The marriage of Miss Nettie Hill to Finlin Lewis took place last night at the Methodist parsonage in Dunellen, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Fred Custard. After the nuptial knot had been tied the happy couple returned to the home of the bride's parents where a collation was served and a reception given to a few intimate friends and relatives. They were the recipients of a number of handsome and useful presents. Among those present at the reception were the following: Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hill, Martin Lines, Walter Lewis, Mabel Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Smith and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Giles.

FINE BANJO MUSIC.

Lovers of banjo music are to be given a treat on Tuesday, Nov. 26th, when George Jenkins will give a grand banjo concert at Music Hall. He will be assisted by John Daly, the famous humorist, George Halloway, the guitarist, the Daly Banjo Quartette, of New York, and many others. Brooks, Denton and Ossman, three of the most celebrated banjo players in the country, will exhibit their skill, while a banjo orchestra composed of thirty-five local players will render several selections. The entertainment promises to be a delightful one.

WON'T HAVE TO PAY FOR THE SUITS.

Howard Woolston Non-suits Magee in the Common Pleas Court.

The appeal case of Magee against Woolston was brought up in the Court of Common Pleas yesterday and Judge McCormick rendered a decision of non-suit, thus reversing the result of Justice Newcorn's court. The decision carries with it the costs of both courts, which the plaintiff will have to settle. The action was brought to recover the value of several of the old Crescent Wheelmen's suits, which it was alleged Woolston had detained from their rightful owners. W. K. McClure represented the defendant.

A Hilarious Time.

The evils of intemperance were very much in evidence last evening at Patrick Callahan's residence on Manning avenue. The latter was under the influence of the flowing bowl so that when he reached home he had an abundance of ambition. As a result he and his wife engaged in a dispute which ended in a fight. Indecent language was used profusely, and a crowd was attracted in the neighborhood. Chief Van Horn, Special Marshal Goodwin, and Constable Taynor went to the place, but the disturbance was not quieted.

Wheels Out in Force.

Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Jones, of Grandview avenue, and Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Vail, of Prospect place, to a spin on their wheels Tuesday to Short Hills, where they attended the chrysanthemum show. They found the road thick with other cyclists. Going and coming they counted three hundred and twenty-six different riders and found about two hundred wheels stacked all about the vicinity of the green houses at Short Hills.

Assistant in the Library.

Miss Mary K. Jobs, of the class of '95 of the Pratt Library Training School, has been appointed Assistant Librarian, in place of Miss E. E. Davie, resigned.

Golden Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Smalley, Sr., of Craig place, will celebrate their fiftieth wedding anniversary Tuesday, Nov. 19th.

HIGHLAND COURTING

When was our loving? Oh, ask when the mountains
Keep bait a lacing of cold winter's snow,
Grass lands are greening, and lambs by the fountains
Are bleating below.

Have you not seen on the loch's glassy water
Dolphins leap onward in sport by the shore,
The hind stand and wonder the stag had not sought her
With challenging roar?

Heard you the musical note of the blackgame,
Flutelike, in tremulous laughter afar
From the grim heath that is hoary and wild, while from the rock came
The cave pigeon's cries?

Were you then sleeping when moorland and meadow
Woke to the call of the plover, and song
Rang in the woodlands that scarce knew a shadow,
For spring was yet young?

If you were wakeful, then why ask the season
The highlands are loveliest? Lovely alway.
Stay, I will tell you enough in a reason!
Before—we were gray.

LIFE AND THE KNIFE.

Vivisectors Not so Merciful In Using Anæsthetics as They Claim.

Physicians are rather fond of telling the public that in experiments on living animals pain is reduced to a minimum by the use of anæsthetics. Occasionally a being turns up who accepts this statement, but we think he is rare. Mr. Philip J. Peabody, in the December Century, in an article, gave a few interesting facts on this subject:

"I have never yet, in all my experience, seen any anæsthetic in, or about, in use in any laboratory, with one exception. I have a personal acquaintance with many vivisectors, including a number of the best known ones in this country and Europe, and have hundreds of times conversed with them. No vivisector has ever claimed or pretended to use any anæsthetic, in conversation with me. They have always freely admitted that they never used them whenever the subject came up.

"In the one exception noted, a dog which was about two hours undergoing a very agonizing experiment on the bladder, had been properly performed, solely to stop his howls, as I saw and was also informed. After this a small rubber vessel was at times bandaged some distance away from the operation and for a few times only, and for a few seconds at a time only, it seemed slightly to relieve his agony. The use of chloroform I told my more circumspect than volumes would have done how utterly false was the pretense that animals are saved from suffering by anæsthetics. This dog was breathing through the hole cut in his neck as much as his nose. As a famous English doctor said—it is the public who are anæsthetized, not the animals."

The doctors must have their fun, but it is a gruesome sport, and the appetite grows with what it feeds on. People with kinder feelings, however, are offended by the brazen insolence that perpetrates these disgusting brutalities in the name of science. The "interesting experiments" bear the same relation to science as do the tortures of the inquisition to the Ten Commandments.—Life.

Electricity In Horticulture.

Some valuable work has been done on French farms at the suggestion of men who have made a study of electrical sciences. The germination of beans, peas and grain has been quickened to a marked extent by the electric current. The apparatus employed for this purpose by agriculturists consists of an ordinary pole 40 to 50 feet high, on the top of which is mounted a row of metallic points to collect electricity from the atmosphere. An insulated wire transmits the electric force to a network of galvanized iron wires buried 4 to 6 feet in the ground, in the growing crop. This apparatus is called a geomagnetifere. It is claimed that an increase of 50 per cent in yield of cash is obtained by its use. Grapes also treated consists a higher percentage of sugar and alcohol and the perfume of flowers is stronger.

The theory advanced is that heat high is claimed to enrich the ground to the same extent as ten times its cost in manure. It has long been supposed that electricity assists leguminous plants to appropriate the free nitrogen from the atmosphere, but it is hard to understand the character of the process. Recently it has been found that much of nitrogen obtained by decomposition of the air, but it would seem rational to suppose that the electric force makes the ground more useful by rendering it readily and completely assimilable than in other wise would be.—Chicago Tribune.

An Extraordinary Map.

The University of Tokio is said to possess the most remarkable map in the world. It is on the plan of those familiar to geography students, being relief maps made of sand and earth so as to represent accurately all the physical features of Japan.

According to a recent writer: "The seas are represented with white sand and the mountains, hills, valleys, cities, etc., with dark colored clay. All the bays and gulfs, the seven and the islands are shown in the proper proportion of their size and distance from the mainland. Little channels run among the little gulfs with model cities, and whenever there is a shower of rain, the water flows along these rivers to the sea, precisely as it does in the larger streams which empty into the ocean. The university can thus see at a glance all the physical features of their own country, and learn more of their nature by this method in a day than they could acquire in a week by the ordinary avenues of information."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Horseshoes Made From an Aerolite.

The only man in the world perhaps that ever drove a horse wearing shoes made from an aerolite is Mr. Ryan, a blacksmith had been on the moon is Frank Morris of Worthington, W. Va. A few years ago a small aerolite composed of pure Iron fell near Mr. Morris' blacksmith shop. He obtained possession of it and had a portion of it made into shoes for his favorite horse. These shoes proved to be very highly prized and seldom used for such base purposes.—St. Louis Republic.

Observant.

Fond Mother—My darling, it is bedtime. All the little chickens have gone to bed.

Little Philosopher—Yes, mamma, and so has the old hen.—Philadelphia Call.

According to the Gotthardpost, the canton of Schwyz, in frecnt Switzerland, is the land of saloons par excellence, intoxicating drink being on sale in every ninth house in that canton.

It is a common belief in the rural districts of all countries that when hogs carry straw or sticks in their mouths rain will soon follow.

BULL SMITH'S NAME.

When Mrs. Abigail Tuthill Smith died in Patchogue, N. Y., some time ago at the age of 96, old settlers in the town "allowed" that the oldest inhabitant of Long Island had gone to her reward. A lineal descendant of Bull Smith she was. The neighbors said, as they discussed her years and her worth. But few of them knew why her husband, who should have been named Smithtown, had lost his own Christian name in favor of that of the animal.

The story of it much resembles that of the founding of Carthage that is told by the classic writers. The city of Hannibal, the legends say, was surrounded by the hide of a bull. The men who wanted to settle and own it were told by those who had a prior right that they could have as much land as they could surround with the hides of a bull. These unexpectedly hard bull brains that were finely developed, and by cutting the hide into thin strips they managed to work out a claim on which they built a city that became the home of one of the greatest conquerors the world has ever known.

Much after the same fashion Smithtown with a bull's hide. The bull in his case was a live one. In the days when Indians owned Long Island, Smith roamed over it, and finally settled down on a section. He was well received by the Indians, who, however, did not seem particularly anxious to give or sell him more land than he could plant.

He made offers, but received no consideration. Finally, partly to have some fun with him and partly to make him trust to his hunt for a section, the Indians told him they would give him as much land as he could cover, riding on the back of a bull.

Smith was willing, and the bull was lively. The Indians, in gleeful anticipation, watched Smith struggle to the back of the bull and partly to make him wary with the determined man digging his heels into its sides. The bull snorted and cavorted around the battleground, but what just what Smith wanted, for the more frequent the deviations from a straight course the more land for the dauntless rider.

The land on the bull stood is now Smithtown, and Smith, the story goes, never heard his Christian name again.—New York Times.

Why Foxes Must Be Hunted.

The city man's desire to hunt is based neither on affection nor on mimicry. Foxes must be run to keep fox-and-stone-country because it is done in England. The strain of English blood may show itself perhaps in American descendants, but Americans ride across country because that is a far livelier and more interesting form of riding than riding on the road, even when it is a road on a paved street. And when Americans hunt foxes they do it for the same reason that the English do—because following the trail of a fox is the best sport to be had. Pelt-following a cross country trail artificially laid, and because the fox is the only wild creature fit for the chase that will live and flourish in proximity to man.

That the city man, be he Briton or American, should wish to hunt is a reasonable wish. The exhilaration of the daily life are such as draw on his vitality and abate his vigor. When once he has put himself in the way of making an adequate living, his physical life is apt to be easy. He gets no taste of cold or hunger or hard physical labor. He is too apt to be crowded and overfed. To drink more than is good for him, to work too hard with his head and too little with his body, to be luxuriously lodged and generally to be made soft and effeminate. Hunting has to fear the debilitating influences of such a life both on his physique and on his character. His simplest remedy is some sort of exercise which will involve some self denial, some exertion and a reasonable amount of peril.—Scribner's.

Poetry Societies.

How lamentably true is Mr. Lang's contention, "Can any thing speak more clearly of the decadence of the art of poetry than the fact that we have societies for its cultivation?" They all demonstrate that people have not the courage to study verse in solitude, but must have appreciation. Men and women need confederates in this adventure. There is safety in numbers, and by dint of tea parties, recitations, discussions, and what not, the Muse in the vail and his friends keep blowing the faint embers on the altar of Apollo. They cannot raise a flame!" Such may be the fate of Pennyroyal.

But no society, not even a clique of log rollers, was needed to secure him popularity. He gave expression to the deep emotions and larger movements of his time, or at all events what seemed to be such, to an extent and with a perfection of art to which none of his rivals could claim. And when all is said and done what is the greatest poet of a period but the man who gives the most artistic expression to the deepest feelings of the greatest number?—Scottish Review.

Who Was Nelson?

On a recent visit to Mme. Tussaud's exhibition, I found myself among a crowd of persons gazing at that memorable scene in the cockpit of the Victory, entitled in the catalogue as "The Death of Nelson." It is certainly a realistic group, sufficient to enlighten the most untutored mind. While I was looking at it, wondering what the tragic scene before me, I heard a woman say to her companion, "Who is Nelson?" The man, startled for a moment, pulled down his collar, looked at his questioner, and, recovering himself, replied: "Nelson! Oh, he was the captain of a man-of-war!" No one laughed.

It was a very natural answer, and it seemed to satisfy the company, which moved onward to inspect the Polish giant, the two-headed lady, and the baby having Tom Thumb on the palm of his hand.—Notes and Queries.

Diet For Nervous Persons.

Mrs. Rorer recommends plenty of salad in the diet for nervous persons. Fat around the nerves she says, digests very slowly very quickly. Meat, such as lean roast beef, broiled steak, broiled mutton or broiled chops, should be used three times a day. Cereals and a little bread and little fruit taken and such as is should be eaten at the end of breakfast, or luncheon, never in the latter part of the day. White bread toasted for the ones, or whole wheat bread, coffee without sugar at breakfast, very weak tea once a day, without sugar or cream, and no more or deserts are more suggestions for the bill of fare.

Not Worth While.

"Perhaps if I were to boil it down," suggested the space writer.

"Wouldn't do any good," said the obdurate editor. "Gallon of water and boil it down to a pint, and it would still be nothing but water."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

ORGANIZED AID OFFICERS.

THE ASSOCIATION TO BE REORGANIZED AND INCORPORATED.

The Word "Citizens," to be Dropped From the Title of the Society—President M. W. Tyler Re-elected—Other Matters.

There were about fifteen members of the Citizens' Organized Aid Association present at the meeting held in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church last Monday and in the absence of the president, Mason W. Tyler, the chair was ably occupied by H. B. Newhall, the vice-president.

After the reading of the minutes of the last meeting the chairman called for a report from the Committee on Incorporation. D. P. Hall reported for the committee. The new constitution and by-laws which are, with the exception of a few slight changes like the old ones, were then adopted. One of the changes was made in the title by striking out the word "Citizens," which makes it now read "Organized Aid Association of Plainfield and North Plainfield;" and there will be three stated meetings of the Association a year.

That steps be taken to incorporate the association; that officers be elected and empowered to incorporate the same; that the bylaws and constitution go into effect when the association becomes incoporated. They were all adopted. It was also ordered that the secretary place the resolutions in the minutes.

There was a slight objection made to holding three meetings during the year, but the rule finally prevailed. The matter of finance was discussed and Treasurer H. P. Reynolds stated that there was almost enough money in his hands to meet the bills. The Association then adjourned and the members of the council of the Association met for the purpose of electing officers. All other business was suspended except that named.

Vice-President H. B. Newhall, and secretary J. Doull Miller, presided at the meeting also.

The election resulted as follows:

President, Mason W. Tyler; First Vice-President, H. B. Newhall; Second Vice-President, Mrs. Opdyke; Third Vice-President, C. W. McCutchen; Secretary, J. Doull Miller; Treasurer, H. P. Reynolds.

The present committees were left standing till the new constitution and bylaws go into effect, when they will be elected at the first meeting held.

Sheriff Ditts Retires.

George Ditts will leave the Sheriff's office in Somerville today and his successor, William N. H. Wyckoff, will be inducted into office. Sheriff Ditts has been a general favorite during the past three years that he has occupied the Shrievalty office of Somerset county, and he has won the respect of all parties regardless of politics.

Rahway's Encouraging Words.

A number of women in Plainfield have applied to the Board of Education to co-operate with them in forming an anti-cigarette league among the boys in the public schools. A good idea and one that should be encouraged—to prevent boys from ruining their health and making a nuisance of themselves by smoking the poisonous and offensive rolls made of no one knows what.—Rahway Advocate.

A Pleasant Surprise.

Miss Josie Van Natta, of East Third street, was given a surprise on the eve of her fourteenth birthday last Friday. About fifty of her friends and schoolmates were present. Miss Josie Van Natta received several very fine presents. The guests spent the evening in playing games, singing and dancing.

Anxious for Good Sidewalks.

The question of laying sidewalks in the borough is receiving considerable attention on the part of the borough mayor and the street committee. The mayor is anxious that walks be laid at certain points in the borough, and at the meeting Friday evening the street committee were given a little push in the matter, which will undoubtedly have a good effect.

Visited Lehigh.

James M. Middledith, of Park avenue, Mr. Brooks, of Newark, and Orville T. Waring, of Willow avenue, witnessed the football game between Lehigh University and Lafayette College at Bethlehem on Saturday. Mr. Middledith spent Sunday with his son, who is a student at Lehigh University, and Waring spent Sunday with his brother, who is a student at the same place.

Where Did I Get This Dreadful Cough?

No matter; the great question is, how shall I get rid of it? Use THE PINEOLA BALSAM, a soothing combination of the remedies nature has put in the pine and other balsamic trees. It cures the inflammation and tickling in the throat and if taken in time will prevent the spread of the disease to the lungs. Ely's Pineola Balsam is strongly recommended in cases of asthma. Twenty-five cents is the price. Tell the neighbors about it.

WOULDN'T TALK IN COURT.

He Was Up for Stealing Coal, But He Didn't Know Much English.

There was one case at the City Court Tuesday afternoon, but the solitary prisoner seemed stricken dumb, for he stood looking at the Judge in a dazed way. After various questions the Judge elicited the fact that the man's name was something like Jim Merand and that he worked for Honan. After another attempt to make the young fellow talk, the Judge said:

"Do you speak English?"

"Only a little," murmured the Italian.

Sergeant Kiely made the arrest and charged the man with stealing coal off the cars of the Jersey Central last Sunday morning. The Judge asked him which he preferred, a fine of $5 or twenty days in jail, but the culprit said never a word but walked back to his cell. Honan, however, paid his fine.

Struck by a Train.

John Gleason, a track walker on the Jersey Central, was struck by the 1:30 train from New York this afternoon just this side of Cranford and instantly killed. He was walking on the east bound passenger track and stepped over on to the west bound track to get out of the way of a Blue Liner.

He did not notice the fast approaching local train, and although the engineer gave every warning with the whistle and bell that was possible, and made a hard effort to bring the train to a stop, he was unable to prevent striking Gleason, whose brains were dashed out.

The conductor of the train was Charles Dodwell, of Dunellen, and Engineer Long and Fireman Stout. The dead man had been in the employ of the company for fifteen years, and leaves a wife and four children. His remains were taken to Cranford by the section gang who were at work near by.

A Congressman to Marry.

Congressman J. P. Dolliver, the Republican orator, who spoke in Music Hall during the Cleveland-Harrison campaign and who has many warm admirers in this city, will wed Miss Louise Parsons to the hymenial altar on Wednesday evening, November 20th, at the first Presbyterian church in Fort Dodge, Iowa. Miss Parsons is the daughter of ex-Senator Parsons, of Iowa. Mr. Dolliver is a cousin of G. Q. Dolliver, of Manning avenue, North Plainfield. After the marriage the couple will take up their residence at the Hamilton in Washington.

Happy Young Folks.

Charles Westphal, of South Second street, celebrated the eighth anniversary of his birthday last night by inviting eight of his boy friends to his home to make merry with him. The evening was spent in playing games and singing, after which an excellent supper was served. The young folks returned home early, much pleased with their entertainment and wishing their host many happy returns of the day.

George Thatcher in Vaudeville.

Cupid's Chariot company, with whom George Thatcher has been playing since his minstrel company closed, disbanded at Elizabeth Saturday and Mr. Thatcher returned to his home in this city. He has an engagement to work on the vaudeville stage and will open in New York, and afterwards appear in Boston, Chicago and Philadelphia.

Mr. Reed Suggested for Speaker.

We are sorry that we are to be represented in the Assembly by a Republican, but seeing that such is the case, we are glad that the representative has the standing that Mr. Reed has. He will be one of the brainiest men in the House and should be elected speaker.—Somerville Democrat.

Delegates Dinner.

The delegates to the recent Christian Endeavor convention held at Atlantic City will enjoy a dinner at the First Baptist church on the evening of November 21st. Later in the evening a public meeting will be held in the body of the church, when the delegates will make reports.

Musical Club Elect.

The Thursday Evening Music Club held its annual business meeting at the home of Miss Josephine Petrie, of East Sixth street, on last Saturday evening. After the election of officers the club adjurned until the fifth of December when the first musical will be given.

Hotel Talk for New Brunswick.

There is a possibility of a large and elegantly appointed hotel being built in New Brunswick in the near future, to be managed by a Plainfielder.

Jurors Discharged.

All the petit jurors at Elizabeth were discharged until November 19th, excepting one panel, which reports on Wednesday to try a civil suit.

First Ward Councilman.

Frank E. Newman to Marry.

The marriage of Miss Grace Carrington, of Jersey City Heights, to Frank Eaton Newman, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Newman, of this city, will take place at the home of the bride on November 26th. It will be a quiet event, only the relatives being invited. Mr. Newman is one of the rising young architects of Philadelphia, and it is in this city that the couple will make their home.

It will be gratifying to a large number of young Plainfield people to know that the Cotillion Club, which was such a success last season, is to be revived during the coming winter. The same names will appear on the invitation cards and the first cotillion will take place on Christmas Eve. The committee in charge this year are the following: Miss Maude Van-Boskerck, Miss Netta Whiton, Irving C. West, Howard Huntington, T. R. Van Boskerck.

To Lecture in Rahway.

Rev. Charles R. Barnes, D. D., of Plainfield, brother of James T. Barnes, of Milton avenue, this city, will give two illustrated lectures here in the near future, under the auspices of the Home Reading Club, the place to be announced later. The subject of the lectures will be "The Jewish Tabernacle," and the lecturer will have on hand with him a model and suits of clothes such as were worn by the priests and high priests of those times.—Rahway Advocate.

Thanksgiving Services.

The union Thanksgiving services this year will be held in the Trinity Reformed and the Seventh-Day Baptist churches on Thanksgiving morning at 10:30. In the former Rev. Herbert F. Randolph, of Grace M. E. church, will deliver the sermon, and in the latter Rev. C. L. Goodrich, of the Congregational church, will deliver the sermon.

Where Credit Is Due.

Much credit is due Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh for his assistance in securing articles of incorporation for the Organized Aid Association. The necessary papers have not yet been transferred, but through the carefulness of the Corporation Counsel all drawbacks and difficulties will be overcome.

Levied On Paintings.

Francis X. Schoonmaker, a guest of the Chicago Beach Hotel, is in trouble. A judgement by confession for $670 was entered against him last night in favor of Mrs. Brandt McDowell. A deputy sheriff has levied on valuable paintings.—Chicago Dispatch.

To Entertain Endeavorers.

On Tuesday evening, November 19th, William Edwards, of Brooklyn, will entertain the Christian Endeavor Society of the Crescent Avenue church with one of his most interesting musical entertainments.

Fix It Up.

The condition of North avenue in front of the Love building, which was spoken of in Saturday's issue of The Daily Press, remains the same, no attempt having been made to fix it up.

Dinner of the Yale Club.

The alumni dinner of the Plainfield Yale Club will be held at the Casino on Thursday evening, December 5th.

W. A. McGuire, a well known citizen of McKay, Ohio, is of the opinion that there is nothing as good for children troubled with colds or croup as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He has used it in his family for several years with the best results and always keeps a bottle of it in the house. After having la grippe he was himself troubled with a severe cough. He used other remedies without benefit and then concluded to try the children's medicine and to his delight it soon effected a permanent cure. 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION STUDIES.

The interest in this place for securing a course of these lectures for the benefit of Plainfield is increasing and will continue to increase, as a knowledge of what is proposed extends among thoughtful people.

Two facts should be borne in mind. First, that these are not lectures in the ordinary sense, but are styled in the circular, issued by Rutgers College professors who have charge of the project, "Lecture-studies." The professor delivers a lecture, say on the Eastern question, invites all who are so disposed, to tarry for further explanations by questions and answers, furnishes to each hearer a syllabus, or full abstract of the lecture, and gives lists of authors to be consulted for further information, and at the close of the course an examination is held.

It is proposed to engage Prof. Riggs to give a course of six lectures on the "Eastern Question," which is now exciting so much attention, and which he is so well qualified from twenty years residence in Turkey and from many years study, to discuss. One hundred and seventy-five subscriptions have been obtained, and seventy-five more are needed before the committee having the matter in charge, will feel justified in inviting Prof. Riggs to come and commence the course. Second, that these "Lecture-studies" are intended to be enjoyed by all who are willing to come to them. With this object in view, the price of admission to the course has been put at seventy-five cents.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

CITY ADMINISTRATION WON.

DISSATISFIED REPUBLICANS SHOWED STRENGTH IN ONLY ONE WARD.

And That Was in the First., Where They Have Them a Hustle—Nominations Unanimous in the Second—Other Results.

From The Press of Nov. 20.

In nearly every ward in the city last night there were contests in the Republican primaries, though in the First ward the opponents of the city administration seemed strongest and gave the workers of that faction a hustle to carry their candidates through. After the primary had adjourned there were mutterings of rebellion at the result and some indulged in talk of a citizens' movement. In the other wards the dissatisfied portion of the party did not evince such a great amount of strength, and in the Second the opposition petered out entirely. Though none of the delegates to the city convention, which will be held tomorrow night, were instructed, it is believed that George DeMeza will probably get the nomination for City Judge, and John Johnson will be the candidate to succeed himself as Collector.

The First ward Republicans held their primary in the Republican headquarters on East Front street last evening. The meeting was called to order precisely at eight o'clock by ex-Judge W. R. Codington; J. B. Coward was nominated as chairman, with Wm. Addis, Sr., secretary; D. S. Pope, clerk; John H. Tier, Sr., judge; Wm. Patterson, inspector.

The first business brought before the meeting was the nominating of delegates to the city convention. There were two tickets in the field, and the nominations were as follows: John H. Tier, Jr., H. E. Templin, D. S. Dunavan, R. E. Coriell, John Rowland, J. F. Buckle, Amos Andrews, H. Case, G. W. Moore and H. F. MacDonald.

After counting the ballots it was found that 139 had been cast, while two were rejected, leaving a total of 137. Each of the delegates named received as follows: John H. Tier, Jr., 71; H. E. Templin, 70; D. S. Dunavan, 69; John Rowland, 71; H. Case, 72; R. E. Coriell, 61; J. F. Buckle, 64; Amos Andrews, 64; Geo. W. Moore, 63; H. F. MacDonald, 56.

Considerable excitement was caused when John Burns came around to cast his ballot for the nominee, and J. B. Coward refused to let him vote. John was exclaiming all the time, "I'm a Republican every time, and don't you forget it." When the time came to cast ballots for councilman Willou was cast with the aid of a few workers present. The next business was the nominating of a councilman. There were two delegates, C. H. Rugg and R. I. Tolles. R. I. Tolles was the nominee, he receiving 72 votes while C. H. Rugg received 54, out of a total of 127 ballots cast and one rejected. Next came the nominations for constable. There were two men eager to get the nomination, C. M. Fine and John Slover. Slover got the nomination, he receiving thirty-six votes while Fine received, thirty-one out of a total of sixty-eight cast and one rejected. C. W. Nichols was unanimously nominated for justice of the peace, he being the only aspirant for that office. The election of members of the city executive committee was next called to order They were W. R. Codington J. B. Coward, J. F. Buckle and J. F. MacDonald. At the close of the contest each received votes as follows: W. R. Codington, 72; J. B. Coward, 48; J. F. Buckle, 32, and J. F. MacDonald, 62. The meeting was then declared adjourned.

The Second ward Republicans gathered in the Bryant School building last evening. Arthur C. Baynon, of the city executive committee, called the meeting to order and George H. Goddard was elected chairman. Armstrong Mulford was chosen secretary. After waiting a few moments to allow the crowd to be seated, W. B. Mattox and Edwin H. Frost were elected Inspectors of Election and Henry E. Bowen Judge of Election.

By motion of Stephen A. Ginna, the nomination of the Councilman from the ward was first taken up. Mr. Ginna nominated G. H. Frost as the candidate for that office. The nominations were closed and then J. B. Dumont moved that the Secretary cast a ballot for Mr. Frost, which motion was carried.

W. R. Mattox, the present Constable, was unanimously re-nominated for the office. As the term of office of the present Justice of the Peace has not yet expired, none was nominated. The three members of the city executive committee were the next to be elected. The present incumbents are George D. Patten, Arthur C. Baynon and W. R. Codington.

The first contest of the evening then began, but it was entirely an unorganized fight. Those nominated and the number of votes they received were: J. P. Laire, 76; George H. Patten, 70; Arthur C. Baynon, 69; Louis L. Croon, 50; A. T. Slauson, 31; and Edward H. Ladd, Jr., 31. Croon, the colored nominee, made a lively fight for a place on the committee.

Everybody was all ready for a lively time when the delegates to the City Convention came to be elected. Two tickets had been prepared, both supporting De Meza for City Judge, but one in favor of John S. Johnson, the present Tax Collector, as the candidate for his old office, and the other supporting Vincent W. Nash for that position. The Johnson ticket was to consist of J. B. Dumont, S. A. Ginna, M. S. Ackerman, J. P. Laire, Peter Neuman and Robert Guttridge, while the Nash men were expected to vote for C. B. Corwin, G. D. Patten, N. H. Drayton, J. V. A. Craighead, A. T. Slauson and Ferdinand Brown. At the last moment, it was decided that the Nash ticket had not the necessary number of supporters and so it was not nominated. The other people were all ready, however, with printed ballots. When the nominations were opened, V. W. Nash jumped up and nominated the regular Johnson ticket, which was carried through without opposition. H. H. Baker was also nominated, but he withdrew.

Just before the vote, a short man stood up in the rear of the room and remarked upon the fact that all the candidates were named by the same man.

"I came from Newark," he ex claimed, "but I never saw such a thing in Newark." His protest was laughed down and the vote carried unanimously.

After Messrs. Baynon and Cahoone had taken up a collection for the benefit of Janitor Hope, Mr. Nash made the motion, which was carried, that a committee of three be appointed to fill any vacancies in the ward candidates. Chairman Goddard appointed V. W. Nash, J. K. Myers and H. S. Peck as the committee. The meeting then adjourned.

The Third ward primary was called to order by Roger F. Murray in the Casino last night promptly at eight o'clock. Frank E. Marsh was elected chairman for the evening. After taking the chair Mr. Marsh called for the nomination of a secretary. J. Marsh Leonard was nominated and duly elected.

Roger F. Murray was appointed judge, Fred B. Andrews inspector, and Townsend Rushmore clerk of election, by Chairman Marsh.

The first business which came before the primary was the nomination of a member of the Common Council. Elliot T. Barrows was nominated for this position, and as there was no opposition it was moved and carried that the secretary cast a ballot for Mr. Barrows.

The next business was the election of five delegates to the city convention. Messrs. H. M. Stockton, Jacob Kirkner, C. E. Stillman, James W. Murray, Jr., George W. Rockfellow, Eugene M. Laing, A. L. Littell, B. Frank Coriell, O. T. Waring and A. J. Woodruff were nominated.

Ballots were prepared and the vote taken, while the count was being made Mr. Barrow was called forward and in a well chosen group of words thanked the primary for the honor they had conferred upon him. In his speech Mr. Barrow said: "I am comparatively a stranger in this ward and I feel highly honored that you have so much trust in me and that you deem me worthy to fill this position I can only thank you for this honor which you have conferred upon me."

One hundred and sixty-three votes were cast in all, of which Mr. Stockton received 119, Mr. Kirkner 118, Mr. Stillman 117, Mr. Murray 163, Mr. Rockfellow 113, Mr. Laing 47, Mr. Littell 44, Mr. Coriell 47, Mr. Waring 9 and Mr. Woodruff 38. The first five candidates having received the greater number of ballots, they were announced by the Chair as elected.

The Secretary again had the pleasure of casting a ballot for both Amos Moffett as Constable, and J. Darby for Justice of the Peace.

The next step was to elect three members of the city executive committee.

Four nominations were made and were as follows: F. E. Marsh, B. F. Coriell, William T. Kirk, J. W. Murray, Jr.

The count showed that Messrs. Marsh, Kirk and Murray were elected. The number of votes for each were as follows: Mr. Marsh 132, Mr. Coriell 35, Mr. Kirk 118 and Mr. Murray 137.

It was moved and carried that each delegate appoint his own alternative to take his place, in case he could not go to the convention.

The Fourth ward primary meeting held in Reform Hall was the largest ever held.

William Newcorn was made Chairman, R. A. Meeker, Secretary, Charles Lister, and G. Lees, inspectors and Abram Angleman, Judge.

Three tickets were placed in the field and at first it was thought there was going to be trouble, as an imitation ticket of the original was put in circulation, the difference being that Charles Van Winkle, Wallace Vail and F. R. Vanderhoff were substituted for J. Porter, James Stewart and Frederick Moore.

The total vote cast was 275 and the winning ticket was elected as follows: Delegates to City Convention—W. A. Westphal, 213; William Newcorn, 266; John Cose, 217; J. Huntington, 217; J. Porter, 212; James Stewart, 215; William Connett, 219; William Fisher, 210; W. W. Coriell, 216; Andrew Muir, 215; Frederick Moore, 216. City Executive Committee—W. A. Westphal, 215; William Newcorn, 266; F. R. Vanderhoff, 59; Wallace Vail, 60; Jacob Krincy, 54; Herman Weber, 63; Isaac S. Randolph, 54. City Executive Committee—Jacob Krincy, 56; Herman A. Weber, 58; Charles Van Winkle, 57.

THEATRICAL.

Manager Daly announces that the next attraction at Music Hall will be the "New Peck's Bad Boy," which will appear Thursday evening, with the usual matinees. The manager has had the play entirely rewritten and improved. The specialties are said to be bright and catchy and the singing is particularly strong.

Obstructing Sidewalks.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—Did you see the unsightly advertising boards on Saturday that encroached on the sidewalk at the curb line in front of one of Plainfield's recent cutrate grocers? I ask The Press, which appears to be the people's paper, to call the attention of Street Commissioner Meeker to the nuisance if it appears again. Other merchants, who are residents of Plainfield, are not allowed, or have not been in the past, to encroach on the sidewalks with anything connected with their business, and this firm should be called to account for this violation of the city ordinance.

Fair Play.

Croup is a terror to young mothers. To post them concerning the first symptoms, and treatment is the object of this item. The first indication of croup is hoarseness. In a child who is subject to croup it may be taken as a sure sign of the approach of an attack. The following hoarseness is a peculiar rough cough. If Chamberlain's Cough remedy is given as soon as the child becomes hoarse or even after the rough cough has appeared it will prevent the attack. It has never been known to fail. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds' pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

District Meeting.

A district meeting of the Knights of Pythias will be held Thursday evening in the rooms of Goodwill Lodge, No. 101, at Scotch Plains, to nominate a district deputy grand chancellor. Perseverence and Unity Lodges of this city will be well represented. The delegates will go both by train and stage.

Buried When the Letter Was Received.

FIFTY YEARS TOGETHER.

MR. AND MRS. WM. L. SMALLEY, SR., ENJOY A GOLDEN WEDDING.

The Anniversary Celebrated by the Gathering of a Large Number of Friends and Relatives Who Congratulate the Couple.

The half-century milestone in the married life of Mr. and Mrs. William L. Smalley, Sr., was celebrated last Tuesday at their home on Craig place in a pleasant manner.

During the evening a large circle of relatives and friends gathered to congratulate the host and hostess and wish them many years of prosperity and health.

The rooms were beautifully decorated with roses and smilax. In one corner of the parlor, beneath a circle of beautiful smilax, sat the honored twain, where they received the congratulations of all. The bride and groom, as they were frequently called, looked as happy as the day when at the altar they promised to live for each other through joy and sorrow.

The table in the dining room presented a pretty picture, tastefully decorated with roses and smilax, while two large banquet lamps shed their light on the golden streamers that were gracefully suspended from the ceiling. There was a lack of formality that was really delightful and genuine sociability was the rule.

It was a delight of each one present to make the event one of rare success and it can truly be said that the object was accomplished.

During the evening the guests were served with an excellent supper, after which the young people, as well as a few older ones, enjoyed dancing, music for which was furnished by Guttman.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Edward Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Asbury King, Westfield; Mr. and Mrs. J. Irving, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Irving, Mr. and Mrs. David Irving, Cranford; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Lewis, Newark; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hayes, Liberty Corner; Miss Minnie Ammerman, Madison; Mr. and Mrs. J. Hayden, Loganville; Mrs. Ludlow, Bedminister; Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Carman, Dr. and Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, Mr. and Mrs. T. S. Armstrong, Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, Mr. and Mrs. A. Willett, Mr. and Mrs. D. I. Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Woodruff, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Vail, Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Demarest, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Demarest, Mrs. D. I. Smalley, Miss Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. Newton Honeyman, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Cooney, Mr. and Mrs. John Valiant, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Boss, Mrs. Isaac Brokaw, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Brokaw, Miss Grace Palmer, Mr. and Mrs. David W. King, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Smalley, Mr. and Mrs. J. Burrows, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Manning, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Leader, Mr. and Mrs. R. I. Tolles, Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Arnold, Miss Emma Gillem, Mrs. Cadmus, George DeMeza, Charles McNabb, Frank Smalley, John McLaughlin, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Smalley, Miss Lizzie Smalley, Jedediah Smalley, J. H. Van Winkle, Sr., Mrs. D. J. Yerkes, and Harry Vail.

The very large number of handsome presents received was fitting testimony to the high esteem in which Mr. and Mrs. Smalley are held by their friends.

EXTENSION MEANS A NEW BRIDGE.

Both City and Borough People Will Want a Good Structure.

There is a considerable amount of interest being evienced by large bridge builders throughout the country in regard to the bridge that will sooner or later span Green brook on the Watchung avenue extension. The freeholders from both Union and Somerset counties will be expected to place a bridge at that point that will be substantial and stand the heavy travel that will naturally pass over that thoroughfare, and the residents of both counties will want a structure that will be a credit to them. As the freeholders are men of ability and good judgment they can be relied upon to do that which is to the very best interest of both communities.

Henry Wilson, the postmaster at Welshton, Florida, says he cured a case of diarrhœa of long standing in six hours, with one small bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. What a pleasant surprise that must have been to the sufferer. Such cures are not unusual with this remedy. In many instances only one or two doses are required to give permanent relief. It can always be depended upon. When reduced with water it is pleasant to take. For sale at Reynolds' pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

A SUPPER FOR THE VICTORS.

THE REDS HAD A JOLLY GOOD TIME LAST NIGHT.

Y. M. C. A. Members Eat, Talk and Make Merry—Two of the Defeated Ones Present—What the Toasts Were.

To the victor belongs the spoils in the political arena, and to the victors in the membership contest of the Y. M. C. A. belonged the supper which was served in the association building Tuesday by the Ladies Nine. It was a merry and good-natured crowd of young men and young old men who sat around the tables and ate and regaled one another with stories and listened to the witty remarks of those who responded to the toasts after the ladies had finished serving the good things.

They were all victors—all but two, and these two were as blue men as ever lived. George R. Cornwell, captain of the men who worked hard but whose results were just sixty-four less than those of their opponents, was one of the blue men, and the other was H. O. Newman, and—well, without them no event in the association is complete.

They were not blue in the sense that they were sad and downcast, but they were simply designated as the representatives of this hue because their friends, the enemy, and chosen red and had won.

After the hundred or more red men had enjoyed the repast and heard two selections by Prof. Conde's orchestra, President Murray, in the capacity of toast-master, arose and in a few introductory words set the ball rolling, figuratively speaking, in the line of speaking. Prof. MacPhie, who marshaled the winning side, was called upon to the toast of "The Side That Won, or the Value of Athletics in a Contest." His words were mostly of a humorous nature, though inculcated in them was a quaint line of philosophy that was enjoyed hugely by his hearers.

Here President Murray was compelled to leave the post of toast-master, owing to a previous engagement, and Curtis M. Thorpe was called to preside at the head of the table. Mr. Thorpe was slower to respond to the toast of "Our Members," but in his place he called on Howard Leggett, who succeeded in getting more members for the winning side than anyone else. With funny anecdotes Mr. Leggett illustrated how he did it. "A Short Man," sixty-four short, was the way he was scheduled on the programme, was called on in the heretofore ubiquitous personality of George R. Cornwell, who had been doing the "Jack Horner plum pie in the corner" act, and he arose—that is what there was of him, for he candidly admitted that he was a short man, but naively remarked that the section from which he hailed a man was measured not from his shoulders down but from the shoulders up. So he passed and in the parlance of the stage made a decided hit with his talk. With a total absence of that vacant feeling around the stomach and the sight of two or three hundred soiled dishes before them the men realized more than ever that it is a young men's association, only by the assistance of the young ladies, and thus knew that the subject of "The Ladies Who Entertain Us" was one of the most important to be heard. Rev. C. E. Herring responded to the toast in a fitting manner, worked in a few ludicrous tales and paid a tribute to the genius of a woman who knows best how to satisfy the inner man.

H. O. Newman followed in a few words on "The Financial Results of the Contest," which had brought in 118 new members and increased the treasury materially so that the officers felt greatly encouraged to go ahead in the work for young men.

The music of Prof. Conde and his orchestra of young men was greatly appreciated and applauded by those who enjoyed its sweet strains.

The Ladies Nine, who served the supper, consisted of Mrs. Jos. Gavett, Mrs. Henry Rankin, Mrs. Roger Murray, Mrs. Stephen Struthers, Mrs. Frank Clawson, the Misses Thorne, Mrs. Harry Manning and Miss Ethel Holmes.

After the speaking had been finished congratulatory of the success of the contest, another movement was inaugurated which was a novel, and which will probably be a most successful one. It is termed the "Get One" movement, the modus operandi of which is that every member of the association who gets one new member will be entitled to membership to the "Get One" club, and to a supper which will be served to the ones who get one before the first of January.

A FIGHT FOR A LIFE.

CRAIG A. MARSH USES STRONG ARGUMENTS FOR FREEHILL.

He Questions the Right of the Court to Try the Case, But Is Overruled—Considerable Trouble to Get a Jury.

The trial of Frank Freehill, murderer of Officer Alfred Jewell at Rahway, was commenced at Elizabeth Tuesday. Before the jurors were called Craig A. Marsh, of the counsel for the prisoner, challenged the jurisdiction of the Court as constituted. He held that the constitution intended that homicide trials should be before a Supreme Court justice, and that the present Court was acting under color of right given by a law of '94, which Mr. Marsh held was not constitutional.

In raising this question of jurisdiction, Mr. Marsh desired the Court to understand that he meant no discourtesy, but in a capital case, having been assigned to defend the life of the prisoner, it was his duty to take advantage of every right of law.

Mr. Marsh also challenged the panel of jury as being in excess of the statutory number, forty-eight. The Court had drawn sixty jurors, and it was the prisoner's right to have a panel of forty eight selected men served upon him.

Judge McCormick overruled the objections of the counsel for the defense. He said the private opinion of members of the court and bar as to the constitutionality of the law had no bearing in the case. He said that Mr. Marsh was justified in making these motions, and the Court would not have considered him a good lawyer if he did not do everything he could in behalf of his client. The Court was perfectly satisfied that Mr. Marsh stood high in his profession, otherwise he would not have appointed him.

Considerable time was taken in the selection of a jury. All who were called were examined as to whether they were related to the dead man, whether they had formed any opinion as to the innocence or guilt of the defendant, or had conscientious scruples against capital punishment.

Hon. Henry Clauss was the second juror called. He was examined and said he was a member of the Grand Jury, and voted for the indictment against Freehill. He was challenged by the defense for cause, and the Court sustained the challenge.

The jurors accepted were: Chas. B. Pierce, foreman; Randolph Drake, Henry Wilke, William Ayer, George N. Potter, Edward Burnett, Samuel Nichols, Thomas E. Seymour, George W. Caitins, George A. Meddaugh, John J. Slifer, John J. Ludlow.

It was after 12 o'clock when the panel of jurors had been accepted, and Prosecutor Marsh opened the case for the State, reviewing the story of the crime.

BROOKLYN TALENT.

A Professor Leaves the Dead Languages and Gives Lively Music.

Last Monday about 130 friends of the Christian Endeavor society of the Crescent Avenue church met with the society to enjoy an evening of social discourse. The first of the evening was taken up with an interesting and pleasing entertainment. Wm. Edwards, professor of Greek and Latin in the Boys High School of Brooklyn, and Mr. Evans, of Plainfield, were present. During the programme, which was made up as the entertainment progressed, Mr. Evans gave several whistling selections that were excellent and enjoyed by all.

Everybody was well pleased that Mr. Edwards had left his Greek and Latin in Brooklyn and had only brought to them some of his musical skill. Mr. Edwards' music is all of his own composition and is entirely of the humorous style. His compositions are of a nature peculiar to himself.

The committee in charge was Dr. B. VanD. Hedges, chairman; Peter Neuman, E. Irving Oakley, J. E. Kimball, and the Misses Sadie H. Hunter, Katharine M. Wood, Sophie W. Brower, Susie Davies and Marion P. Bower.

W. A. McGuire, a well known citizen of McKay, Ohio, is of the opinion that there is nothing as good for children troubled with colds or croup as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He has used it in his family for several years with the best results and always keeps a bottle of it in the house. After having la grippe he was himself troubled with a severe cough. He used other remedies without benefit and then concluded to try the children's medicine and to his delight it soon effected a permanent cure. 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. THE DREAMER.

He loves to watch the waves at play
Long up the rocks with ceaseless roar
And see their smoky, showering spray
Dissolve in pearls along the shore.

The western sky is dear to him
When rosy day with twilight blends
And on the ocean's purple rim
The sun, a globe of flame, descends.

The white clouds sailing in the blue,
The white stars peering through the night,
He loves, because they bring to view
The fringes of the infinite.

He hears the music of the skies,
The lullaby of ocean, the songs of birds,
And vainly tries to crystallize
His soul's rich harmonies into words.

And wandering in the autumn woods,
Far from the sight of human face,
His fancy fills the solitudes
With shapes of beauty and of grace.

What boots his idle dreams to those
Who with unconquerable will
Toil from the dawn till day's close
To keep the world from standing still?

He smiles and says his dreaming tends
To show the beauty of design,
To share men's lives to noble ends
And draw them nearer the divine.

MOHAMMED'S VENGEANCE.

His Cruel Butchery of the Jewish Inhabitants of Medina.

Of Mohammed's cruelty and treachery one example will suffice out of many, all based on the same principle of hatred. The Jews in Medina stirred up his fiercest vindictiveness by their exposure of his impudent appeals to forged quotations from their Scriptures and by the force of his mission. Some of them, including two women, even dared to satirize his pretensions in clever pasquinades. For these affronts Mohammed, when he triumphed, determined to take a signal revenge.

Marching stealthily on the Jewish quarter, he surrounded the Jews, who offered no other than the condition of being allowed to leave Medina forever. But he insisted on surrender at discretion and was able to enforce his terms. He slaughtered all the men to death, and the women and children to slavery. Some of his own people pleaded for mercy, but he was relentless. His sentence, he declared, was the judgment of the Most High God, pronounced in the highest heaven, and therefore irrevocable. The prophet himself personally directed the digging of the trenches in which they were to receive the bodies of the slain. That finished, the tragedy began.

The Jews, with their hands tied behind their backs, were led up in parties of five or six to the fatal trenches, forced to kneel down and were then beheaded and their bodies flung into the pits prepared for them. The butchery went on throughout the day and was continued for some time after sunset under the glare of torches, Mohammed himself looking on at the spectacle. Eight hundred adult Jews perished, while 1,000 women and children were reduced to slavery. Two hundred of these were given to the prophet by divine "revelation," and he sold them into slavery, with the exception of one beautiful Jewess, by name Rihana, whom he retained as a concubine. Rihana and the other of being made one of his wives having failed to make her forsake the religion of her fathers.—Quarterly Review.

Pseudo Tomb of Mary and Lazarus.

In a recent issue of The Journal of the German Palestine society, Professor Gelzer of Jena addresses an interesting note stone discovered at Cesarea, in Palestine, and which first appeared in Le Revue Biblique, published at Jerusalem. The inscription reads: "Monument belonging to (or dedicated to) Mary and Lazarus." The language is Greek, and the inscription dates from the fourth or fifth century. The original editors, the Dominicans of Jerusalem, thought that it was merely a monument of two persons by the names of Mary and Lazarus. Gelzer, however, is of opinion that the Biblical persons of these names were intended, especially also in view of the fact that Mary's name precedes that of Lazarus, and he draws attention to the fact that in the second half of the fourth and in the first half of the fifth century, the discovery of apostles' and prophets' tombs was a flourishing and manifestly also a lucrative branch of industry." At that period it was claimed that the bodies of Joseph, Samuel, Zacharias, John the Baptist, and other Biblical men were found, and many of these pseudo relics were transported to the capital city of Christendom, Constantinople. It is not impossible that at this period also the pretended remains of the sister and brother from Bethany were transported to Cesarea, which in the ante-Chalcedonian period—that is, down to 451—was the metropolitan center of the church in Palestine.

Bags' Count.

"I can't tell you any stories about myself," said D. G. Edwards, general passenger agent of the C., H. & D., "but I'll recall one about a conductor on the name of Bags. It was about 14 years ago. The Bee line and the Indianapolis and St. Louis were running independently, but the Bee line was behind in the other. One day there was a great cleaning out among the passenger conductors on account of some alleged irregularities and Bags was promoted from a freight to a passenger conductor. Union City, Ind., was then the dining station, and one of the duties of the passenger conductors was to telegraph ahead and inform them at Union City of the number of persons that might be expected for the meals. The situation was a trying one, but Bags rose up to the occasion. He thought he might like a meal himself, so this is what he telegraphed:

"'Thirteen passengers without Bags, 14 with Bags.'

"The people at the dining station didn't know what difference the bags made in the calculation, but they knew that 13 and 14 make 27, and meals for 27 were in readiness. But the wording of Bags' message underwent some improvement on the next occasion and was less ambiguous."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

THE POET'S DAY.

The poet's day is different from another,
Though he doth count each man his own heart's brother.
So crystal clear the air that he looks through
It gives each color an intenser hue.
Each bush doth burn and every flower flame.
The stars are mighty. Silence breathes a name.
The world wherein he wanders, dreams and sings
Thrills with the beating of invisible wings,
And all day long he hears from hidden birds
The multitudinous laughter of sweet words.

NORDAU'S ERRORS.

Lombroso Tells Where the Author of "Degeneration" Goes Astray.

Even though aberrant from a new and just position, Nordau has gone astray.

Convinced of the scope of the new psychiatric weapon which he had in his hands, he has so far overshot the mark as to impair the effect of his purpose. More allesist than the allenists, he no sooner finds a neurotic or maddish author than he thinks his work itself demonstrated. Thus, after having demonstrated by a very subtle analysis that in Wagner the philosophic ideas constituting life are contradictory or anathematic as the ideas of the struggle between the flesh and the soul or between the spirit and the senses—he concludes that Wagner was therefore crazy and not a genius. Likewise, because of Tolstoi's mysticism or his destructive ideas on love and science, he deems Tolstoi insane and his books nonsense.

But probably all geniuses have the eccentricities and even the delirious ideas which he notices in Tolstoi, Wagner and Ibsen. The author of Goethe's "Walpurgis Nacht Meister" is more incomprehensible and extravagant than the ideas of Tolstoi, while Balzac's scientific opinions and his immaterial views will find analogies in the literature of insane asylums. To demonstrate that geniuses are insane is not difficult, because, as I and others before me have said, genius is a form of degenerative neurosis. Certainly Poictevin, Mallarme and Ghil are degenerates and even mattoids. Tolstoi, Wagner and Swinburne may be considered neurotic, but in addition to the qualities just named, and which belong to the ordinary insane, they have genius. This is what Nordau has too frequently forgotten. Degeneration, for one who follows my theories instead of destroying, fortified the diagnosis which proves them to be neurosis and enlarges the range, because only the mediocre have not maddish forms, for the very reason that they lack fecund originality, which is the basis of genius.

The man of genius is a man who does better than his contemporaries and in a different way. He is therefore an abnormal being, an exception. He is different from his environment. He is not completely sane as to his intellect. He has many physiological and psychological blemishes. He is afflicted either by the delirium of persecution, or by megalomania, or by religious delirium, more often psychic epilepsy.—Cesare Lombroso, in Century.

Hard to Read.

It is said that Jules Janin, the celebrated French writer and critic, was noted for the illegibility of his handwriting. It was so bad as to be a perfect nightmare to the printers, and only two compositors out of the whole staff of Le Journal des Debats were able to read it.

When he contributed to any other periodical, he was always forced to dictate his work to some Janin, who wrote an excellent hand.

One day he wrote a letter to a friend, who, after much pondering and squinting, managed to decipher two or three words, which made him think that his correspondent must be Janin. He immediately started for the writer's home at Passy.

"Ah, here you are!" exclaimed Janin joyfully, as he welcomed him. "You have read my letter?"

"Not at all," replied his friend, with a smile. "I have received it and I've brought it for you to read it to me."

"Well," said Janin doubtfully, "I'll try."

Janin was not malicious, but occasionally he would say a severe thing, as if it were wrung from him without his being able to hold it back. One day a rich but ill natured man, who made sad havoc of the French language, called upon Janin, and began a long and quite some trivial matter in execrable French.

"What do you mean, M. Janin?" demanded the man angrily. "I don't understand you. I can't speak Latin."

"Try, sir, try!" cried the great critic. "You could not do worse than you do French."—Youth's Companion.

Cocoanuts.

The word cocoanut is derived from the Portuguese "coco," meaning monkey, because the base resembles a monkey's face. The tree was known to the people of Ceylon as early as 100 B. C., the milk being used by them for making cement. The cocoanut is one of the most useful of plants—root, trunk, leaf, sap and nut are made to yield tribute to man. The fiber of the husk furnishes excellent yarn and is preferred to horsehair for stuffing beds, cushions and carriages. It is stronger and more elastic than hemp. The Polynesians twist small cords of this fiber, which serve in the construction of house and canoes that no European would employ nails. The green nuts are prized for medicinal use. Grated cocoanut forms an ingredient in the Indian condiment curry. Much of the Maldive Island labor is usually paid for in cocoanuts.—New York World.

A Gigantic Gasometer.

The largest and most costly gasometer in the world stands in the London suburb of East Greenwich. When full, it contains 19,000,000 cubic feet of gas. It is 190 feet high, 300 feet in diameter and weighs something like over 2,000 tons. Its cost, exclusive of excavation, was a sum equal to $300,000 in United States money. Experiment has proven that it takes about 1,200 tons of the best gas coal to fill this immense tank with gas.—St. Louis Republic.

His Fountain of Youth.

An anecdote of the historian Michelet, newly told but good enough to be old, concerns a friend who said to him, "How young you are in spite of your gray hairs!" For a reply the old author, whom 50 years of literary work had not exhausted, turned to his writing table and pointed to a long inkstand, explained, "There is my fountain of youth!"

In some southern localities the colored people believe that if a crow croaks an odd number of times, foul weather will follow; if even, the day will be fine.

Trust him little who praises all; him less who censures all, and him least who is indifferent to all.—Lavater.

THE RUNYON-ROSS MARRIAGE

HAPPY NUPTIAL EVENT CELEBRATED ON LAGRANDE AVENUE.

The marriage of Miss Carrie Ross, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Ross, of East Sixth street and Franklin place, to Frank Runyon, of Stelton, was performed yesterday afternoon at two o'clock at the home of the bride's parents by Rev. Dr. Richards.

The bride and groom were attended by the bride's cousin, Miss Margery Ross, who acted as flower girl. The bride was becoming in a brown travelling gown and carried white roses. The flower girl wore a gown of pink and carried red roses.

A short informal reception was held after the ceremony, after which Mr. and Mrs. Runyon left on the 3:12 train for New York. From there they will go south for two weeks.

On their return they will reside at Stelton.

Among those present were: Mr. Runyon, father of the groom, of Stelton; Jeptha Runyon and family, of Newark; Ephriam Runyon and family, of Jersey City; Runyon Walker, grandfather of the bride, of New Market; Louis Ross and family, Arthur Runyon and family, Mr. and Mrs. Burr, Mr. and Mrs. John Ross, Milford Giles and others.

LOOKING AFTER CHARITY.

District Committee of the Organized Aid Hold a Meeting.

There was a fair attendance at the meeting of the District Committee of the Citizens Organized Aid Association last night in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church.

Rev. G. Kennedy Newell presided and D. P. Hall acted as secretary.

One case of charity was discussed where the person was receiving help from several sources.

Eleven cases were reported investigated during the past three weeks and referred to the proper persons. This makes 459 cases investigated and referred since the organization was started.

The fact that the Relief Association building is quarantined, hampers in a measure the work in that department.

The balance of the evening was occupied with routine business.

The New York and New Jersey Bridge.

Secretary Swan of the New York and New Jersey Bridge Company says that work on the detail plans for the bridge are being rapidly pushed. The plans must be filed with the Secretary of War, and the bridge people are anxiously waiting for the Sinking Fund Commission to make the location of the approach in the city of New York. The location of the approaches by the commission practically decides the matter. Secretary Swan said that work on the bridge should have been begun before this. "The fog that we are having," said he, "shows the necessity for a bridge over the Hudson River; safety of the people demands it."

For Music Lovers.

George Jenkins deserves the support of the music loving public in providing such a good entertainment as that of last Thursday night. The banjo work of Dore, Farmer and Dore, was well worth the price of admission. They bring real music out of that instrument which many musicians regard as having no capacity for sweet sounds. The Metropolitan Quartette of male voices rendered some excellent music and Josh Daly was an entertainment in himself. Altogether the concert was a success and the hall was crowded despite the rain pour. — Somerville Unionist-Gazette.

A Successful Building Association.

The State Mutual Building and Loan Association of New Jersey, in its report sent to this office shows loans amounting to $17,950 and a yearly profit of over 12 per cent apportioned to its 39,569 shares. This is one of the largest building associations in New Jersey. the State Bureau of Statistics shows it to stand first in number of shares and third in assets, among 396 associations.

An Example for Plainfield.

A young ladies' gymnasium class has been formed in Elizabeth and the meeting was held on Wednesday afternoon in the Elizabeth Athletic Club's gymnasium. Over thirty young women were present, and much interest was shown.

Second Operation.

Owing to peculiar circumstances Drs. Zeglio and Long found it necessary to perform a second operation yesterday on Fred Townsend, of Coddington avenue. It was entirely successful and hopes for his speedy recovery are entertained.

IMPROVED PHONOGRAPH.

The Power to be Furnished by a Coiled Spring Instead of a Motor.

J. Van Eps, of Park avenue, has just completed a new phonograph which has several improvements on any one previously constructed. The power, instead of being furnished from an electric motor, is given by a large coiled steel spring. The phonograph is a very fine one, its tone being especially clear and perfect, the usual scratching and rattling being absent.

Among the other novel features are a special index for speed, and adjustible arrangement for regulating the volume of the tone.

A WOMAN BEFORE HIS HONOR.

An Inebriated Woman Anchors West Fourth Street Residents.

The police net this morning only had one victim in its meshes and that one was a woman. Word was received yesterday afternoon by Chief Grant that there was a disturbance on Liberty, west of the Central, and the Chief and Sergeant Kiely took a carriage at once for the scene of the trouble. On the doorstep of a house on West Fourth street, near Liberty, the found rather a slight built woman amusing a crowd by her drunken antics. She followed the officers without resistance and was lodged in the lockup. She had nohing to say this morning and paid $10 in preference to a stay of thirty days in the county jail.

DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Elizabeth Local Union of Brotherhood of St. Andrew Meet in this City.

The Elizabeth Local Council of the Brotherhood of St Adrew held a special conference at the church of the Redeemer last evening. Dean Rodman opened the meeting with prayer and then after a hymn, James W. A. Smith, of Elizabeth, president of the Council, introduced the speakers of the evening. Mr. Bonnett, of Elizabeth, who was to introduce the subject of the meeting, "Our Duties," was not present and A. T. Pendleton, of Elizabeth, was called upon to do it. Mr. Bonnett arrived late and spoke as did also Robert Pierce, and Rev. Dr. Sleeper, of Elizabeth, and Rev. Dr. Johnstone, of this city.

Rehearsals Progressing.

The Choral Society are making steady progress with their weekly rehearsals and the members are enthusiastic in their efforts to excell all previous efforts. Especially noteworthy is the "Midsummer Nights Dream" which is being rehearsed with great care and full orchestral accompaniment and readings. Plainfield will have the opportunity as a result, of listening to a concert which will be the finest ever given in this city.

Back From the Sunny South.

Mrs. Florence Howe Hall has just returned from the south, where she attended the General Federation of Women's Clubs, at Atlanta, and the Association for the Advancement of Women, at New Orleans, in company with her mother, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe. Both ladies were received with great courtesy and kindness in the sunny south.

New Bakery Firm.

The bakery at 138 North avenue, formerly occupied by Mrs. Walker, has been purchased by Messrs. John G. Stevens and Charles B. Overbaugh, and will be conducted by them as a first-class bakery in all respects. The store and fixtures are to be remodeled and made modern in all appointments. Notice of their opening will appear in the columns of The Daily Press.

Miss Moran Resigns to Marry.

Miss Julia Moran, who for the past three or four years has been the faithful assistant operator at the Western Union telegraph office in this city, will resign her position tomorrow. On Wednesday, November 27th, Miss Moran will be married to Robert De-Vine, a New York operator, living in Elizabeth. The ceremony will take place at Elizabeth.

Valuable Plans Found.

The set of plans belonging to Clum & Lanecaster, the architects, which were lost at the North avenue station Saturday afternoon, were returned Tuesday afternoon, by A. C. Lazzi, of Dunellen, who found them on his way home. They were uninjured.

Want to Become Citizens.

Charles B. Johnson and Ernest Webery, both of 446 West Third street, have applied to the Union County Court of Common Pleas for naturalization papers.

FOSTER M. VOORHEES' AMBITION.

He Announces Himself as a Candidate for President of the Senate.

Senator Foster M. Voorhees is now a candidate for the Presidency of the next Republican Senate. This is official. Mr. Voorhees informed a Newark News reporter at noon yesterday of his intention. He will not seek a re-election next year, he says, to the Senate, and he wants the crowning honor of retiring from political life as President of the Senate.

He is not a candidate for any of the positions in the gift of Governor Griggs and all talk to the contrary he declares to be false.

Mr. Voorhees said his name had been spoken of, he understood, in connection with certain offices, notably that of Chancellor Clerk, but while the latter was a fine position, and he could carry on his law practice if he held it, he was in no sense a candidate for this or any other office in the gift of the incoming Governor.

"I am afraid," remarked the Senator, laughingly, "that if I should aspire to any of these places, the people would say that Voorhees was only in politics, like others, for just what he could get out of it financially."

Continuing, the Senator said that for a time he thought he would like to take the leadership on the floor of the Senate Chamber, but he had changed his mind since then, and his sole ambition at present is to secure the presidency of that body.

CRACKED THE EDITOR'S SAFE.

But Only Secured a Few Confederate Bills as Booty.

The petty depredations which have been so numerously committed in the vicinity of Dunellen of late were continued last night by the wholesale.

The depot at West Dunellen was first entered, but here nothing of value was found and just to show that they had been there threw the drinking water tanks out into the road. They proceeded up the road and stopped at the blacksmith shop of I. Stites where the windows were smashed and an entrance effected into the shop. A drill and sledge hammer was stolen from his set of tools. Their next move stamps them as amateurs or else know little of human nature, for they tackled the office of Editor Day's Dunellen Call. The tools they had purloined were used to good advantage and the safe cracked. Their reward consisted of only a few confederate bills.

The prowlers also broke into the section house and stole several pike.

Elizabeth Temperance People Want Excise Violators Punished.

Considerable agitation has been begun in Elizabeth over the fact that nearly all the saloons were kept open on election day contrary to law. One of the local papers has begun a crusade against the Mayor and the police for allowing the saloons to be open. Last night Mayor Rankin called at the office of the paper, and after a stormy scene ordered his paper stopped. The violations of the liquor traffic in Elizabeth have excited much comment. Friday night the Christian Citizenship Union sent a letter to the Board of Excise informing them of the continued Sunday violation of the liquor business by a certain saloonkeeper, who, it is said, keeps his saloon open Sundays and all legal holidays.

Good Time For Little Ones.

A social gathering of young people was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Carney on Craig place last evening. The affair was arranged by Addie Carney and Tiny Voehl. During the evening John Carney entertained the young folks with comic German sayings. Refreshments were served during the evening by those who arranged the social.

For Defeated as Well as Victorious.

The rally of the Christian Endeavor delegates at the First Baptist church Thursday evening, November 21st, will be a novel affair. In the basement of the church tables will be arranged to form the letters "C E." Four delegates from each church will serve as waitresses. In view of the fact that Paterson did not get the '96 convention, her delegates have been invited to participate in the rally.

A New Departure in Bread Food.

The Hygienic Food Company of Orange, N. J., are making the finest whole wheat bread (brown) in the world. Recommended by physicians. It is delicate, delicious and exceedingly nourishing. Try it. All first-class grocers, or delivered from our wagons direct in Plainfield daily.

Bridge Finished.

The contractors have completed the building of the Clinton Avenue iline bridge over Green brook, and the Boards of Freeholders of this and Somerset counties have the satisfaction of knowing that they have a good substantial structure.

FOSTER M. VOORHEES' ABILITY AS A LITERARY MAN.

A Sound Thinker Was Lost in the Death of A. D. Mellick, Jr.

The Somerville Unionist-Gazette of yesterday contains a three-column review of the life, character and literary work of the late Andrew D. Mellick, Jr., of this city, from the pen of A. V. D. Honeyman, of North Plainfield, a former editor of that enterprising journal. The following, showing Mr. Mellick's range of reading and as expressive of his rare characteter, is extracted:

"Mr. Mellick was an omnivorous reader. There was nothing in the general range of human knowledge about which he did not possess some information. He liked philosophy. He cared little for poetry; he was too practical. Historical works were his chief delight. After American history, English and French had the greater charms. The twelve large volumes of Froude's History of England had been read through aloud to him during the past year, and he expressed the highest appreciation of the literary merit, though fully conscious of the prejudices of the author. With works of fiction by noted authors, he was also fully acquainted, though this class of reading was only a pastime; he reserved his more serious moments for deeper works.

"His was a case where intellect and strength of will triumphed over disease and achieved a greater victory than has death. During a decade and a half of years of bodily suffering, at innumerable times most intense, he invariably carried in his soul and on his face the sweet, calm, conquering philosophy of those best of ancient Athenians who held with Socrates: 'There can no evil befall a good man, whether he be alive or dead, nor are his affairs uncared for by the gods.' We hear of men like him, who in a more public way, in the ages of chivalry, have stirred up the devotion of friends and the regard of foes by great physical bravery, but he had more than this; he had not only the heroism to endure pain without murmuring, but he exhibited daily the tender and infinite patience which we usually associate only with the lives of angelic women."

Why Is This?

To the Editor of The Daily Press:

As I am a resident of Plainfield and the owner of property I wish to make a few remarks. Years ago when our street was in such a condition and we had no help from the city we, at our own expense, had the street macadamized. Then when the sewerage was laid the stones that we paid for out of our pockets were taken away and now, instead of replacing the stones, they are filling up with ashes. Hoping matters will kindly be looked into East Second Street.

Health Board Finds a Nuisance.

The Board of Health of Union township blames the Union county Board of Freeholders for a nuisance at Aldene and threatens to sue the board if the nuisance is not abated. It is caused by the stopping of an old water course that flowed under the country road at this point. The freeholders built a bridge across the road and over the stream, and a wall at the end of the bridge has blocked the flow of water and caused a big cesspool to form alongside the county road.

CENTURY FOR THE COMING YEAR.

The Century Magazine celebrates its quarter-centennial in its November issue with an "Anniversary Number." In honor of the occasion it dons a new dress of type, with new headings, etc., and it appears in a new and artistic cover. Although The Century has reached an age that is unusual among American magazines, it continues to show the youthful vigor and enterprise that have always characterized it. The programme that has been arranged for the coming year contains a number of interesting features. Much has already been written concerning Mrs. Humphry Ward's new novel, "Sir George Tressady," which has been secured for its pages. There was a very spirited bidding for this novel on the part of several prominent publishers, with the result that the author will probably realize from the serial and book rights of it one of the largest sums that has yet been given for a work of fiction in the English language. It will be the leading feature in fiction for the coming twelve months, other and shorter novels being contributed by W. D. Howells, F. Hopkinson Smith, Mary Hallock Foote, Amelia E. Barr. There will also be contributions from Mark Twain and Rudyard Kipling (the latter furnishing to the Christmas Century one of the most powerful stories he has ever written); a series of articles on the great naval engagements of Nelson, by Captain Alfred T. Mahan, author of "Influence of Sea Power upon History"; three brilliant articles on Rome, contributed by Marion Crawford, and superbly illustrated by Castaigne, who made the famous World's Fair pictures in The Century; a series of articles by George Kennan, author of "Siberia and the Exile System," on the Mountains and the Mountaineers of the Eastern Caucasus, describing a little-known people; articles by Henry M. Stanley and the late E. J. Glave on Africa; a series of papers on "The Administration of the Cities of the United States," by Dr. Albert Shaw. The Century will also contain during the year a great number of papers on art subjects, richly illustrated.

Prof Sloane's "Life of Napoleon," with its wealth of illustration, will reach its most interesting part,—the rise of the conqueror to the height of his power, and his final overthrow and exile. In order that new subscribers may obtain the whole of this monumental work, the publishers have made a rate of $5.00, for which one can have a year's subscription from November, '95, and all of the numbers for the past twelve months, from the beginning of Prof. Sloane's history.

IN HONOR OF CUPID'S EVENT.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gray Happily Surprised Last Evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gray, of La Grande avenue, were given a complete surprise at their home last evening in honor of their recent marriage. The affair was arranged by A. Moore and J. Tait, and was a great success. When the surprisers arrived, Mr. and Mrs. Gray were speechless, as they had heard nothing of the event.

The jolly party brought their own music and soon all were enjoying themselves with dancing. During the evening a vocal duett was rendered by David McInnes and William Hicking, and Miss Kittie Dickson favored the guests with a vocal solo, as did also Miss McInnes.

Those in the party included the Misses Radie and Etta Johnson, Tiny McInnes, Caroline Thompson, Kittie Dickson, Reta McInnes, Fanny Hayolen, Nora Churchill, Agnes Head, Lavina and Emma Rushton, Nellie Crook, Mr. and Mrs. A. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. William Crook, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Rushton, Mr. and Mrs. William Gray, Fred Robinson, David McInnes, Thomas Scully, Herbert Davis, John Coster, Thomas Gilmore, John Lindstrom, Hugh J. Gray, William Hickings, Joseph Moore and Fred Crook.

Entertained at Whist.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. McClintock, of East Fifth street, entertained a number of their friends very pleasantly with progressive whist last evening. Mrs. H. W. Marshall and Mrs. J. E. McClintock tied for first feminine prize and Mrs. Marshall won on the cut. S. B. Cutter was first among the men. Mrs. B. D. Newell and Mr. Caldwell won the consolation prizes. After the game, refreshments were served, and the rest of the evening was spent in conversation and music.

A Fair Planned.

About sixteen members of the Queen Esther Band of Grace M. E. church met at the home of Mrs. Powell on Grandview avenue yesterday afternoon, and planned to hold a fair at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Valiant on Craig place, during the week before Christmas. Last year in a similar effort the band made $63. The proceeds this year will be devoted to missionary interests.

John Rickert Home.

John Rickert, after an absence of several weeks from home, returned this morning.

ST. NICHOLAS IN 1896.

For almost quarter of a century—for twenty-two years, to be exact—St. Nicholas Magazine has been bearing its welcome messages each month to the young people of the land. It began existence in 1873, consolidating with it in its early years all of the leading children's periodicals of that day, "The Little Corporal," "Children's Hour," "The School-Day Magazine," and "Our Young Folks" among them. The last children's magazine to be merged in St. Nicholas was "Wide Awake" which was purchased and consolidated with it only a few years ago. It has been fortunate in securing contributions for its pages from the leading writers and artists of the language, while it has given to its readers many works that have become imperishable classics in juvenile literature. St. Nicholas has had for many years a large circulation in Europe, and it is said to be read by many royal children. When the children of the Prince of Wales' family were young the Prince took six copies for his household, and the present Crown Prince of Italy grew up a constant reader of St. Nicholas.

The magazine is a help to those that have the care and up-bringing of children, in that it is full of brightness and interest and tends to cultivate high asperations, without being "preachy" and prosy and lugging in too apparent moralizing. Its readers are always loyal to it, and they will be glad to learn what has been provided for their delectation during the coming year. The leading feature will be a delightful series of letters written to young people from Samoa by Robert Louis Stevenson. These describe the picturesque life of the lamented romancer in his island home, and give interesting portraits of his native retainers. Rudyard Kipling, whose first Jungle Stories appeared in St. Nicholas, will write for it in 1896, and James Whitcomb Riley, the Hoosier poet, will contribute a delightful poem, "The Dream March of the Children," to the Christmas number. The serial stories represent several favorite names. "The Swordmaker's Son" is a story of boy-life in Palestine at the time of the founding of Christianity. It is written by W. O. Stoddard, whose careful study of the history of the times and whose travels over the scenes of the story have enabled him to present vividly the local coloring. "The Prize Cup" is one of J. T. Trowbridge's best stories. Albert Stearns, whose "Chris and the Wonderful Lamp" was one of the greatest successes of the past year, has written a new story that promises much. In "Sindbad, Smith & Co.," he has again gone "The Arabian Nights" for inspiration. An American boy enters into partnership with that greatest of sea-faring adventurers, Sindbad, and the fun and the complications that this brings about can be imagined. These are but a few of the features. During the coming year $1,000 will be given in prizes. Full particulars concerning it will be found in the November number.

Park Club Hospitality.

The Board of Governors and the House Committee of the Park Club have under consideration plans whereby the members and their friends will be entertained this winter. Something of a novel nature may be looked for, and thus the interest in the Park Club will be kept at a high standard.

Able to Be Out.

Fred Sheppard, of Emily street, who was injured at Westfield some time ago while out riding at night, is able to be out doors again. He ran into a wagonload of wood which had been left in the road without horse or light. Sheppard has begun suit against Matt Sandford, of Westfield, who owned the wagon.

Hurt His Foot.

Clarence Leland, of Elmwood place, sustained a severe injury to his right foot while at work in the Pond Tool Works yesterday. A heavy piece of machinery fell on his foot, severely crushing it. He was taken to his home where he will be confined for sometime.

Concert for Children's Home.

There is no charitable institution in the city that is more deserving than the Children's Home and the concert to be given by the Crescent Avenue church at the Casino on Thursday, November 21st, will doubtless receive a liberal patronage. The music will be of a high order.

Designed by a Plainfielder.

The Kirmess cut which was printed on the title page of the Kirmess programme, and which was also printed in The Press of Wednesday, was designed and made by W. B. Gilbert, of Crescent avenue. It was presented by him to the Kirmess managers.

Minstrels To Be Discussed.

A meeting of the committee of the Crescent Wheelmen to look up the question of a minstrel show will be held this afternoon. No action has yet been taken as the town is too full of the Kirmess to think of anything else.

THE AUTUMN FAIRIES.

Little fairy feet that prance
On the breezes cold—
Little feet that gayly dance
On the streets of gold.

Little wings that rob the sun
Of his choicest beams,
Flutter past the windows dim,
Lavirig in the streams.

Cheering flash of light divine,
Softly peeping through
All the jaded cares that twine
In the morning dew.

Painting thus a springing weed
Mortal feet have trod,
Till the glad resurgence of mead
Gleams with goldenrod.

A NOTED OLD HOUSE.

A Residence In Georgetown and Something About Its History.

There is a house in Georgetown which from its grandeur and its foreign influence about it. It is a large, substantial, though unpretentious mansion, minus low windows, turrets and other accessories which mark the modern house. It stands at the corner of Twenty-ninth and N streets. It was planned by the owner, a man of fine attainments, literary taste and a great hospitality. He held office under the government, and not having a surplus of the "needful" was compelled to mortgage the house to raise money loaned from the estate of the celebrated Polish patriot, General Thaddeus Kosciusko, by Colonel George Bomford, the owner at that time of beautiful Kalorama.

The owner did not live long to enjoy his comfortable home, and his widow was compelled to rent it to pay off the mortgage. The first foreign tenant was Count Napoleon Bonaparte. His wife was Victoria, daughter of General Gratiot. The Count was a fine old gentleman and most agreeable in all his business dealings with her, whom he termed his "amiable landlady."

The minister from Mexico was the next foreign tenant, but he died shortly after taking the house.

Baron Stoeckl lived eight years in the house and was so pleased with it that he made a proposition to purchase it. The Chevalier de Potestad of the Spanish legation was the next tenant. He married Miss Chapman, granddaughter of the celebrated Dr. Chapman of Philadelphia, was a tenant during the war, and when there was a rumor that Washington would be raided, troops being near the capital promised to hoist the Spanish flag should the place be invaded.

The house did not lack for distinguished American tenants. R. Barnwell Rhett of South Carolina, a noted secessionist, succeeded Count de Montholon and purchased from him his elegant Parisian furniture; Mr. Allen, an editor from St. Louis; Governor Fulton, senator from Arkansas; Mr. Swordmaker, a noted great engineer; Mr. Worthington, a gentleman of wealth, whose daughter married Colonel William H. Philip, is the next tenant in Washington, and others.—Washington Star.

"Maryland, My Maryland."

True merit in a song is a passport which no sentry will question, and long before peace had been declared James R. Randall's "Maryland, My Maryland," that Baltimore song which so fearfully crossed the enemy's lines and exacted its meed of praise from the literary circles at the north, Oliver Wendell Holmes says of it, has written the story that promises much. In "Sindbad, Smith & Co.," he has again gone "The Arabian Nights" for inspiration. An American boy enters into partnership with that greatest of sea-faring adventurers, Sindbad, and the fun and the complications that this brings about can be imagined. These are but a few of the features. During the coming year $1,000 will be given in prizes. Full particulars concerning it will be found in the November number.

"Why?" asked the poet.

"Because," said Mr. Thompson, "when I was in England I met Tennyson in a room one of the most beautiful and charming of women, who asked if I would not like to hear a song of my southern country. When I consented to sing, she went to the piano and sang 'Maryland, My Maryland.' After she had finished she turned to me and said:

"'When you see the friend who wrote that tell him that you heard it sung by a Russian girl who lives at Archangel, north of Siberia, and thankful to sing it there.'"
—Philadelphia Times.

The John Was on Him.

I think the maid up at the B.'s must be an altogether remarkable person, if half they tell of her is true. A young man went to call on Miss B. one evening. Miss B. was not at home, but she had left word with the maid that anybody who called was to wait her return. Accordingly this young man was shown into the dimly lighted drawing room and found himself a comfortable chair in a corner. He was weary. In fact, the man who told me the story said he had been walking, whatever that may be. At any rate, he fell into a doze. When he awoke, Miss B. was still absent. There was the same dim light in the room. He looked at his watch. It was 4 o'clock. There was only one thing to do, of course. He took his shoes off and slipped out the front door. This is a true story, and it is all true to a fact, except that he has never dared to look Miss B. in the face again, for he can't make out whether she knows it or not.—Washington Post.

In His Way.

Elder George Champlin was a colored preacher in Providence, and died there many years in Rhode Island. He was a man of excellent common sense and no little wit. At one time some of his hearers complained that he had been rather too personal and severe in one of his sermons.

"When I am preaching," responded the elder, with a shrewd glance from his sharp eyes at the remonstrants, "when I am preaching, I try to shoot right at the devil every time, but if any one gets between me and the devil, why, of course, I reckon, he will be liable to get hurt."—Youth's Companion.

WHEN GREEK MEETS GREEK.

Could Not Get the Last Purse, but Neither Could Any Other Woman.

Where they all came from was a mystery. And why so many women had selected this day to shop was incomprehensible—at least to the finite masculine mind. But there they were, packed and jammed with them. They all looked utterly fagged out, and many showed signs of growing irritation.

Two women of widely contrasting types paused for a moment on the outskirts of this human vortex. They stood at opposite points of the compass, by mere distinction of the long counter dedicated to "remnants." Neither was young. The one, evidently a country woman, had the placidity and repose of a dilapidated cow. The other was distinctly a product of New York. She was dressed in rusty black. Her feathers were planned to concentrate intervals upon her costume. Her shabby bonnet, with its drunken plume, was very much over one ear. She wore the suspicion that she was a blonde. Her hair had been foiled too often by the cry of "rats!" The illusion was heightened by a peculiar habit of carrying her elbows close to her sides and pumping her hands up and down from her extended wrists, as if "sitting up, begging."

A common impulse put both women in motion. In the floor by the remnant counter lay a purse. Apparently no one else saw it.

There's small woman, by a vigorous application of her sharp elbows, worried her way toward the prize. But here also defeated agility. By sheer force of her own weight she was unceremoniously projected herself upon it. Victory was hers.

The little woman gave a yelp of disappointment as she saw her rival's hand open the purse and disclose a generous roll of bills. Instantly her face gleamed with malicious triumph.

Leaning over the counter, she called in a shrill voice: "Miss, here's a lady"—with scathing emphasis—"as has found a purse with money. Won't you take her to the department that owns it?"

The country woman's eyes filled with tears of rage. "I guess it ain't your business," I kin take care of it myself, I reckon."

But it was too late. The ever present floorwalker had heard the request, and he conducted the soldier of fortune's lucky country woman to the cashier's desk. With a last exultant snarl the small woman corkscrewed her way through the crowd and disappeared.—New York Herald.

WON HIS CASE

A Philadelphia Lawyer's Idea of Thrift and How It Worked.

Over in Philadelphia dwelt a young lawyer who had been for a long time in vain what was about to be admitted to practice. The girl's father also belonged to the profession and was reckoned pretty smart, as Philadelphia lawyers go. He had before given a partial consent to the young man's pleadings, but concluded he would try the student and see if he was worthy to be his son-in-law. So he said:

"The case of Blank against Blank has been on the calendar several years. It has been to the appeals' court once, and has tried again and comes up again for argument at the next general term. I am counsel for the plaintiff. I have had the case in charge, and have won over the jury. Here are the papers. See what you can do."

The young man took the papers and went to work with a vim born of love—for if he won the case would he not also win a bride? At last life seemed to him worth the living. He plunged into the study industriously. He consulted the authorities and war loaded and primed for a brilliant argument when the court convened. He made his plea and won the case without any trouble.

With a heart overflowing with joy, he returned to his prospective father-in-law, and, dropping down the papers, he exclaimed:

"See here, sir! The case is won! These are the papers. What you tried for years to do I have accomplished at a single term of court. Now, may I have your daughter?"

The old fellow looked up with a smile upon his face and replied:

"I think you a fool and you can't have my daughter. But I will just give you a little gratuitous advice. It is true I had the case four years without winning it, and it is also true that I made thousands of dollars out of it. But you have gone and killed it in a single term, you made! About $50. No, sir, you can't have my daughter!"—New York Journal.

A Stunning Speech.

A distinguished traveler who had made the ascent of an Asiatic mountain (which may be here called Uppoh) was to receive the thanks of the visitors at a dinner of the Alpine club, but though he was a bold mountaineer, he was a timid orator. "Got to make a speech?" said a friend whom he encountered at the station. "There I had the same four years without winning it, and it is also true that I made thousands of dollars out of it. But you have gone and killed it in a single term, you made! About $50. No, sir, you can't have my daughter!"—New York Journal.

A Stunning Speech.

A distinguished traveler who had made the ascent of an Asiatic mountain (which may be here called Uppoh) was to receive the thanks of the visitors at a dinner of the Alpine club, but though he was a bold mountaineer, he was a timid orator. "Got to make a speech?" said a friend whom he encountered at the station. "There I had nothing like taking a glass of sherry and bitters first." So said other friends, one after the other, and on each occasion the gentleman in question was conscientiously unwilling. The effect on a nervous organization was nothing less than confusion worse confounded.

When his achievement had been described in glowing terms by the proposer of the toast and the celebrated explorer rose to reply, he appeared to be in a daze, with smiling blandly at his audience for a minute or two as he swayed backward and forward. Then he began: "Gentlemen, Uppoh is 29,000 feet above the level of the sea." There was a roar of Homeric laughter, but the orator smiled still and continued: "No, that is all—nonsense. Of course I mean 29,000 feet above the level of the feet." Another shout made him think that this statement, too, had something wrong about it, and he gave up his task in disgust, and he has never heard particulars of an ascent which we were quite prepared to celebrate as the most remarkable in the modern climbing.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Mary Mapes Dodge and Emerson.

It is interesting how strong the influence of a face sometimes is. A friend of Mary Mapes Dodge, who had occasion one day to go with her into a private room in her charming quarters on Fifty-eighth street, stopped for a moment by the door to examine a large framed photograph hanging on the wall. It was a very beautifully finished head of Emerson.

Mrs. Dodge turned back and exclaimed: "You are admiring my Emerson! It is one of my greatest treasures. I look at it with me everywhere, though I do not often carry about his essays. The face is constant enough help."—New York Herald.

ONCE UPON A TIME.

Once upon a time—a cat
Might be a princess then,
And thistles growing in the field
Could turn to armed men.
They dared not stoop to pluck a flower
When walking in the wood
For fear in taking it they'd rob
Some fairy of her hood.

Once upon a time—a bean
Could grow to reach so far,
That when they clambered up the vine
They could get to a star.
And when they planted apple trees—
You need not to be told—
What, fruit and blossom had on,
The fruit would be of gold.

CURIOUS EXCISE LAWS.

No Alcoholic Beverages Sold at Retail In Norway or Sweden.

"Excise laws in Norway and Sweden are curious," said a returned traveler.

"My first experience with them was in a little village in Norway called Drontheim—I've heard it pronounced a dozen different ways. I reached there late in the afternoon and dined in the hotel with two American artists whom I had met on the steamer.

"We called for a pony of brandy apiece. When it came the waiter, who, curiously enough, was a Frenchman, stared at us with speechless and sorrowful amazement for a moment and then replied:

"'If I were to bring what you ask for, I would have to spend six months in prison, and if I filled your glasses a second time—mein Dieu! I don't know when I would ever see France again.'

"It seems that some years ago the Norwegian government recognized the fact that its people were becoming the most drunken in Europe. The result was that a law was passed prohibiting the sale at retail of all alcoholic beverages, no matter where or in what sort of an establishment.

"The smallest quantity which was allowed to be sold at retail was a liter, or a trifle less than a quart. The hotel Norwegian dipsomaniac, therefore, buys his liter of brandy or other hard liquors, and tucking it under his coat hurries home.

"Should within his reach four wills he may get as drunk as he chooses, but he must keep his door strictly closed, and if he so much as shows his drunken face at the window he is arrested at once and spends several months in jail. The man who sold him the liquor, moreover, is heavily fined and sent to jail on the judicial coats."—New York World.

Demand For the Humbledee.

Some years ago I paid a visit to my nephew, a vicar in Buckinghamshire. He informed me that a new industry had sprung up in his parish—there was a demand for the humbledee, which could be sold for fourpence a head. He could not inform me what led to this demand, nor could the villagers who had sold the bees tell me. On a certain day the bees had been and paid the money, I was referred to the beemaster of a neighboring village. I found him out on the next day, when he informed me that the raising of red clover in New Zealand had failed for want of a native insect capable of fertilizing the flower. WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE.

There may be feather-headed people who think that, because woman suffrage has been defeated in Massachusetts, there will be an end to the uproar over it. Why, on the same day that it was rejected there, it was adopted in Utah; and, when Utah shall become a State of the Union, a month or two hence, it will have a Constitution which guarantees the right of suffrage to the women of the State, it will be the third of the States in which woman have the full suffrage, and the thirteenth of them in which they enjoy the suffrage, limited.

The Massachusetts defeat has not given the woman advocates a moment's pause in their campaign. We have to report their meetings all the time. They held a State Convention in Newburg last week, right on the heels of the November elections. They have invaded the South, aroused Georgia from its slumbers, and raised their voices at Atlanta. They say they will make this winter the busiest yet. The soul of woman is marching on. What is the meaning of yesterday's coronation of the octogenarian, Mrs. Stanton?

Oh, no. We have not heard the last of woman suffrage. Connecticut may be dry in the cause; Massachusetts may be dryer yet; the skies over New York may be like brass. These are but incidents in a war which will go on until the cause is won, or the women are tired of it, all tired out in the vain struggle.—New York Sun.

A writer in The North American Review says that the tides of the North and East Rivers produce power enough to generate all the electricity to light New York and Brooklyn, to do all the mechanical work in the factories and machine shops, and to run all the railroad lines in the city and suburbs. This power is wasted, as formerly all of the power of Niagara was allowed to expend itself in a profitless way. All that is required is to store this immense power and turn it into profitable use. The problem presented differs somewhat from that at Niagara. The tides are periodic, and not constant, and the power would have to be collected at the times of its greatest exertion and stored for later use.

When the Legislature gets here it ought at once to pass a law abolishing poll tax in this State. Last winter there was passed a law abolishing poll tax in first-class counties. This law was passed because of a recognition of the fact that it was almost impossible to collect the tax in those counties. The same difficulties exists in the other counties, and, therefore, the law ought to be abolished in them, too, unless on the other hand some law is enacted which will make the collecting of poll tax something more than a farce. Any law, however, which would attempt to make the payment of poll taxes a condition precedent to exercising the right of franchise, and this would be about the only way the collecting of poll tax could be made effective, would be open to grave questions as to its constitutionality.—Trenton Times.

From hints thrown out by the leaders on both political parties, strong probabilities seem to exist that two important joint resolutions will be offered immediately after the assembling of the Fifty-fourth Congress. The first will be an affirmative of the principles embodied in the Monroe Doctrine, expressing in plain and vigorous language the sympathy of the American people with the government of Venezuela in its boundary dispute with Great Britain. The second joint resolution, which is being prepared with much care, provides for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States under a territorial form of government.

Three rag pickers invaded Westfield yesterday and while they searched for rags one of them discovered a coat and a pair of trousers hanging on a line. The articles suddenly disappeared in the rag picker's bag, but not so fast but that their owner saw them go and shortly after the three strangers saw the inside of the jail. The owner of the stolen clothes valued them at $10 and the prisoner offered to settle for that amount, but the officers of justice said nay and the thief was sent to jail while his companions were each held in $100 bail to await the action of the Grand Jury. A Plainfield mash acted as bondsman for the two who were released on bail.

ENDED IN A BLAZE OF GLORY.

THE HOSPITAL ENRICHED SEVERAL THOUSAND DOLLARS.

It Was the Biggest Charitable Success Plainfield Has Ever Had—Presentations to Miss Stewart—Closing Scenes.

The Kirmess is over and only the pleasant memories and the greatly increased treasury of Muhlenburg Hospital remain. Plainfield will soon settle back to its regular routine of life until the firemen's fair comes to stir up the people of this city again. Never has Plainfield entered so fully into a similar scheme.

While the entire city is deserving of great credit for its generous support of the Kirmess, the members of the Ladies' Auxiliary Board of the Muhlenburg Hospital should be given special mention for their energy and good judgement in the management of the affair. For weeks before it began they were hard at work and their labors have continued down to today, for it is still necessary to close up the accounts. Mrs. D. T. VanBuren, president of the Board, as head of the entire movement, filled her difficult position in a way which added greatly to the success of the Kirmess. During the past week she has been constantly on the scene, from early morning until late at night, directing or assisting as was necessary.

And to Miss Lila Agnew Stewart, too much credit cannot be given. It was she that planned out the entire Kirmess, arranged the position of the booths, suggested the design for each, taught the dancers and did a multitude of other things. Her patience and kindness to all made her a great favorite, while the immense amount of work that she accomplished won for her the admiration of everyone.

As The Daily Press predicted, the attendance on Saturday was by far the greatest of any day during the week. In the afternoon fully fifteen hundred people witnessed the matinee, while in the evening twenty-five hundred spectators viewed the dances, while five hundred more were turned away as the academy was already crowded to its greatest capacity. All the dances were given and every thing passed off without a hitch. To give a list of the best performances would merely be to name all the dances, and all those who took part are certainly deserving of much credit. The Highland Reel and the Military Dance were given after a rest of one night and the rest seemed to improve the dances, if that were possible. The Tarantelle and the Minuet still claimed their share of the applause while Mrs. L. W. Sernell, jr., in the Serpentine Dance and W. J. O'Brien were more popular than ever. William N. Runyon was there, and had three new stanzas which completely brought down the house. The applause which was given him lasted several minutes and could not be quelled until the next dance was begun. The new words were as follows:

Now Plainfield folks, the week is o'er,
The fair is nearly through;
For what you've done in our behalf
We're thankful unto you.
You've spent your money lavishly.
And we are glad to find
We've several thousand now to spend
For the sick and halt and blind.
The Board of Lady Governors
Deserves unstinted praise,
For the way in which they've managed things
Throughout these last six days.
They surely are entitled to Eternal, lasting fame;
It takes the ladies every time
To play a winning game.

We've never had a way rained.
Until this grand Kirmess.
That Plainfield is so justly famed
For female loveliness.
All Jersey knows that our fair its girls
This town of ours is chief,
But that each one should be a queen
Is most beyond belief.
Each Gypsy, Scotch and Spanish lass
Looks nice enough to eat;
While the ladies of the May-pole dance
Can simply set the heart
If you think you've seen as many queens
In another town this size,
You'd better go to Dr. Aird
And let him treat your eyes.

And now dear friends there still remains
But one more thing to do,
And that's to remind Johnson to her
Who's put this Kirmess through.
She's labored with us faithfully
For many a weary day,
And whether she does well or not
I leave to you to say.
All hail to her! A grand success
Will o'er her efforts crown,
And we of Plainfield will unite
To keep her memory green.
In years to come, when politics
Is woman's natural bent,
We'll pick Miss Stewart from them all
And make her President.

The War and Moon Dance concluded the programme and was repeated after the Shadow Dance by Miss Genevieve Daniel, and the curtain was drawn forever on the picturesque braves and squaws as they kneeled and reclined about the stage in a closing tableau.

The different dancers did not fail to remember their teacher and friend, and Miss Stewart was called out time after time to receive their tokens most of which came in the shape of beautiful flowers. The dancers of the Tarantelle presented her with a handsome tortoise shell and silver comb. She also received a beautiful star-shaped pin of gold, set with pearls, from the women of the Auxiliary Board.

The court jester, the soloists and many of the other dancers also received flowers.

A MOTHER'S DUTY

TOWARDS HER DAUGHTERS.

Suggestions Which Bear Repeating, as Their Importance is Immeasurable.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Only a few years ago even the medical profession scouted the idea that young girls could suffer from the misery of uterus troubles.

That form of disease, it was claimed, came only to married women.

When Lydia E. Pinkham first sent out the news of her great discovery, there was no lack of harsh speech from those whose practice and opinions she set at defiance.

But when young girls by the hundreds were absolutely cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, then the tongues of the traducers were stilled, and faith was allowed to live in the hearts of the people.

Young girls are subject to this trouble. It robs them of the buoyancy of youth. It makes all effort distasteful.

It causes retention and suppression of menses, leucorrhœa, severe headache, waxy complexion, depression, weakness, loss of appetite and interest.

Certainly mothers ought to know that these are all symptoms of the one cause of nearly all the suffering that comes to women; and to save their daughters ought to begin treatment at once.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the surest and most natural remedy for women ever compounded. It will accomplish its work with certainty.

After the Spanish Dance Mrs. VanBuren was led upon the stage and presented with a basket of immense chrysanthemums from the members of the refreshment committee.

The banner for the favorite matinee dance was won by the Hornpipe which had 900 votes. The Gypsy dancers were the victors in the evening dance contest, with the Indians close behind.

The quilt which was offered at the Kirmess to the doctor receiving the most number of votes was won by Dr. G. W. Endicott after an exciting contest, a testimonial of the esteem in which this talented physician is held by a host of friends.

The Gypsy booth was one of the most attractive of all the booths at the Kirmess. The dark red hangings and the evergreen decorations made a pretty frame work for the Gypsies in their brilliant many-colored costumes that gathered there. The booth was designed by William Pinton, of West Eighth street, and was arranged almost entirely by Mr. and Mrs. Pinton.

The supper Saturday evening was served by St. Mary's and the First Presbyterian churches. The members of the refreshment committee who were on duty were Mrs. J. M. Bettman, Mr. and Mrs. George B. DeRevere, Mrs. W. T. Williams, Mrs. W. A. Woodruff. The waitresses were the Misses Cornelia Rockefellow, Frances Demarest, Leonore Carl, Annie Carl, Lena Morgan, Elsie Van-Zandt, Agnes Blair, Helen Boice, Nora Williams, Julia Williams, Mary A. Luckey, Grace E. Overton, Olive Newell, Eva Dayton and Margaret Vermeule.

The firemen should also receive their share of credit as they aided greatly in keeping the passage ways clear. They were fully prepared for any emergency and had any trouble occurred they were ready to handle the crowd and prevent any panic.

At the conclusion of the Gypsy dance she was led out and William N. Runyon, with a few well-chosen words, presented her with a large bouquet of red roses and a handsome dress suit case from her friends, the Gypsies. She also received books and other tokens from the many friends that she made during her stay in this city.

The profits of the Kirmess will probably reach close to $5,000, which is as near as those in charge are able to determine at present.

SENSATION AT A FUNERAL.

NEW PROVIDENCE PEOPLE DEMANDED A POST MORTEM EXAMINATION.

Edward Wilcox Assaulted by Samuel Clark and Dies a Few Days After—Friends Prevent a Hurried Burial.

Edward Wilcox, a farmer of New Providence who was appointed inspector at the recent election at that place, was assaulted in the performance of his duty by Samuel Clark, Jr., son of the late Samuel Clark who was killed at Scotch Plains. After that time Wilcox complained a great deal of pains around his heart. Medical aid was summoned but it had no effect and he died last Wednesday.

The funeral took place at his home Saturday, but as the body was being removed from the house some of the neighbors objected and claimed that a post mortem examination should be held. The body was taken to the house again and County Physician O'Reilly was notified. He held the examination yesterday afternoon and he gave the verdict that death was caused by unnatural action of the heart. While he would not say the assault was the immediate cause of death, it no doubt had hastened it.

Young Clark left for parts unknown as soon as he heard of the death.

The decedent was a highly respected citizen. Tax Collector H. N. Spencer, of the borough, was a nephew.

AGAINST MIXED SCHOOLS.

Rev. P. S. Gibson in Favor of Separate Instruction for Colored Children.

Rev. P. S. Gibson, pastor of the Mt. Olive Baptist church, expects soon to start a discussion on the "Mixed School Question." This subject has been deeply studied by Mr. Gibson and he hopes to bring out some very valuable points. In speaking about it, he said that in the Northern States educational advantages were offered equal to both white and colored people, but after graduation the advantages to the colored people were nominal, as they were not allowed to teach or assist in helping their race in a way where they could make a living. On the other hand the white people were given these advantages.

He is a strong advocate of separate schools for the colored people, and he advises that the colored people in New Jersey hold a monster conference for the purpose of formulating plans for the building of school houses for the colored race. A little later Mr. Gibson will have something important to say along this line.

FIREMEN ON DUTY.

The Men Who Handled the Crowd Saturday Night.

The difficult job of handling the crowd at the Columbia Cycle Academy, Saturday evening, was placed in the hands of Chief Doane, of the Fire Department, and his assistants. There was no trouble although the firemen had to work hard to keep the passageways clear.

FORMALLY ORGANIZED.

The Plainfield Catholic Club Meet and Adopt a Constitution.

The Plainfield Catholic Club met Thursday afternoon and adopted the constitution and by-laws as presented by the committee. The following board of governors was then elected: P. Casey, T. Carty, John Lynch, F. McInerney, M. J. Mack, C. J. Ward, M. R. Flynn, Hugh MacDonnell, C. Guinee and J. Keenan.

The trustees were chosen as follows: Bishop Wigger, Vicar General Doane, Father Smyth, Thomas Carty, and Hugh MacDonald. One hundred and sixty-five members signed the constitution as charter members. An auditing committee, consisting of M. J. Cashen, D. J. Shay, and E. McCue, was appointed and an investigating committee to examine applicants for membership was also appointed. The board of governors meet tonight for organization.

Good News for the Firemen.

The dances and drills will be the great attractions at the Firemen's fair. Mrs. Bartlett having recovered from her illness is again able to prepare the beautiful and unique dances and drills. Queen Flora will be given the first night. The second night, Gypsy dance, sailor's songs and a Firemen's drill and dance. The third night, a Roman sabre drill and a scarf drill. The Flowers and "Butterfly dances will be the fourth night attractions.

AFTERTHOUGHTS.

Kirmess week has come and gone. It was a great, big, undeniable success, and the hospital bank balances properly adjusted. To every one of the host that earned the victory of entire community owes a debt of personal gratitude. The Kirmess was a public blessing. It provided, for six glad days, an honest, healthful topic of conversation and object of interest for probably 20,000 persons, and this is much. It brought to light an unsuspected array of local talent, beauty and grace that was a surprise most welcome; it evidenced a sweet charity in Charity's fitting sphere—Home; and it dragged out a lot of fellow-townsmen who had not been out for no one knows how long, and did them a world of good. Above all, it was a bully good show for the money, and this is the feature that will recommend it most tenderly to the average citizen, for your Plainfielder is not to be fooled in the matter of his money's worth. Everyone got several times the value of his investment and had a royal time into the bargain.

It is only too bad that the Kirmess is not a permanent attraction. It is a pity to lose sight of that fairyland, the pretty girls and the manly men, and return once again to our prosaic life, but so it must be.

Perhaps, however, we shall have another gala week next year and Kirmess Week may be, hereafter, an annual affair like the Fourth of July, or Hallowe'en, or the Grocers' Picnic. The Kirmess has come to stay in our hearts, anyhow.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION CUPS

STEPHEN A. KROM TELLS WHY THEY SHOULD BE ADOPTED.

Some People are Willing to Follow in the Methods of a Century Ago, No Matter How Disastrous They Are.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—There is some opposition to the Individual communion cup. This seems incredible, but it is a fact nevertheless. Some of the objections to it are as follows:

One prominent church member has stated, that if the old method was good enough for our forefathers, it is good enough for us. It sounds very kind and respectful to our forefathers, but that is all. Our friend forgot that if the pilgrims had decided that what was good enough for their forefathers was good enough for them, the American race as we know it, himself included, would never have come into existence.

The Chinese believe that what was good enough for their forefathers is good enough for them. We all know the result. The bows and arrows, the flint locks, the round shot of their cannon, was so inferior to the modern armament of the Japs that there was nothing left for the Chinese to do but to run away, which they did with great celerity.

To this principle is due the fact that they have some of the most disgusting and cruel practices on earth.

Just think of the number of comforts we should be deprived of if we should carry out this principle.

The first thing that would go would be the steamship, next would come the railroad, telegraph, electric light, the modern hospital, with its antiseptic surgery, water system, sewer system, modern house improvements, graded and paved streets; these with a host of other comforts would all go out in a batch, and leave us almost stark naked.

The principle of what was good enough for our forefathers is good enough for us, is a relic of pre-historic times. It belongs to the pre-glacial period, along with the mammoth cave lion, cave bear and other terrible things. It is silly and childish, it is also a sign of atavistic degeneration, and it should be stamped out as speedily as possible. It has been said that the new method is cumbersome; such a statement is completely refuted by the fact that churches that have used the new method report that it is far more convenient than the old method. Also that the attendance at the communion ordinance has been doubled since its introduction. These churches would on no account return to the old method, which reminds them of the time when our forefathers came in here again; our forefathers used one dish placed in the centre of a table, the position of the diners being marked by the lines of grease radiating from it.

Again it has been said that but one cup was used at the last supper, and so we must use but one. Such a statement is utterly without foundation. Even if it was founded on fact we have already completely ignored it by using more than one cup, generally four or six. If we can do this, and there is not a shadow of doubt but that we can, we can just as well use forty or forty hundred if need be.

Some church members seem to think that anything connected with the church is no subject to the ordinary laws of the universe, but is governed by some mysterious, something nobody can explain. So that when the communion cup is passed through the congregation, and diseased germs are dropped into it by millions, some mysterious force will prevent these germs from doing any harm. Such conclusions are not borne out by facts. I have in mind a case in New York, where I have no doubt that syphilis was communicated by one church member to another by the communion cup. Other cases are on record. A doctor recently found himself at the chancel rail placed next to a patient of his whom he was at that time treating for a malignant disease of the mouth. It is surprising that such cases should come out, for up to the present time no one has suspected the communion cup as being a source of infection. A person in the rear part of the church could receive the germ of consumption which had been dropped into the communion cup by someone in the many pews in front of him, not knowing that such a person was in the congregation how could he possibly trace the source of his infection. This is just the way the present method of administering communion ordinance spreads diseases of all sorts. After communion services in several church of Rochester a microscope revealed twenty-two living microbes, any one of which could work incalculable harm in the system of any person who happened to imbibe them. No one can tell the number of germs taken by the communicants on the Sunday that the examination was made, or the results which will follow. It is the opinion of those who have investigated the matter that the present uncleanly and disgusting method of administering our communion ordinance has caused the death of thousands of persons. The method is also unchristian and is one of the most glaring inconsistencies of our times. The pastor prays in the opening part of the service for a blessing on his people, as one of the greatest blessings we can have, and he also prays for good health, and the next minute he puts into operation a method of infection that could be no more defective if it was especially designed to carry out that purpose.

We laugh at the Mohammedan who brings of the water of what he calls the holy well of Zamzam, which is infected with cholera germs. We call him a religious fanatic for doing so, and declare that his old well ought to be filled up, yet we at the same time are doing just the same thing, with the exception that we use an infected cup, while he uses an infected well. He does not know better. We ought to and do know better, therefore, in that respect, the balance is in favor of the Mohammedan.

Aside from the above mentioned dangers, the old method is nasty. That is just the word to apply to it. What host would think of passing one cup around the table at a dinner party? What guest would submit to such treatment? Multiply the number of persons at a dinner party by about forty and you will have the condition of things at the communion table, forty times as bad as the one you would not put up with at the dinner party.

Heredity is to blame for our present method of observing the communion service, and with a good many other bad things heredity has left us with, we must eliminate it as soon as possible. At this time it is well for us to remember that we come of hardy stock. The Anglo-Saxon race with all its strength and virtue is well worth perpetuating, and to do so we must leave no stone unturned that will help us in the struggle, which is every day becoming harder. Our modern science, our Christian beliefs, our regard for the lives of those we love, our position as the most enlightened race on the earth, our posterity, and last, but not least, common decency all demand that we adopt the individual communion cup at the earliest possible date. If any one has still doubts about this matter, they can have them speedily removed by attending the illustrated lecture on microbes to be given in Y. M. C. A. Hall, Thursday evening, November 21st. It will cost them but a trifle, for which they will receive information of incalculable value, at the same time aiding the Plainfield branch of the W. C. T. U., which is just as truly the anti-idiot and criminal producing organization as the saloon is the factory where the greater part of the idiots, degenerates and criminals of the land originate.

A Little Gem.

The Unionist Gazette printing establishment of Somerville, has just finished the publication of an interesting little volume of 300 pages, bound in cloth, entitled, "Coaching in Merrie England." It is a journal of a coaching tour in England, also a visit to York, Lincoln, Ely, London, Paris, Switzerland and the Rhine in 1895; together with notes of coaching in England in 1894, by the Honeyman tourists, of which our fellow-townsman, A. V. D. Honeyman was manager. It has numerous illustrations, carefully selected, or photographed by members of the parties.

Only a small edition was printed, as it is only published for distribution among the two touring parties mentioned. Were it on sale The Press feels sure it would be in demand, as it is well printed, ably edited, and is a very interesting little gem.

PROF. CARPENTER ON DANTE

INTERESTING LECTURE DELIVERED TO THE PROGRESSIVE WOMEN.

Various Phases of Dante's Life Discussed to the Edification of the Monday Afternoon Club—Points Made.

A very interested audience gathered at the Casino Thursday afternoon to listen to Prof. R. H. Carpenter, of Columbia College, who came to lecture on "Dante," under the auspices of the Monday Afternoon Club. Prof. Carpenter is a very intertaining speaker and held the attention of his listeners throughout the lecture. He spoke first of the different portraits and what proofs there were of their authenticity. The death masks, according to the best authorities, are not true ones. From the traditional face which is left us, Prof. Carpenter stated that he belonged to the Italian type of idealist and reformers. The best descriptions of Dante, he said, make him a good type of the Southern European man. He next spoke of Dante's deeds and what might be learned from them, of his romantic early life, his entrance into politics, his exile, and his life as a poet. He stated that there is almost nothing really known about that great poet as there are very few facts that throw any light on the subject. The students of Dante should reduce the romantic story of his life to the plain historical facts and then learn something.

After a short sketch of his early life the lecturer said he belonged to the Guelphs, which he compared to the "Democrat or Tammany" party of today. His political advancement was next described and then how the other party, the Pope's party, came into power and Dante, with a number of others were banished for three years on the charge of appropriating the public money. He didn't obey the degree when a new one was issued in which it was declared that he would be burned alive if he ever entered Florence again. A description of his wanderings was then given and finally his death spoken of.

The speaker next proposed judging him from his works. The ideal Beatrice, he said, did not exactly compare with the real one of history. After further discussion of his works and creations he told of the way in which Dante appeared to the different people since that time. He next gave as reasons why his works were of less importance than is given them because they were in a foreign language, the matter in them was largely uninteresting, and his view of the world was one almost forgotten. In closing he gave his reasons for thinking Dante a great poet. They were the music of his verse, the picturesque quality of his description, his fine feeling of aspiration, and his beautiful dream of the world in where the laws were settled.

LIST OF PATRONESSES.

Names of Ladies Who Have Tickets for the Concert.

The following ladies are the patronesses of the concert to be given for the benefit of the Children's Home at the Casino Thursday night. WISEMAN'S BENEFIT.

Quite a Number Attended and Entered a Novel Contest.

The patrons of the Kirmess were given a chance to say farewell to the academy in its holiday garb last evening, when the promenade concert and dance for the benefit of Manager J. L. Wiseman took place. Several hundred gathered there during the evening and danced or visited the different booths which were kept open for the occasion. Prof. Guttman furnished the music. The evening passed very pleasantly. At the stationary booth a novel contest was inaugurated. Two prizes, an umbrella stand and a handsome vase, were offered for the two most popular women. But everybody voted for Mrs. D. T. VanBuren, and as she had no competitors, she was given both prizes.

NO DEMOCRATIC TICKET.

THE FIELD IS OPEN FOR A CITIZENS' OR PEOPLES' MOVEMENT.

The Dissatisfied Republicans Will Be Given a Chance to Do Their Best or Worst, As the Case May Be.

James E. Martine today furnishes The Daily Press with the following official declaration from the Democratic Association, of which he is president:

"After consultation and mature consideration the Democratic Association deem it inexpedient and unwise to place a ticket in the field for the coming municipal contest, thereby leaving the field open for a Peoples' or Citizens' movement."

In conversation with a Press reporter Mr. Martine said that the Democrats as an organization would have nothing whatever to do with the coming municipal campaign. That whatever part members of the party took in the election would be as individuals, and their acts could not be held accountable to the Democratic party.

PROSECUTION MUST CONTINUE.

Borough Board of Health Get More Evidence of Brook Pollution.

A screen was placed over the outlet of the North avenue sewer at the foot of Watchung avenue last night and this morning the place was visited by Dr. W. E. Honeyman, president of the Borough Board of Health, Health Inspector Peter Hansen and Andrew Love, who found an accumulation of solids there that were sickening in the extreme. These gentlemen were convinced more than ever that the pollution of Green brook by this sewer is a menace to the health of the people in the vicinity of the stream, and are determined to prosecute the violators of the law with reference thereto. Owing to the absence of Borough Counsel Reed from the city the matter was not further acted upon at the meeting of the Board of Health last night.

A Woman's Presence of Mind.

While attempting to light a lamp in her home on East Third street last night, Mrs. S. P. T. Wilbur accidentally ignited the shade on the lamp, the paper material quickly becoming enveloped in flames. Mrs. Wilbur, however, did not lose her presence of mind, and carried the burning article to the front piazza, though in so doing she also set fire to the portierre curtains between two room. The lamp was thrown on to a mat on the stoop, and a Mr. Chamberlain, who is a member of the fire department and who was passing by at the time, rushed to the scene and quickly extinguished the flames. No serious damage was occasioned by the fire.

Odd Fellows Gathering.

The session of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, which is to be held at Trenton tomorrow and Thursday, promises to be a large affair and will be attended by Odd Fellows from all over the State. G. Thorn, of this city, left today for Trenton, where he goes as delegate from the Noah Dove Encampment, and also as representative of the Odd Fellows Home at Trenton. Charles DeGraw, representative of Queen City Lodge, and Joseph Shepherd, from Plainfield Lodge, both leave tomorrow.

Where Did I Get This Dreadful Cough?

No matter; the great question is, how shall I get rid of it? Use THE PINEOLA BALSAM, a soothing combination of the remedies nature has put in the pine and other balsamic trees. It cures the inflammation and tickling in the throat, and if taken in time will prevent the spread of the disease to the lungs. Ely's Pineola Balsam is strongly recommended in cases of asthma. Twenty-five cents is the price. Tell the neighbors about it.

If?

If you want to preserve apples, don't cause a break in the skin. The germs of decay thrive rapidly there. So the germs of consumption find good soil for work when the lining of the throat and lungs is bruised, made raw, or injured by colds and coughs. Scott's Emulsion, with hypophosphites, will heal inflamed mucus membranes. The time to take it is before serious damage has been done. A 50-cent bottle is enough for an ordinary cold.

MELONS FROM DUST.

ONLY FRUIT THAT WILL GROW IN THE STAKED PLAINS.

Large and Juicy Watermelons Produced on the "Great American Desert," Where It Never Rains—A Partial Explanation of the Mystery.

When a stranger visits these "staked plains" of Texas, he soon learns not to be surprised at anything he sees. He has heard of this region all his life as a portion of the "Great American desert" and one of the driest parts of the world. He finds by actual observation that few crops will grow here on account of the dryness. It seems to be too dry for corn, wheat, oats, cotton, garden vegetables or fruit of any description. The few farmers in the country content themselves with raising hay or sorghum cane. Yet, strange to relate, there is one plant in whose favor nature chooses to make an exception. She seems to have made a law forbidding food plants to grow in this region and then arbitrarily to have suspended this law in one instance. To heighten the audacity of this move on her part she seems to have racked her brain for the vegetable growth which we would least expect to find here. The one she selected was the watermelon.

Every farmer's boy knows that ordinarily the watermelon requires a great deal of moisture before it will grow well. It also generally requires shade. In the east the watermelon patch is frequently in some cool or moist corner of the cornfield, where the growing vines will be shaded and watered by the stalks of corn. This is not merely for the benefit of such neighboring boys as may desire to eat watermelons without carrying water from the spring, but it is also for the benefit of the melons themselves.

Boys accustomed to look for melons in such places as that would be surprised to find them in this country lying out on the open prairie, where the hot sun glares down on them all day long, with never a cloud to interpose and never a tree or a bush for shade as far as the eye can reach. Sometimes not a drop of rain falls from the time the melons are planted in the spring until the melon is eaten in the early summer. Yet they thrive. And such melons as there are too! Long, slender ones and big round ones; light green ones, dark green ones and striped ones—and all ponderous, big fellows. To solve some morning about sunrise, while it is yet cool, and see a vast stretch of such fruit nestling down amid the short, curly mesquite grass on some 40 or 80 acres of land is enough to make a white man's mouth water like that of a horse in a field of new clover and to make a black man drop dead in his tracks from derangement of the heart functions. This fruit, in handling, much compared to coming to such a patch about noon, when the vertical rays of the sun are pouring down at their fiercest and when you can almost see the fruit swel

CHILDREN OF MARY AMUSE.

SAENGERBUND HALL THE SCENE OF A JOLLY AUDIENCE.

Many Entertaining Numbers Rendered to the Pleasure of the Audience—Dancing Was Afterwards Indulged In.

The Children of Mary of the St. Joseph's R. C. church furnished their guests last evening in the Gesang and Turn Verein Hall with one of the best entertainments ever presented there.

For sometime the affair has been in preparation and those present were amply repaid for going.

Miss Kittie Cooley opened the programme with an address of welcome, which was well spoken. Next came a fine rendition of "Scenes that are Brightest" from the opera of Maritana, by a large chorus. A recitation, "The Last Hymn," was given in concert by the following young women: The Misses Viola Blatz, Nina Kennedy, Lydia Boice, May Hughes and Anna Burns. It was well rendered and was heartily applauded for its merits. A feature of the affair was a song and dance entitled "Aunt Peggy and Uncle Dan," by James Callahan and Miss Agnes Baily. A clever recitation followed entitled "Disappointed Love," by Miss Kittie Carty. A vocal duet "I Know a Bank," by Miss Schmidt and James Baily were heartily applauded. Perhaps the most amusing feature of the programme was the singing of "Precious Pickles." Miss Mamie Walsh, Kate Kiely and Kate Egany took the part of the city girls, Miss Blanche Brizard made an excellent colored cook. Miss Pease assumed the role of Mrs. Caffrey; Miss Nellie Beglin that of Mrs. Gabble and Miss May Neely that of Sissy Gabble. The situations throughout were very ludicrous and brought down the house.

W. J. O'Brien then entertained the audience with fancy dancing, which was very clever. Following this, "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean" was rendered by the chorus.

The programme closed with a selection 'Good Night," by James Baily, Miss Schmidt, Miss Kennedy and J. Beck.

The balance of the evening was devoted to dancing, music for which was furnished by Eugene O'Reilly

The entire affair was a complete success and will be continued this evening.

Miss Maggie Richardson, Miss Lizzie Driver and Miss Annie O'Neil presided at the lemonade table, while Miss Bridget Connolly and Miss Kate McMann looked after the ice cream and refreshments.

A HARVEST DINNER.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. McGee Entertain Friends With a Novel Repast.

A harvest dinner was the novel but very pleasant way in which Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. McGee, of Orchard place and Willow avenue, celebrated the twenty-third anniversary of their wedding last evening. The party consisted only of the near relatives of Mr. and Mrs. McGee. The dining room was appropriately decorated for the occasion with strings of dried apples, green peppers and other products of the farm. The table was made in the shape of a T, while five large jock o'lanterns, made of pumpkins, served as candelebra. The dinner cards were decorated with bunches of carrots and parsley. The event passed off very enjoyably and the bountiful repast was followed by an evening of conversation.

Those who were present at the anniversary dinner were Rev. and Mrs. Herbert Welsh and Joseph Whiting, of Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Ashbrook, of Philadelphia; ex-Mayor and Mrs. William H. Whiting, and Irving S. Whiting, of Bound Brook; Mr. and Mrs James R. Joy. Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Horne. Miss Elsie Horne, James McGee, Mr. and Mrs. Walter McGee, Raymond A. McGee and Donald A. McGee, of North Plainfield.

BUTCHERS DISAGREE.

Endress to Sue Arnold for Alleged Breaking of a Contract.

It is said that Fred Endress, the Liberty street butcher has commenced suit against Charles Arnold, the Somerset street butcher, for violation of a contract which it is understood was made between them when the former purchased his present business from Mr. Arnold that the latter was not to open a meat market within five years after the deal in this locality. Mr. Endress has placed the matter in the hands of his lawyer.

Surprised.

Never was any one more surprised than Warner B. Philpitt, of Westervelt avenue, last evening, when a crowd of young ladies and getlemen called at his home to have a jolly time on his birthday. Music and dancing was the order of the evening with some fine quartette singing. Refreshments were served and it was morning when the lads and lassies departed.

STATE CHARITY PEOPLE.

David P. Hall Reads a Paper on Incurables in Almshouses.

The annual meeting of the State Charities Aid Association took place at Trenton yesterday. A number of ladies and gentlemen of this city, who are actively interested in charible work, being present. The afternoon session was devoted to a paper on "The Incurables in our Almshouses," written and read by David P. Hall, of this city.

The paper was prepared from statistics gathered from correspondence with all parts of the State, and Mr. Hall was warmly congratulated upon the skill and care with which the work had been done. It was voted by the Association to send a copy of this document to one newspaper in each county of New Jersey, and to print it in full in the annual report of the board.

The following Plainfielders were made members of committees of the State Charities Aid Association: Prisons and Penitentiaries, H. P. Reynolds; Almshouses, Poorhouses and Children, Mrs. Dexter Tiffany; Elevation of the Poor in Their Homes, H. P. Reynolds and Miss Florence Tweedy; Laws David P. Hall.

FROM THE CORAL STRANDS.

A Man From India to Talk at the Y. M. C. A. Next Sunday.

On the urgent invitation of the Madras Missionary Conference, the American Young Men's Christian Associations sent their first representative to India in 1889, in the person of David McConaughy, formerly the General Secretary of the Philadelphia Y. M. C. A., to extend the benefits of the Association to the fifty million young men of that land.

Mr. McConaughy will relate some of his experiences in his work among young men in that land at the young men's meeting at the Y. M. C. A. on Sunday at 4:15 p. m.

A mixed chorus of forty voices, largely from the Choral Society will occupy the platform and lead in the singing of Gospel hymns. A solo will also be rendered by Louis S. Bond.

Mr. McConaughy is especially qualified to help Christian men, and all such are invited to a meeting to be held at the building on Sunday at 9 a. m. Doors will be closed at 9:15.

WENT TO SLEEP IN THE HALL.

An Italian With an Irish Name Arrested Last Night.

One of the laborers who is employed at the sewer beds got drunk last evening and wandered out West Seventh street. At last the idea came to him that he ought to go to sleep, so he started for the nearest house, which happened to be Charles Foster's. The door was locked, so he went to sleep in the vestibule. At last he was discovered by the inmates and Officer Saunders soon escorted him to jail where he spent the night. This morning he was arraigned before Judge Coddington in the city court. He gave his name as Tim Murphy, although he looked very much like a native of sunny Italy.

He was given his choice between a fine of $3 or ten days in the county jail.

VICISSITUDES OF POLITICS.

It is not often that the demoralizing tendency of indulging to actively in modern politics is so forcibly realized as in the wrecked life of ex-Comptroller Wemple, of New York. Here is a man who had a prosperous business, an influential standing in the community, and all the emoluments that an ordinarily private citizen could desire, and yet his thirst for public office, and its attendant addition to this personal importance among the people, was so great that he indulged in methods to achieve desired ends that has resulted in a wrecked life. Business was neglected, health ruined, friends forgotten, everything made subservient to anything that might continue possible the career which he had a desire to live. His arrest and disgrace is a culmination of circumstances and acts which are peculiar phases of American political life, and which ultimately, in nine cases out of ten prove disastrous to the person indulging in them. Mr. Wemple's case is a little blacker than the usual run, that is all.

Took Their Pictures and Released Them.

The five Italians who were held as witnesses in the Union county jail of the recent Italian homicide at Westfield, where a bartender was shot dead by one of his countrymen, were released from custody yesterday afternoon, as the State has been unable to capture the assassin and there was no use in longer holding the witnesses. Their pictures were taken, and the Prosecutor thinks he can get them whenever they are wanted.

Results! Results!

A scarlet shawl was lost a day or two ago and advertised for in The Daily Press. It was found by J. P. Laire. He reads The Press. The owner now has the shawl. Results are what Daily Press ads bring.

A PEDDLER OF POLISH.

Insolence of an Agent Who Claims to Have a Silver Polish.

Housekeepers about the city have been troubled a great deal lately by two suspicious looking men, who have been calling at their homes.

They carry a quantity of what they call silver polish which they wast to sell. On examination it is found to be nothing more than common white chalk. On Wednesday one of the men called at a house offering his goods, but did not sell any. Yesterday morning he called at the same house. The daughter of the house met him at the door, and while she was calling her mother the man walked in the parlor and was closely scrutinizing everything in sight. When the lady appeared she told him that she wanted nothing and asked him why he persisted in calling. He told her if she would show him some silverware he would show her what the polish would do, but this the woman refused to do. It was with difficulty that she got him out of the house as he persisted in seeing everything possible. A little later the other man called and tried to work the same game, but was foiled.

A DISSATISFIED COMMUTER.

"Rapid Transit" Complains of the Slow Time of an Express Train.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—In a recent issue of your paper you lauded the Jersey Central Railroad Company for catering to its commuters—and that is true. It might also be said if, on the other hand, the same company was called to account for some of its "non-caterings," for instance, the poor service of train No. 67, 3:15 p. m. from New York).

The motive service on this, one of our principal afternoon trains, (certainly so on Saturdays,) is positively ludicrous. To this "so called" express with, (on Saturdays,) its club car and large complement of passengers, many of whom are impressionable and disgusted, is assigned a wheezy, little, antique engine, apparently totally inadequate to make schedule time and liable, as the train hands admit, to give out anywhere along the road. On Saturdays this train is always late, generally ten minutes or more, apparently due to slow running.

Improvement in the locomotive equipment and speed of this train, the cutting down of too liberal train schedules, and the putting in of a much-needed and promised five o'clock afternoon express from New York is the evidence that some of us old-time commuters are waiting for to convince us of a real live and broad catering tendiency on the part of the Central Railroad Company. For that matter the 3:45 train would better suit the majority of its patrons if it were made 3:15. Yours truly,

SUIT OVER A WAGON.

Homan Brings an Action Against a Father For His Son's Purchase.

The case of J. P. Homan against B. A. Mumford, in tort, was tried before Justice Mosher this morning.

The facts appear to be that in 1893 Mr. Mumford's son, Charles S. Mumford, purchased a $165 wagon from Mr. Homan. After a certain amount of money had been paid, the latter wanted Mr. Mumford to go security for the payments of the wagon, which he did, but refused to do so.

There yet remains about $40 to pay on the wagon. Mr. Mumford claimed it should have been a case on contract against his son, while Mr. Homan claims a case in tort against the father. Lawyer Angleman represented the defendant while the plaintiff was represented by Lawyer Swackhamer. Justice Mosher reserved his decision for one week.

Mishap Causes a Bad Sprain.

A painful accident happened to Thaddeus Doane, son of Chief Doane, of West Fifth street while visiting at No. 2 Patrol house in New York, yesterday. He had been up stairs and in coming down chose the pole in preference to the stairs, as he had done many times before. He reached the floor he made a misstep and badly strained the cords in his foot. He returned home and Dr. Adams was called to see if any bones were broken. The doctor pronounced it a bad sprain. Doane suffered considerably as the sprain is a painful one.

A Wonderful Change.

Dr. Henry R. Cannon, the first County Clerk of Union county, visited this city, of which he was a former resident, a few days since and tried to locate John Laing's hotel. He was utterly astonished to see the splendid Babcock building on the site. He says the growth and progress of Plainfield is a marvel. He never dreamed of such a change.

Fixed at Last.

The wretched condition of North avenue in front of Love's wallpaper store was fixed last night and is now fairly passable.

BOTH WOMEN SAFELY JUMPED.

Had No Tickets and Did Not Care to Face the Conductor Again.

Samuel Johnson, conductor of the train over the South Branch road leaving here for Flemington at 6:40 p. m., had a scare Tuesday evening. When the train pulled out of the station he noticed two well-dressed young women in the last car, and asked them for their tickets. They searched but failed to find them, and asked him to come around later.

When the conductor returned the young women were missing. A thorough search of the train failed to reveal their whereabouts. A woman passenger said she saw them go out on the platform as the train was crossing a bridge. At the next station Conductor Johnson telegraphed back to Somerville to search along the tracks. He then proceeded to Flemington, expecting to hear that the mangled bodies of the women had been found where they jumped off. No trace of them was found.

It was ascertained that they were at their homes in South Somerville uninjured. They had jumped safely from the moving train. They seemed to greatly enjoy their adventure.

A VOTER NOW.

A Newark Young Man Surprised by Plainfield Friends.

A very pleasant evening was spent at the home of Andrew Zeisz, of New street, last night by the friends and relatives of Mr. Zeisz's grandson, Charles Laing, of Newark, in honor of his twenty-first birthday. The evening passed very pleasantly in dancing and conversation, while a collation was served as the hour of midnight approached. The music was furnished by Hevet.

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Laing, Edward Laing, Miss Maggie Laing, Mr. and Mrs. E. Erb and children, Henry Knauer Fred Schaufer and Will Perkins, of Newark; Miss Annie Volkman, Mrs. Lizzie Zeisz, Miss Lillie Zeisz, Miss Minnie Zeisz, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Haberle, Mrs. L. Hill, Mr. and Mrs. George Mehl, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Glaentzer, Miss Carrie Mehl, Mrs. S. Scheidecker, Miss Malome Scheidecker, Miss L. Mehl, Miss Lillie Laing, Ephriam Compton, George Schlereth, Bert Sutphen and Theodore A. Kurzhals, Jr., of this city.

The Synod of New Jersey at its late meeting arranged to hold a Foreign Missions Congress in Trenton, November 20th and 21st. Each church in the Synod has been invited to send at least two delegates to the Congress. The programme has been prepared by the Permanent Committee on Foreign Missions, Rev. Henry S. Butler, D. D., Chairman. Pastors and elders, secretaries and missionaries, men and women, have places upon it.

A special meeting will be held in Salvation Army hall on Tuesday night, the 26th inst., beginning at eight o'clock, conducted by Captain March, of No. 9 Bowery Corps, New York, who is well known in this city. Her many friends will be pleased to see her again. Miss VanOrden, the banker's daughter, will also be present. Mr. Harris, of Orange, and several auxiliaries of this city are expected to attend the meeting. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

The weekly press bulletin of the State Christian Endeavor Society has the following about Plainfield: "The executive committee recently made arrangements for the evangelistic work during the coming winter. A conference social is to be held on the 21st inst. The working committee will meet the lookout and prayer meeting committees from the societies to advise as to the best way to inaugurate and carry out the details of evangelistic work. Perfect harmony exists between the pastors and the Endeavorers in this project.

Thomas F. Bayard, United States Ambassador to England, addressed a meeting in Edinburgh, Tuesday, and remarked that there should be a clear understanding between England and the United States. But first of all let's have an understanding with Lord Derby, though the English yachtsman doesn't evince much of a disposition to look at it that way.

Bitter, sarcastic, insinuating and incisive have the Christian Citizenship Union of Newark addressed the Board of Police Commissioners of that city over the violations of the excise laws. They characterize their actions as "official sham" and write that "it may become necessary for the Union to state more precisely your subserviency to influences brought to bear upon you in this matter, and to use other means than the appeal to your consciences and manhood."

Let the Jersey City police be praised. They arrested the countryman who came on to buy greengoods. He is the man who deserves punishment, even though he always gets the little end of the horn.

SHE ADMITTED HER CARELESSNESS.

She was old enough to know better, but she had brought all the devices of art to her aid in the endeavor to hide the ravages of time. She was elaborately dressed, her last bejng of that creposcular shape which was sure to attract attention to her head, with the result that the gray in her hair was plainly visible, while it could be noticed that she must have taken some time to draw the darker strands to the front so that the frizzes would not contain any of the silver. In her ears were sparkling diamonds, and in her hand enough to be heard several seats away and the energetic gestures of her ungloved hands allowed the sunlight to have full play on the diamonds in the rings with which her fingers were generously encircled.

With her was a dapper old gentleman about 45—her escort. His soiled shoes showed that he was one of those precise old chaps who are very careful of detail and who consider untidiness as the greatest of besetting sins.

From her conversation it could be gleaned that they had not been acquainted very long and that she was very desirous of making a good impression on her companion. They were evidently going to the theater, for she held a lorgnette in one hand and the silk of various plays she had seen and gave her opinion of actors and actresses with an air intended to carry conviction.

As they arose from their seats in the crowded "L" car the old gentleman pulled from his overcoat pocket a pair of gloves which had evidently been worn but a few times.

"My! My!" exclaimed the gay old charmer as she held up her hands. "You have your gloves, haven't you, and as reminds me, I spent 15 minutes looking for a pair before you came, and do you know that although I must have at least two dozen pairs of gloves I could not find one pair and had to come away without any. It is so exasperating not to be able to find things when you want them."

Her companion looked at her curiously for a moment, as though it was on the tip of his tongue to remind her that had she looked under the bed she would have found everything and have everything in its place," she would not have been forced to make a confession which she evidently did not consider humiliating as some of the other men near by hid their smiles behind their newspapers.—New York Herald.

ENVELOPE FLAPS.

Old Nags Said to Be Used to Make Them Adhesive.

Envelope lickers will do well to pause and ponder on the fact that a man has died in consequence of indulging in the popular habit of moistening the flap of sealing the adhesive envelope with the tongue. Some will say, "How can gum arabic poison any person?" Gum arabic! Are we so innocent as to suppose that the article, raised to a prohibitive price by the Egyptian war and subsequent closure of the Sudan, is used on envelopes? Do they see that ancient nag hobbling down the street? There is the parent of their gum arabic, and in a few weeks' time, that decrepit animal has made his bow to the knocker and yielded up his hoofs to the glue boiler, perhaps they may have a kick as his remains on an envelope they are dispatching to a friend or sweetheart.

And should some taint of animal poison ensue and that friend in May's reply require other and black bordered envelopes to be licked for them when their mourning cards are sent out. Perhaps no more unsavory part of a city is a stationer's shop is when, having folded the small purchase in a flimsy envelope, the tradesman raises to his lips, opens a hippopotamus mouth, protrudes a tongue which looks at least two sizes too large for its habitation, and then, with a smirk, hands the damp delicacy to his customer. May he, of all men, be warned by the premature departure of a fellow licker, and may all who send literary missives to their friends rest assured that the remnants of those envelopes would feel better pleased if these coverings had been closed without any exhibition of moist anatomy.—Oakland Echo.

Could I have a bed? The hostess stared at me. I could sit by the fire, she said, or perhaps lie down on a kind of settle, covered with hard Austrian cloth and not too inviting. Then she went out in the shades of the farther end. "Have you no guest chamber?" I asked. And after much considering and a consultation with her husband she lighted a candle and led me carefully through an anteroom, piled up with thrashed out maize stalks, to a door, which she unlocked, and into a room where the heavy ears of Indian corn were laid in rows along the floor, while onions and apples were heaped in the corners and bunches of corn and yellow tomatoes hung from the rafters.

There was a bedstead behind the door, and a chair, only piece, stood by the side. The bed had not been used for years, she confessed, not since the opening of the railway. But she had sheets—clean sheets of linen—and they soon deftly that perhaps if she put a pan of hot coals between the feather bed and the mattress it might not be so very damp after all by the time I had come from supper. Coffee! No, that was impossible, but a glass of real red Tiroler wine was at my command, as well as a shank of smoking dish of polenta which stood on the table of the common room, flanked by a large loaf of black bread. I took my seat with the rest, and when I had finished I was ushered into my chamber, charging me to be very careful lest sparks from my candle fell among the litter.—Macmillan's Magazine.

Burned at the Stake In London.

We can hardly realize the fact that it has only been but little over 100 years since counterfeiters were publicly burned at the stake in London, the present boasted "center of civilization." On March 18, 1789, Christianie Murphy was executed at Newgate prison, London, for the crime of "coining." She was bound to the stake seated on a stool, the main tie being a cord around the neck. The funeral pyre was then lighted by the executioner and his deputies, one of the latter of whom finally jerked the stool from under the wretched creature, allowing her body to fall on the fire. Within 48 minutes the body was entirely reduced to ashes and buried in a hole on the spot where the execution took place.—St. Louis Republic.

The Extempore Pianist.

"Can you tell me, professor," asked Grigsby, "what an 'extempore pianist' is? I see that the performances of such a pianist are advertised."

"Certainly," said the professor. "Ex, out of, tempus, time, an extempore pianist is one that plays out of time!"—Boston Transcript.

HOW TO PUBLISH A SONG.

If You Have a Reputation, You Get Paid. Otherwise You Stand the Expense.

"In publishing a song its success depends a great deal on the reputation of the composer and the title of his composition," said Louis Berge, the composer. "There is magic in a name, with all due apologies to Shakespeare, and even if a song starts to nothing a reputation can go to make it a financial if not an artistic success."

"Are publishers pay for a good piece of new music?" I asked.

"Very rarely, and then only if the composer is a man or woman well known. In such cases they will pay from $200 up for a song, and the composer gets 10 per cent of the royalties."

"Do publishers take songs by unknown writers if the latter pay for the expense of printing, etc.?"

"Certainly. That is done every day in this week. If the song is not a success, the publisher loses nothing, and the composer has had some experience for his money."

"I understand that many composers of songs cannot read a note of music. Is that so?"

"Yes," replied Mr. Berge, "some of the most popular songs were written by men with no knowledge of music. It is by no means not absolutely necessary to be a musician in order to write a song. If you have talent enough to compose a melody and can't write it down according to the rules of harmony, all you have to do is to go to one of the many musicians in this city who earn money by writing scores. You whistle or hum your tune to him, and he puts it in writing, ready for the publisher."

"How do you push a song in order to make it popular, if there is any popularity in it?"

"Well, before we put the song on sale we distribute nearly a thousand copies of it among singers and orchestra leaders. These people, you know, are always on the lookout for something new. If they find the melody good and catchy, they sing or play it to their audiences. The success of the song then lies with the public."

"What is the cost of publishing a song?"

"A song with three or four sheets of music and an illuminated cover costs from $115 to $200, but publishing a song does not really risk much if his composition is a failure, and if it proves a success, he is apt to make a fortune."—New York Herald.

Milanese Literature, 1750.

Literature was not neglected by the leisured classes of Milan. They read poetry, and they wrote it. One bard penned a sonnet on each of the hundred invocations to the litany of the Virgin Mary. Another aimed a hundred sonnets at the head of a man to whom he owed 3 shillings. A third poured forth five dozen sonnets at once, describing them on the title page as being written by Sir Lullo, Sir Lallo and Sir Lello, annotated by Sir Lollo and dedicated by Sir Lillo. One learned society held its meetings with a child for chairman, to whom they propounded all sorts of abstruse problems, and who was instructed to answer each question with one word.

Then these solemn triflers would choose two of their number to demonstrate that the chairman's one word solved the question propounded or at least pointed straight to the right solution of it. Verse, however, was the chief business of the society, verses on deaths and marriages, christenings, confirmations and first communions; on a nun's taking the veil, or a monk's soldier taking a new discipline; on a young priest's first sermon; on a lady's pet, or a gentleman's bet, or a beauty's shifting her patches.

Two whole volumes of verse came forth on the death of a favorite cat, albeit the poet (so give him his due) showed himself conscious of the frivolity of this flood of grief as he had helped to swell. One of his stanzas runs:

An Iliad written
On the death of a kitten
Is rhymes that are faultless, if not very new.
May teach you musicians,
Who play on violoncellos,
To praise a tune worth the verse lavished on you.
—Macmillan's Magazine.

Moorish Customs.

Moorish customs are many of them somewhat obnoxious, particularly the feasts and festivals of the Mohammedan religion. The fast of Ramadan, which lasts a month, during which no true believer may eat, drink, smoke or bathe between sunrise and sunset, is rather trying upon him than on the stranger within his gates. But at the feast of Rams, among other scenes of cruelty and gluttony, it is nothing unusual to see a procession of fanatics—followers of Sidi Aissa or some other saint—tearing to pieces a lamb and devouring it raw during their progress through the streets.

Weddings in Tangier are celebrated after a manner peculiar and interesting. As soon as the ceremony is performed the bride is confined to her room and fattened with kuskusun or other farinaceous diet. On the evening of the wedding she is conveyed to the house of the bridegroom in a box decked with gaily colored ribbons carried by a mule or donkey. The friends follow in procession, carrying large candles and colored lanterns, others making night hideous with the firing of guns and the sound of tomtoms, flageolets and drums. At the door of the house of the female relatives welcome the bride to her new home, and the marriage is completed without the aid of religion.

Funerals are somewhat revolting. The corpse, wrapped in a shroud, is placed on an open bier borne by hired carriers, usually negroes. Before and behind walk the mourners, and the procession hurries along, chanting in monotonous tones the famous creed of Mohammedanism—"Ashadu anna la ilaha illa Allah, wa anna Muhammadu rasuli Allah"—Good Words.

An Eye to Business.

Ex-Congressman Ben Cable of Illinois has a little daughter who has the making of a great financier in her. One day her father called her to him.

"Come 'ere," said he, "a man this morning offered papa this room full of gold if he would sell little brother. Now, that room is chock full of gold from the room from wall to wall and from floor to ceiling. If I sell little brother for that sum, I shall be able to buy you everything in the world you want. Shall I sell him?"

"No, papa," answered the little girl promptly, and then before her delighted father could recover for expressing as much unselfish affection, she went on: "Keep him till he's bigger. He'll be worth more then."—Washington Post.

A seaweed of the south Pacific often grows to be 30 or 40 inches in diameter and 1,500 to 3,000 feet in length. It has no root in the proper sense, the nourishment being absorbed from the water.

Students in Military Uniform.

The cavalry post has not been established here, but the High School Cadets have at last received their uniforms which accounts for the sudden appearance of numerous blue coats and brass buttons. The coats are dark blue and the trousers light blue, while the dark blue caps have the letters P. H. S. on the front. The officers are not at all pleased with the state of affairs, for, through some mistake, there were no cheverions put on their coats, and they appear the same as the privates. The suits are quite becoming, however, and in a short time almost the entire school will turn out in uniform.

New Residences.

Marsh, Ayers & Co. have just completed the contracts for the painting of eight large residences, which are being built in and about Plainfield. The residences are those of John Leal on Central avenue, S. C. Baker on Sleight avenue, David M. Moore on Central avenue, A. H. Atterbury on West Seventh street, Architect Benson on Hillside avenue, two for A. L. C. Marsh on Hillside avenue, and Mrs. Petring on Madison avenue.

Harper's Magazine

Brisels, a new novel by William Black, written with all the author's well-known charm of manner, will begin in the November Number, 1895, and continue until May. A new novel by George du Maurier, entitled The Martian, will also begin during the year. It is not too much to say that no novel has been more awaited with such great expectation as the successor to Trilby. The Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc will continue and will relate the story of the failure and martyrdom of the Maid of Orleans. Other important fiction of the year will be a novelette by Mark Twain, under the title, Tom Sawyer, Detective; a humorous three-part tale called Two Thormons from Muddlety, by R. Ogden Elwyn Mitchell; and short stories by Octave Thanet, Richard Harding Davis, Mary E. Wilkins, Julian Ralph, Brander Matthews, Owen Wister, and other well-known writers.

Prof. Woodrow Wilson, will contribute six papers on George Washington and his times, with illustrations by Howard Pyle. Mortimer Bigelow's history of The German Struggle for Liberty, illustrated by R. Caton Woodville, will be continued through the winter. The capture on St. Clair's defeat and Mad Anthony Wayne's victory, by Theodore Roosevelt, with graphic illustrations will be printed during the year.

A noteworthy feature of the MAGAZINE during 1896 will be a series of articles on Siberia by Whitney, describing his trip of 2000 miles on snowshoes and with dog-sledge trains into the unexplored Barren Grounds of British North America in pursuit of wood-bison and musk-oxen. Mr. Whitney's series will have the added interest of being illustrated from photographs taken by himself.

The Volumes of the MAGAZINE begin with the Numbers for June and December of each year. When no time is mentioned, subscriptions will begin with the Number current at the time of receipt of order.

Remittances should be made by Post-office Money order or draft, to avoid chance of loss.

Ticket for the Year 2000.

Editor of The Press:—Miss Stewart has carried Plainfield by storm, and as Mr. Runyon happily put it in his song on Saturday night, we would all vote for her for president. What's the matter, then, with Runyon for vice-president? What a fin-de-siecle ticket!

Meanwhile, while we are waiting, and working, some of us, and we will now work with renewed zeal, for the removal of Miss Stewart's political disabilities, why not head the ticket for '96 with the name of our own and only "Will S" What a name to conquer with! And what a "song and dance" we would have at the White House, and how much we would contribute to "the gaiety of nations!"

Dangerous Bed Place.

A man from Somerville came to Plainfield Saturday afternoon and imbibed too freely. In his wanderings he walked on the railroad track, and feeling a little bit tired laid down on the rails.

He was discovered by Alex. Manning, of Boice, Runyon & Co.'s lumber yard, about five o'clock, and with the help of a boy succeeded in getting the man off the tracks. He was then started on his way, and with a little trouble managed to walk.

Engagement Announced.

The engagement is announced of Miss May Hurd, of Dover, formerly of the Plainfield Seminary, to the Rev. Mr. Castleberry of Haddenfield.

Harper's Bazar

IN 1896.

The twenty-ninth year of HARPER'S BAZAR, beginning in January, 1896, finds it maintaining its deserved reputation both as a fashion Journal and a weekly periodical for home reading.

Every week the BAZAR presents beautiful toilettes for various occasions, Stories, Basque, and Chapeau it illustrate and engrave the newest designs from the finest models in Paris and Berlin. New York Fashions epitomize current styles in New York. A fortnightly pattern-sheet supplement with diagrams and directions enables women to cut and make their own gowns, and is of great value to the professional modiste as well as to the amateur dressmaker. Children's Clothing receives constant attention. Fashions for Men are described in full detail by a man-about-town. Our Paris Letter, by Katharine de Forest, is a sprightly weekly recital of fashion, gossip, and social doings in Paris, given by a clever woman in an entertaining way.

Both the serials for 1896 are the work of American women. Mrs. Gerald, by Maria Louise Pool, is a striking story of New England life. Mary S. Collins, in Sarony, a Poor Man, discusses the always interesting problems of the relations between labor and capital. Short stories will be written by the best authors.

Special Departments. Music, The Outdoor Woman, Personals, What We Are Doing, Women and Men, report and discuss themes of immediate interest.

Answers to Correspondents. Questions receive the personal attention of the editor, and are answered at the earliest practicable date after their receipt.

The Volumes of the BAZAR begin with the first Number for January of each year. When no time is mentioned, subscriptions will begin with the Number current at the time of receipt of order.

DR. RIGGS TO LECTURE.

He Will Deliver a Course of Study Lectures on the Eastern Question.

A few friends have made arrangements with Prof. James F. Riggs, D. D., to deliver a course of lecture studies on the Eastern Question in this city. The topics will be as follows: "Asiatic Empire: the Orient of Today;" "Mohammed and Mohammedanism;" "Balance of Power, in Theory and Practice;" "The Crimean War;" "English Power in India; Sepoy Rebellion;" "Russo-Turkish War of 1877-1878."

The six lectures will cost seventy-five cents for the entire course. There will be no single admissions. The lectures will be delivered on Tuesday evenings, commencing November 26th, and continuing (except during the holiday season) in the upper room of the chapel of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, whose trustees have courteously placed this room at their service. The charge is only sufficient to meet the expenses of the lecturer, printing and incidentals. After each lecture there will be for those who wish it an hour devoted to conversation and study with Prof. Riggs.

Linen Needed.

The demand for old linen and old muslin at the hospital being exceedingly large at present, seventeen patients being now in the wards, and friends and patrons are urgently requested to send us whatever they can spare of these articles, which would be a great help and much appreciated by

Harper's Weekly

IN 1896.

HARPER'S WEEKLY is a journal for the whole country. It deals with the events of the world that are important to all Americans.

In carrying out this policy, in 1895, Julian Ralph visited China and Japan, and journeyed through the West; Richard Harding Davis took a trip through the Caribbean Sea; the revolutions of the new navy were described and illustrated by Rufus F. Zogbaum; Frederic Remington presented studies of Army and Frontier life; Poultney Bigelow attended the opening of the Kiel Canal.

In 1896 like attention will be given to every notable happening. The chief events in art, literature and music and the drama will be artistically presented. W. D Howells, in the new department, Life and Letters, will discuss in his interesting way, books and the social questions of the time. E. S. Martin's sprightly gossip of the Busy World will be continued. The progress of the Transportation Commission and the World will be followed, and Caspar W. Whitney will conduct the department of Amateur Sport.

In 1896 will occur a Presidential election. In its editorials and through its political cartoons the WEEKLY will continue to be an independent advocate of good government and sound money.

In fiction the WEEKLY will be especially strong. It will publish the only novel of the year by W. D. Howells, and a stirring serial of a Scotch feud by S. R. Crockett. The short stories selected are of unusual excellence and interest. In every respect HARPER'S WEEKLY will maintain its leading place in the illustrated journalism of the world.

The Volumes of the WEEKLY begin with the first Number for January of each year. When no time is mentioned, subscriptions will begin with the Number current at the time of receipt of order.

Remittances should be made by Post-office Money Order or Draft, to avoid chance of loss.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXVII. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1895. NO. 48

"Support the Constitution, Which is the Cement of the Union, as Well in Its Limitations as in Its Authorities."—Madison.

THE BEGINNING OF THE END.

A NEW START MADE TO EXTEND THE STREET RAILWAY.

The Council Assembles and Hear the Objections of the Mayor—He Thinks the Conditions Should Be More Explicit.

Slow but sure is an apt description of the way Plainfield is getting the extension of the street railway. As the prestidigitator would say, now you see it and now you don't. Just at this moment it is out of sight. After months of dilly-dallying, amending and conferring on this and that, and bearing the most scrutinizing investigation to see that it had no flaws, the ordinance was passed by the Common Council and sent to Mayor Gilbert. The Mayor read the voluminous document and after clearing his mind of the technical language found that there was a serious defect in the phraseology, which afforded a loop-hole, though perhaps never to be taken advantage of by the railway company, yet there nevertheless with the opportunity of their getting a charter and the city getting unsatisfactory transit, if the railway magnates felt so inclined. He vetoed the ordinance and sent a communication to the Council with reference thereto. The Council was convened in special session last night and the Mayor's message read as follows:

Plainfield, N. J., Nov. 1], 1895.

Very reluctantly I return herewith without my signature, the ordinance entitled, "An ordinance locating the tracks of the extension of the Plainfield Street Railway Company, and the operation of the same," etc. The objection to this ordinance is found in that portion of Section 8, beginning on the twelfth line, which reads as follows: "or shall afterwards fail, or neglect, to operate the same as aforesaid, daily, and every day, for the space of three consecutive months. All the rights, powers and privileges and every one of them of said company, their successors or assigns, under and by virtue of this supplemental ordinance shall be null and void."

In my judgment, a literal interpretation of this language can convey but one meaning, viz: that the failure or neglect to operate the lines referred to, must continue daily and every day for three consecutive months before the franchise granted by virtue of this ordinance can be revoked. If this interpretation is correct, then it logically follows, that the operation of these lines one day in every three months will meet the requirements of the ordinance and enable the railroad company to hold its franchise.

I know full well that it was not intended by your Honorable Body that such an interpretation should be given to this provision, and I am prepared to believe that it is not the desire of the railroad company to so construe it,—but in view of contigencies that may possibly arise during the long life of this franchise, it seems to me important that Section 8, should be amended to more clearly define the idea that the right of the railroad company to hold its franchise, is dependent upon the continuous operation of its lines.

Respectfully submitted,

A. Gilbert, Mayor.

After Clerk MacMurray had finished reading the message Councilman Fisk moved that a recess be taken in order that the matter might be conferred about. The conferring occupied a few minutes, and after reconvening Mr. Fisk, as a matter of formality, moved that the ordinance be passed notwithstanding the objections of the Mayor. All voted no, including Mr. Fisk himself.

The ordinance was thus conducted into innocuous desuetude, and a new start made by Mr. Fisk offering an application from the street railway company asking for the extension proposed.

Mr. Fisk said that the ordinance just relegated to oblivion was found defective because the section referred to by the Mayor was a part of the first ordinance passed for the railway and was overlooked when inculcated into the new ordinance for the extensions.

The meeting of the Council was brought to an end by Mr. Fisk offering a resolution that Thursday, December 12th, be set as a date for a hearing on the new application of the street railway company.

A Harvest Home.

There will be a harvest home service in the Mission Church of the Heavenly Rest on Clinton avenue tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock. Sheaves of grain will decorate the church, with pyramids of vegetables, fruits and autumn flowers. All the sittings in the church are free.

NO DAMPENING OF THEIR ARDOR.

Salvation Army Lads and Lassies Have an Enthusiastic Meeting.

The inclement weather without last evening could not dampen the ardor and enthusiasm of those within at the Salvation Army. There was a goodly number present who entered into the service heartily. Captain Emily Marsh, formerly of Plainfield, but now stationed on the Bowery, New York, has charge of the service and was assisted by Miss Van Norden, of New York and Samuel L. Harris, auxiliary secretary of the Oranges.

The meeting opened with a consecration service, which was full of earnest prayers and deep spiritual songs, and valuable testimonies. Following this Samuel L. Harris was called on and gave a helpful talk on the work that the army is doing among the Oranges. Miss Van Norden was the next speaker and thoroughly interested all in relating her experiences in Europe and this country, telling a great deal about the army work. Captain Marsh was the last speaker, and she had something of her work on the Bowery, which proved interesting. During the evening several new hymns were rendered and the meeting throughout was one of great help.

G. A. R. NOMINATIONS.

Winfield Scott Post Get Ready for Their Coming Election.

Winfield Scott Post No. 73, G. A. R., was inspected by Inspector Littell, of Elizabeth, last night. Several comrades from that place accompanied him. There was also a muster and the work was very fine. After the meeting the comrades adjourned to the room below where the Woman's Relief Corps had prepared a sumptuous repast. Speeches and songs were given, including a recitation by W. R. Mattox.

The following nominations of officers were made at the meeting of the Post. The election takes place at the next meeting: Commander, I. L. McVoy, Robert Walker; Senior-Vice, C. B. Stephens, F. M. Whitely; Junior-Vice, W. Moore; Quartermaster, Andrew Cox; Officer of Day, W. C. Smith; Officer of Guard, P. C. Morse; Council of Administration, C. B. Stephens, W. C. Smith, J. E. Stewart, F. M. Whitely; Surgeon, Dr. Cooper.

PARSONAGE FOR DUER STREET.

Congstory of German Reformed Church Buy a Lot.

The consistory of the German Reformed church on Craig place met last evening and decided upon the matter of a parsonage. They have purchased that very desirable corner lot on Duer street, corner of Park place, of the owner, Mrs. J. K. Van-Arsdale, and will commence the erection of a house as soon as plans and other details are arranged. The Press congratulates the church on their choice of such a lot and sincerely hopes that a house in keeping with the neighborhood will be erected, and thus be a credit to the church and the street. Build a good house, brethren, and if you should desire to dispose of it after awhile it will sell better than a cheap one.

Thanksgiving Services.

All members of Christian Endeavor societies and Epworth Leagues are invited to attend a prayer meeting in the lecture room of Trinity Reformed church tomorrow morning at 9:45, and go from there to the church sanctuary at 10:30, where Rev. Herbert Randolph will preach a Thanksgiving sermon.

There will be special Thanksgiving services at the Seventh Day Baptist church, where Rev. C. L. Goodrich will preach at 10:30 a. m.

Playing Whist.

Despite the rain, the Thursday Evening Whist Club passed a very pleasant evening at the home of Mrs. A. M. Hanigan, of Craig place, last night. The first prizes were won by Mrs. Horsley Barker and Arthur T. Gallup, while Mrs. J. H. Carman and Joseph Hall secured the consolation prizes. The club meets on December 12th at the home of Horsley Barker, of Grove street.

Henry Wilson, the postmaster at Welshton, Florida, says he cured a case of diarrhœa of long standing in six hours, with one small bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. What a pleasant surprise that must have been to the sufferer. Such cures are not unusual with this remedy. In many instances only one or two doses are required to give permanent relief. It can always be depended upon. When reduced with water it is pleasant to take. For sale at Reynolds' pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

A YOUNG LIFE CRUSHED OUT.

A RADIATOR FALLS ON WILLIAM WINCKLER WITH FATAL RESULTS.

Assisting to Carry the Apparatus and Did Not Notice the Opening Into Which He Fell With the Radiator on Him.

A most distressing fatality occurred in the nearly completed residence of Borough Councilman John H. Valiant at the corner of Myrtle and Sycamore avenues, yesterday afternoon at about 3:30, which resulted in the instantaneous death of Wm. Winckler, one of the young men who was engaged in putting the steam radiators in the house.

C. W. Krausse, of Vine street, had the contract of putting in the steam heating apparatus and sent William Winckler and James Vosbery, two of his employes, there to work. The house is about completed, with the exception of some carpenter work. The cellar stairs had not yet been built, but the opening in the floor had been left for them. Winckler and Vosbery started to carry one of the heavy radiators, which weighs about three or four hundred pounds, from the hall into one of the back rooms. Winckler had the front end and backed through the hall.

The opening for the cellar stairs extended into the hall for a short distance and in some way, no one knows exactly how, Winckler stepped into the opening and fell. Vosbery says that Winckler staggered, but it may have been caused by the misstep into the opening.

Winckler, instead of releasing his hold on the radiator, held on the tighter and his weight drew the heavy radiator after him. He fell on his back and the heater struck him full in the face, instantly killing him. Vosbery hung on to his end with might and main, but the combined weight of Winckler and the radiator was too much and down they went.

The shock was a terrible one to Vosbery when he found that his old friend and companion had been killed and he fairly ran all the way to Front street, where he told his employer of the terrible catastrophe that had just happened. Chief Marshal Van Horn and A. M. Runyon & Son were notified, and Elmer E. Runyon came and took care of the corpse.

An inquest will, of course, be held, but the death was purely accidental and no blame can be attached to any one. It is one of those sad accidents which happen despite the fact that the greatest precautions are taken.

William Winckler was the son of Augustus J. Winckler, of Park place, a prominent carpenter of the borough. He was an exemplary young man and was a great favorite among his friends and comrades. He was a member of the Congregational church and a good Christian young man. He was also a member of Franklin Council, Jr. O. U. A. M. He passed his twenty-first birthday only a short time before election and he was greatly delighted at being able to cast his first ballot.

The death was a great blow to the family and the awful manner in which it occured made it all the more tragic. His mother and sisters were almost prostrated by the shock.

The funeral will be held from the home of his parents, 32 Park place, Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Franklin Council, J. O. U. A. M., will attend in a body.

Thanksgiving Services.

There will be divine service in Grace church on Thursday, Thanksgiving day, at 10:30 a. m. Saturday, St. Andrew's Day, there will be a celebration of the Holy Communion at 40 o'clock a. m.

At 7:45 p. m., a short service of prayer and addresses at the anniversary of the Men's Association. The Local Council of St. Andrew's Brotherhood will meet with them. Refreshments will be served in the Guild room after service.

Croup is a terror to young mothers. To post them concerning the first symptoms, and treatment is the object of this item. The first indication of croup is hoarseness. In a child who is subject to croup it may be taken as a sure sign of the approach of an attack. Following this hoarseness is a peculiar rough cough. If Chamberlain's Cough remedy is given as soon as the child becomes hoarse or even after the rough cough has appeared it will prevent the attack. It has never been known to fail. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds' pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

THE DEBUT OF MISS SHEPARD

DELIGHTFUL SOCIAL FUNCTION AT THE GABLES LAST NIGHT.

The House Beautifully Decorated With Floral Displays—Those Who Assisted in Receiving and Some of Those Present.

A more delightful social function Plainfield society has seldom witnessed than the one at the palatial home of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Shepard, "The Gables," yesterday afternoon and evening, when their charming daughter, Miss Joanna H. Shepard, made her debut.

The spacious hallways and rooms were exquisitely decorated with smilax and roses, chrysanthemums, greens and holly of the choicest variety, which were furnished by William H. Brower, of New York.

The reception was held from 4 to 7 o'clock, and Miss Shepard was assisted in receiving by Miss Edith Hyde, Miss Parish, Miss Hoyt, Miss Archbold, Miss Thompson, Miss Edith Smalley and Miss Soley.

During the afternoon Burnstein's orchestra, of New York, rendered choice selections, adding very much to the brilliancy of the affair. The table was arranged handsomely with cut roses and flowers, and the supper by Sherry, of New York, was all to be desired, the service being especially fine. In the evening from 8 to 12 dancing was enjoyed by the guests.

Among those present were: Dr. Nachel, of Paris; Miss Stokes, Miss Godfrey, Mr. Stout, Rupert King, Mr. Walcott, Mr. Arnold, Mr. Haydel, Mr. Slade, M. Kendall, of New York; Mr. Colt, of Orange; Mr. and Mrs. William Stansbury, of Passwood; Miss Cumings, of Newark; Mrs. C. T. Waring, Miss Waring, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hart, Miss Reinhart, Mrs. Van Buren, Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Van Buren, Mrs. Tracy, Misses Tracy, Miss Van Boskerck, Miss Baker, Mrs. Walz, Miss Walz, Mrs. Vail, Miss Vail, Mrs. Ladd, Mrs. Lovell, Miss Lovell, Mrs. Opdyke, Mrs. L. G. Timpson, Mrs. William Boome, Mrs. Groendyke, Mrs. Foster, Mrs. Hayes, Miss Hayes, Miss Ryder, Misses Haviland, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Smith, Miss Livingston, Mrs. Dumont, Miss Dumont, Messrs. Foster, West, Orville Waring, Louis Waring, Thomas Van Boskerck, George Van Boskerck, Louis Walz, Fred Walz, Harry Opdyke, Arthur Beebe, Fred Huntington, August Huntington and William N. Runyon.

BANJO CONCERT A SUCCESS.

Beautiful Selections Rendered by Artists on String Instruments.

Good performers and good selections made the banjo concert given at Music Hall last evening, under the direction of George Jenkins, a great success, and, although the rain kept many at home, there was quite a number present, and that they enjoyed the programme from first to last was very apparent from the vigorous applause that was given each selection.

The programme consisted of selections by the banjo orchestra, the Metropolitan Quartette, Jenkins and Taylor, banjoists, Wm. Josh Daly, humorist, the Dore brothers, banjo players, Master Francis Hastings, elocutionist, and Brooks, Denton and Ossman, the great banjo trio. The weather was not the best for the instruments, but that did not prevent the rendition of some excellent music. Josh Daly was very amusing in his selections and greatly delighted his hearers.

A Children's Reception.

There was a large brilliant reception held yesterday afternoon by the children of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Scott at their home on East Front street, the rooms were beautifully decorated. Miss Isabella assisted by two young friends received the guests in the parlor. Notwithstanding the weather, there was about fifty girls and boys present, and all enjoyed themselves thoroughly.

W. A. McGuire, a well known citizen of McKay, Ohio, is of the opinion that there is nothing as good for children troubled with colds or croup as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He has used it in his family for several years with the best results and always keeps a bottle of it in the house. After having la grippe he was himself troubled with a severe cough. He used other remedies without benefit and then concluded to try the children's medicine and to his delight it soon effected a permanent cure. 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. MISS PHILBROOK DECIDED AGAINST Counselor McClure Wins a Point Over New Jersey's Woman Lawyer.

Miss Mary A. Philbrook, the famous New Jersey woman lawyer, appeared in the Orphan's Court today to oppose the confirmation of the sale of land at Murray Hill by Lawrence Collins, administrator of John Collins, deceased, and asked that the same be set aside. Her petition in the matter, alleging fraud and no notice of the sale, was quite lenghthy, occupying five or six pages of typewritten matter. Upon hearing the petition and argument on behalf of the administrator by his counsel, William K. McClure, the Court declined to set the sale aside and ordered testimony to be taken before the surrogate.

Counselor McClure was kept quite busy in introducing Miss Philbrook to the officials of the court and the other lawyers, among whom she received a very pleasant reception.

SHOT AT A FLEEING MAN.

Wolfe's Tailor Shop the Scene of Attempted Robbery.

Early yesterday morning Policeman Cooney was standing in the vicinity of Madison avenue and heard the sound of crashing glass. He hurried along that thoroughfare between Front and Second streets, and when he reached the tailor shop of A. Wolfe observed that the glass in the front door had been broken. He heard another crash at the side of the building and going in that direction saw a man, who had evidently heard the officer approaching, disappearing in the darkness. Policeman Cooney recognized the fleeing man as James Dunavan, of West Second street, and called to him to halt, but he showed no disposition to stop and the officer fired his revolver at him, but without effect, for he escaped. The rest of the police were notified to look out for Dunavan, and yesterday Sergeant Kiely arrested him on Park avenue.

It is supposed he was endeavoring to gain an entrance to the tailor shop in order to commit a theft. He has been arraigned in court a number of times previous on various charges. This is the third time that the tailor shop has been broken into within a short time.

Dunavan was taken before Justice Newcorn this afternoon and committed to the county jail to await the action of the grand jury.

WATCHUNG AVENUE HOSPITALITY.

Mrs. Isaac L. Miller Entertains Pleasantly At Her Home.

A very pleasant at home was given Saturday afternoon by Mrs. Isaac L. Miller and her daughter, Miss Miller, at their home on Watchung avenue. They were assisted in receiving by Mrs. E. B. Clark, Mrs. W. D. W. Miller, Miss Marion Bowen, Miss Bessie Taylor and Miss Winifred Sprague. Their charming parlors were very artistically decorated with ferns, roses and immense chrysanthemums. The table decorations were pink and green, consisting of pink roses and smilax. A large number were present and a very enjoyable afternoon was spent.

About Jere M. Cobb.

W. A. Veutu, Secretary of the Trenton Y. M. C. A. says the following of Jere M. Cobb, who will appear at the Y. M. C. A. Thursday night: "The audience on Thanksgiving night, (1894,) numbered over one thousand, and their interest in every number seemed unbounded. This was the seventh time you have appeared before this association, and the fourteenth in Trenton, but we hope you may appear many times more.

Commissioners Organize.

The commissioners of the Watchung avenue opening met in the Common Council rooms last night and organized by electing Townsend Rushmore chairman, and W. T. Kirk, secretary. There was no one present who desired to be heard either in favor of or against the opening, and the commissioners adjourned to meet in the Mayor's office Friday night at eight o'clock.

THE PROBLEM OF SUPREMACY

DR. RIGGS THUS CHARACTERIZES THE EASTERN QUESTION.

Says That the Question is an Old International Complication in Which All Powers Want to Come Out Rulers.

Amid the downpour of rain last evening about 150 persons gathered in the lecture room of the Crescent Avenue church to listen to the first lecture of the course of six on the Eastern Question, to be given by the Rev. James F. Riggs, D. D., of New Brunswick, during the winter.

The first lecture, given last evening, was on "Asiatic Empires." The following is a condensed idea of the lecture.

"The Eastern Question is an old international jealousy never set at rest; an old complicated problem never solved; an old inflamed wound never healed. If an acid and an alkali be put together in a mechanical way no effect is noticeable, but mix them in a chemical way and they combine with a marked effervescence.

"So it is in the east. Turks, Armenians, Greeks, Bulgarians, Albanians, Koords and Syrians may live together in a mechanical way in peace; but, let a little disturbance come in among them and at once there is a great disturbance. So, mediæval romance, religious bigotry, and modern politics, combined unequally, occasion this explosion. This singular mingling of diverse elements gives a strange, nebulous character to the idea of the Orient. It is like a dream, like a vision of fairyland, a medley of the smooth and the rough, the beautiful and the grotesque. One point of vital importance must be clearly recognized at the outset; namely, the vast differences between those colossal Asiatic empires and all western States. Many motives which are potent in the one case are quite imperative in the other. The popular notions of things are entirely different. For example, in the west political power comes up from the people; in the east it comes down from God. In the west there is, on the whole, advance, increase, a gradual betterment, an evolution along the line of growth. In the east the changes being no relief; it is only a shifting of taskmasters. The people of the east are very superstitious and the power of superstition must be recognized.

"In the west our daily lives are governed by the so-called practical rules and notions, while our pleasures are ideal. In the East this is reversed. The pleasures of the Oriental are of the practical order, while in his daily routine he is governed by a dream. Mohammedanism and the Crusades intensified this state of things, and it prevails to this day.

"In spite of romance it is possible to study the Eastern question soberly, just as we study any other historical problem. It is terribly real to five hundred millions of people.

"The Eastern question is the problem of supremacy in the heart of the Old World. It is the question of harmony in the hearts of the great triple continent, Europe, Asia and Africa. On the right solution of this problem depends the welfare of coutless millions in their physical, intellectual and spiritual relations. Who shall rule these millions?

"The Eastern question finds its force in three places, namely, Herat, Egypt and Constantinopis. Because of the many complex elements involved this question is very difficult, it has thus far defied the efforts of statesmen, soldiers and missionaries.

"The Eastern question is like neuralgia; it manifests itself now here, now there, now at many points at once, flitting, shifting and eluding pursuit. It is like the Genii in the bottle, as narrated in the Arabian Nights."

FRACTURED A RIB.

E. F. Thorn Falls From a Chair With Sad Results.

Edward F. Thorn, the Park avenue fish dealer, sustained a severe injury yesterday afternoon about 5:30. He was at his home on East Front street, opposite Sandford avenue, and was standing on a chair putting a new tip on a gas burner. In getting down he lost his balance and fell over the chair, which was an old-fashioned one with a sharp edge on the back, and fractured one of his ribs on the left side. Dr. Jenkins was called and the usual treatment in such cases given. A heavy hunting-case gold watch was badly crushed against the back of the chair, which probably saved Mr. Thorn a more serious injury. He is, however, very thankful that he can be about and attend to his business.

THE PASSENGER AGENT.

Description of Him by W. A. Turk of the Southern Railway Company.

In his address before the American Association of General Passenger and Ticket Agents in Boston W. A. Turk, general passenger agent of the Southern railway, gave some interesting information about the function of the general passenger agent in worldmaking. He said:

"The general passenger agent is the pilot fish that leads the leviathan of commerce to the waters rich with prey, and thrice blessed is the transportation company whose general passenger agent is master of his art. If railway companies gathered their shining shekels from none but those who, under no moral compulsion to travel, the receipts of the passenger department would be a meager source of revenue to most of them. But the efficient passenger agent takes care of that, and every train handles its quota of passengers who travel, not because they must, but because they want to, allured by the enticing art of the general passenger agent.

"The railroad is the natural product of a demand for transportation, but the demand is created largely by the wise management of the passenger agent. Every inducement offered to travel results in an increased patronage of the road. Facilities for travel multiply, and in time a fair proportion of travelers become settlers and settlers become producers and consumers. The relation of the passenger and freight departments is so intimate that one cannot exist without the other, and in all normal American conditions the healthy growth of one means the prosperity of the other, but in no other line of business is evidence of cause the work of the passenger department is paramount.

"Among all the forces at work in the making of a nation, in the accumulation of wealth and the refinement and ennoblement of humanity there is none grander than this agency that can and does compass the various associations of general passenger and ticket agents."—New York Times.

THE PREPARATION OF MEATS.

Methods by Which the French Butchers Excel In Their Calling.

Butcher's meat—in France—is prepared, divided and arranged in the shops in such a manner that it never suggests slaughter. In a rare thing for one to see a stain on counter, bench or floor. The mode of killing the animals probably has something to do with this freedom from moisture and dripping. Maria Parloa, in an article on "The Science of French Cooking," in The Ladies' Home Journal, says the animals are so killed that every artery is filled, as might be inferred from the absence of moisture, but they are killed in such a manner that the arteries are emptied quickly and thoroughly.

After this the animal is bouffee—that is, filled with wind. The large arteries are pricked open and the lungs of large bellows are inserted into them. While the bellows are being worked a man beats all parts of the carcass with a flat stick. This is to distend the air to the smallest of the flesh. All this work is done very rapidly. The inflating of the animal in this manner gives a fuller and firmer appearance to the meat, and, I dare say, expands the veins and arteries more effectually than they would otherwise be.

The French use very little ice, and meats are kept only a few days at the most. The best of beef in France does not compare with American beef, but the veal is unquestionably superior. It is highly valued more highly than any other product of the butcher. But no matter what the viand, when it comes to the hands of the cook, it is prepared in such a way that little to do to it except to cook it.

HE WAS CONVINCED.

A Wife's Practical Argument That Was Sufficient For Her Husband.

On the first day of the year Mr. Merchant makes his appropriations for the coming 12 months. Mrs. Merchant tells him the amount she needs for the comfort of the house, and this amount is credited to the account. It is understood that on this amount Mrs. Merchant will provide everything necessary for the interior of the house. Mr. Merchant looking to the care of the grounds and the exterior of the home.

Mrs. Merchant had the interior of the house papered. When the job was completed, she decided to have the vestibule painted. But she told the painter to send the bill for that work to Mr. Merchant.

The work was completed and the two bills presented, one to Mrs. Merchant and the other to Mr. Merchant. Mr. Merchant received the one addressed to him in his office mail. He looked it over and returned it to the painter with the message written across the bottom, "Send to Mrs. Merchant." Following the instructions, the bill was sent to Mrs. Merchant, and she refered the painter to Mr. Merchant. The man who had done the work and presented the bill, telling the debtor that his wife had said the bill was to be paid by Mr. Merchant:

"Well, leave it with me," was all Mr. Merchant said.

That evening he spoke to Mrs. Merchant of the matter. He reminded her that the vestibule was outside the house and was under his care. He contended that it was inside the house and should be cared for from the appropriation. Between the two the painter waited a few days for his pay.

One evening Mr. Merchant came home from business and discovered he did not have his latch key. He rattled the door to call the attention of some of the members of the family to his predicament. He also rang the bell. Finally his wife came to the door.

"What's the matter?" she asked.

"Why, I want to get in," he replied.

"But you are not Mrs. Merchant, not offering to open the door.

"No, I am not. What are you joking about?"

"Why, yes, the vestibule is inside the house," replied the mistress of the house.

She had won her case, as after a moment Mr. Merchant capitulated by saying:

"Well, let me have it and I will pay that bill."—Chicago Chronicle.

The Bet Was Off.

"Reading your fish stories the other day reminds me of a good one I once heard in England," said Charles Coote, the comedian. "I was playing on one of the provincial circuits, and, happening into a bar for a mug of half and half after the performance I heard this story from two cockneys. I will not attempt to give it in their dialect, because we could not produce it in print, the peculiarity being in the intonation rather than in the spelling of the words.

"It appears that the two costers had made a bet of half a sovereign and the drinks as to which could catch the most fish. A coster with the drinks in his hand, they had repaired to the river and thrown in their lines. They sat there for something like four or five hours without either of them getting a bite. Finally one of them imagined he felt a nibble at his hook, and in his excitement he fell into the river.

"'Bet's off!' shouted the other coster. 'It's no fair divin for 'em!'

"The barmaid held stakes, and it was their explanation in the case to her which I overheard and afterward made a hit with."—Washington Post.

A Strange Tryst.

Bradford Torrey, the naturalist, told a pretty story some time since to a party of friends of a tryst of his with a blackcap. He said that he had first time one late day of May in a corner of his garden, and happening to look at his watch noticed the hour. It was 1 o'clock. He spoke to his family of his discovery and with the idle creatures and was led by a whim to return to the same spot on the following 15th of May and at 1 o'clock. Again he saw the blackcap fly down upon his "rockery" as he stood waiting for it. Then the tale was told about among his acquaintances, and the following year the same day and hour he persuaded one of his family to accompany him to the tryst. Mr. Torrey acknowledged that he felt nervous and almost dreaded to put the strange coincidence once more to the test. They went down to the pile of rocks and moss, and taking out their watches stationed themselves before the spot. Just as the clock struck 1 there was a flutter of wings in the bushes—the blackcap flew forth, faithful to the strange appointment between man and bird.

An Important Question.

A short time ago a large factory, fitted with the most modern appliances, including the electric light, caught fire, and despite the most strenuous efforts of the fire brigade was almost demolished.

The following morning a newly appointed member of the force was dispatched to the spot, with a view of ascertaining how the fire originated.

After closely interrogating the manager of the factory he asked to see the man who was responsible for the electric light.

"The engineer stated that the electric switches were under his sole control.

"Then you are the man that lights up the electric affairs?"

"That is so."

"Now, be careful how you answer my next question, 'cos if it ain't satisfactory it will be all the worse for you.

When you lighted the electric light last night, where did you throw the match?"—London Tit-Bits.

Pressing a Man.

A British scientist recently made the statement that upward of five-sixths of the weight of a human being was composed of moisture. His colleagues questioned the statement, whereupon a hospital cadaver, the remains of a small, fleshy man, was obtained and placed under the hydraulic press. The corpse weighed 140 pounds even, and it was found that when every drop of moisture had been pressed from the body the residue was a thin mass of dry, fibrous flesh and bones, weighing but 33 pounds.—St. Louis Republic.

A Bad Letter Day.

"Say, guide, what does that memorial stone commemorate?"

"I put it there. It is upon that spot where a tourist once gave me 5 marks."—Fliegende Blatter.

As universal a practice as lying is, and as easy a one as it seems, I do not remember to have heard three good lies in all my conversation.—Swift.

The atmosphere is so clear in Zululand that it is said objects can be seen by starlight at a distance of seven miles.

MANY VALUABLE POINTS ON THIS NEW CITY IMPROVEMENT.

Those Who Have Investigated and Studied Feel That the System Will be Satisfactory When In Working Order

One of the all important questions that is agitating the minds of Plainfield people is whether the system of sewerage that is being introduced is going to be a success. Now that the work of laying sewer pipe about the city has been completed they are anxiously awaiting the completion of the sewage beds so that they can have an opportunity of seeing the system in actual working order.

A Daily Press representative visited the beds yesterday afternoon, where he met Mr. Smith, who has charge of the work for Washburn & Washburn.

Mr. Smith is a thoroughly capable man and certainly understands his business. In a pleasant manner he extended to the Daily Press representative all the courtesy that day in his power, and was very glad to explain his part of the work.

The grounds upon which the beds will be located cover a vast area and will certainly surprise the uninitiated.

Washburn & Washburn's work commences at the screen tank which is being built on Dunellen avenue close to the sewage bed property. This screen is twenty-seven feet and six inches long by thirteen feet and three inches wide. The sewage matter goes through an eighteen-inch pipe into this tank, where the solid matter drops in a receptacle prepared for it, while the liquid portion goes through an eighteen-inch pipe into three outlets and is fed to the beds.

The screening tank is lined with enamel brick and has a smooth surface, which prevents the solid matter from adhering to it.

Gates are provided at the tank to shut off the sewage matter so as to allow cleaning of the tanks.

The most interesting portion of the work perhaps is that being done on the beds, of which there are seventeen in all. The liquid that is sent to them from the three outlets is filtered through six feet of sand and one foot of gravel. In each bed there are five underdrains consisting of three and four inch tile, which are about one foot long. At each joint a poor quality of muslin is wrapped. The muslin very soon wears out and allows the liquid to pass through it from the six feet of sand and one foot of gravel, and from there it passes on through to the brook. At present the beds there are banks. On the Greenbrook side it is nine feet high, to prevent any overflow from the brook reaching it. The other banks will average eight feet in height and from two to three feet wide. At the brook there is a roadway on top of the bank ten feet wide. Underneath these roadways and banks there are eighteen-inch pipe which serve as outlets to the beds. Between Dunellen avenue and the brook there are two cross roads, which are also embankments. In all there are nineteen underdrains. The sand used is of three qualities, fine, medium and coarse, and each bed is composed of one class of sand. Nineteen manholes are used, the drain from the upper beds run into them and has a fall of about five feet to the lower beds, where the liquid continues its course to the brook. In all sewage matter there is a quantity of bacteria, but the bacteria in the sand and gravel is so much stronger that all the poisonous substances are killed.

The underdrains are about forty feet apart, and there being five to each bed will allow perfect drainage. Just at present the men are at work getting the beds in shape, laying the underdrains and putting in manholes. In a few days the large steam shovel will be put to work on the hill where the upper beds will be located. The hill will be cut down ten feet. The fact that a quanity of clay has been found near the brook has given the idea that the drainage will be poor, but assurances are given that the liquid will not touch the clay. There is no possibility of the sand and gravel packing and once the beds get in working order there certainly can be no trouble in the flow.

When the beds are completed there will be nothing objectionable to the sight and if the system performs all that is claimed of it there will be nothing objectionable to the smell. A twenty-four inch underdrain pipe will be laid from the Clinton avenue pond 1,170 feet on West Front street to Rock avenue, where it will be run to the brook. This is done to take away the surplus water and improve the condition of the property. The lowlands on West Front street formerly the Smock property will be filled in and thus all objections removed.

Mrs. Fay for 'a City Missionary.

There is a strong probability that Mrs. Nora Fay will be engaged as missionary for this city and that a home will be provided for her here. Mrs. Fay is in one of the Deaconesses Homes in New York, and is one of the most earnest and successful workers in the metropolis. She is well known in this city and her engagement for the position of city missionary would please a large number of church workers.

SWEET STRAINS OF MUSIC.

ENTERTAINING AFFAIR AT THE SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST CHURCH.

Many Individual Numbers and a Large Chorus Make Up a Programme That Is Enjoyed By Those in Attendance.

Good music is enjoyed by everybody and the Christian Endeavor Society of the Seventh-Day Baptist church could not have better pleased the large audience which gathered in the church last evening by having a less musical programme than the one which was given at their musicale. The weather was not of the best, but a goodly number turned out despite the storm.

The programme opened with the overture "Bridal Rose" by an orchestra composed of Mr. Korff, first violin; James Petrie, second violin; D. E. Davis, trombone; Mr. Wallender, cornet; Miss Jessie Utter, piano; A. L. Titsworth, organ. The selection was excellently rendered and was loudly applauded. A selection by a male quartette, composed of Louis Bond, Elmer Runyon, Robert Gorton and D. E. Titsworth, entitled "Oh Ye Who Seek," was the next number, and was greatly enjoyed.

After a violin solo, "Legende," by James Petrie, rendered in his usual excellent manner, Mrs. George T. Mussen, of Brooklyn, sang "Come Where the Lindens Bloom," accompanied by Miss Jessie Utter. She sang "The Maid of Dundee" as an encore. The first part of the programme closed with Handel's "Largo," by the orchestra.

The second part opened with the "Gloria" from Farmer's Mass, sung by the conference club, which was composed Mrs. Dunham, Mrs. George Stillman, Mrs. D. E. Titsworth, the Misses Bessie Titsworth, Maud Mosher, Ernestine Smith, Carrie Randolph and Mabel Maxson, sopranos; the Misses Demarest, Lena Tomlinson, Louise Lewis, and Nancy Randolph, altos; Elmer Runyon, Louis Bond, Mr. MacElroy, of Brooklyn, Frank Clausen, and Louis Rogers, tenors; D. E. Titsworth, A. L. Titsworth, Robert Gorton, A. J. Spicer, and Charles Randolph, bases. Elmer Runyon then rendered a tenor solo "Young Rose," after which followed a song and solo by A. L. Titsworth, both of which were heartily applauded. The orchestra played again and then the "Tar's Farewell" was delightfully rendered by the male quartette, when in response to the continued applause, sang a lullaby as an encore. The march "Amiette" by the orchestra closed the evening's entertainment. Envelopes were found in the pews in which the contributions were placed and left at the door on going out.

"Clyde Line," From New York to Jacksonville, Fla., Reduces Its Time Twenty-Four Hours.

The growing popularity of the "Clyde Liner" has necessitated their building new, commodious and fast steel steamship which makes the run right through to Jacksonville, Fla., without change, in two-and-a-half days, including six hours' stop in Charleston. The "Clyde Line" steamers sail from Pier 29, East River, New York, Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays at 3 p. m. If you go to Florida once by the "Clyde Line" you will always go that way. The "Clyde Line" is certainly an all around up to date one and is untiring in its efforts to give their patrons entire satisfaction. They are not afraid to spend a dollar, when by so doing they can add to the comfort or pleasure of their patrons. In fact they owe their great popularity and increase in passenger travel to this very liberal system, always contending that their passengers shall have the best regardless of cost, so that when they leave the steamer at the end of the journey they become itinerant advertisements for the "Clyde Line." Low rates, quick time; perfect safety. Write "Clyde Line," New York, for descriptive matter, mailed free.

Getting Down to Work.

An enthusiastic meeting was held at the residence of Abner Bartlett, of 63 Westervelt avenue, Tuesday evening, when the wives, sisters and daughters of the firemen gathered together to make arrangements for the management of the different booths at the firemen's fair. The campaign was outlined and chairmen of the different committees appointed.

ST. NICHOLAS IN 1896.

For almost quarter of a century—for twenty-two years, to be exact—St. Nicholas Magazine has been bearing its welcome messages each month to the young people of the land. It began existence in 1873, consolidating with it in its early years all of the leading children's periodicals of that day, "The Little Corporal," "Children's Hour," "The School Day Magazine," and "Our Young Folks" among them. The children's magazine is now to be merged in St. Nicholas was "Wide Awake" which was purchased and consolidated with it only a few years ago. It has been fortunate in securing contributions for its pages from the leading writers and artists of the language, while it has given to its readers many works that have become imperishable classics in juvenile literature. St. Nicholas has had for many years a large circulation in Europe, and it is said to be read by many royal children. When the children of the Prince of Wales' family were young the Prince took six copies for his household, and the present Crown Prince of Italy grew up a constant reader of St. Nicholas.

The magazine is a help to those that have the care and up-bringing of children, in that it is full of brightness and interest and tends to cultivate high asperations, without being "preachy" and prosy and lugging in too apparent moralizing. Its readers are always loyal to it, and they will be glad to learn what has been provided for their delectation during the coming year. The leading feature will be a delightful series of letters written to young people from Samoa by Robert Louis Stevenson. These describe the picturesque life of the lamented romancer in his island home, and give interesting portraits of his native retainers. Rudyard Kipling, whose first Jungle Stories appeared in St. Nicholas, will write for it in 1896, and James Whitcomb Riley, the Hoosier poet, will contribute a delightful poem, "The Dream March of the Children," to the Christmas number. The serial stories represent several favorite names. "The Swordmaker's Son" is a story of boy-life in Palestine at the time of the founding of Christianity. It is written by W. O. Stoddard, whose careful study of the history of the times and whose travels over the scenes of the story have enabled him to present vividly the local coloring. "The Prize Cup" is one of J. T. Trowbridge's best stories. Albert Stearns, whose "Chris and the Wonderful Lamp" was one of the greatest successes the past year, has written another story that promises much. In "Sindbad, Smith & Co.," he has again gone "The Arabian Nights" for inspiration. An American boy enters into partnership with that greatest of sea-faring adventurers, Sindbad, and the fun and the complications that this brings about can be imagined. These are but a few of the features. During the coming year $1,000 will be given in prizes. Full particulars concerning it will be found in the November number.

THEATRICAL.

Unquestionably the dramatic novelty of the season is "The Year One." It is the creation of that extremely popular comedian, Neil Burgess, and is a distinct departure from any of the conventional type of comedies. It is being presented at the Star Theatre, New York, on a scale of lavish grandeur never before attempted in a production of comedy. The story deals with the absurdly funny tribulations of a rather ancient vestal virgin, who, because of her marvelous resemblance to the Emperor, Octavius Augustus Cæsar, is called upon to impersonate the Emperor. She is then with a charioteer in the Circus Maximus, and the indulgence of the gentle passion is forbidden to the vestal virgins. This, of course, adds to the complications, and affords Mr. Burgess full opportunities to develop all his well-known talent in the portrayal of such a character. The culminating effect is the chariot race in the Coliseum. It is run between two teams of four horses each, and they run apparently directly toward the audience. It is a scene which causes the most thrilling excitement and is greeted with salvos of applause.

Brisk Weather Makes a Frisky Horse.

The change in the atmosphere was too much for Woolston & Buckle's horse this morning and he thought he would take some exercise. Accordingly he started from Fairview avenue, passed through Westervelt avenue to Front street, down the latter street to Somerset, where he was caught by Richard Warneck in front of C. Frank French's feed store. The horse and wagon were not damaged in the least. Mr. Warneck returned the rig to the owners and received their hearty thanks

New Glass in the Postoffice.

The large plate glass in the front window of the postoffice, which was cracked, was taken down yesterday by the representatives of the insurance company in which it was insured and a new one put in. The question of who is to pay for the lettering on the broken pane of glass, is still a matter of dispute.

CENTURY FOR THE COMING YEAR.

The Century Magazine celebrates its quarter-centennial in its November issue with an "Anniversary Number." In honor of the occasion it dons a new dress of type, with new headings, etc., and it appears in a new and artistic cover. Although The Century has reached an age that is unusual among American magazines, it continues to show the youthful vigor and enterprise that have always characterized it. The programme that has been arranged for the coming year contains a number of interesting features. Much has already been written concerning Mrs. Humphry Ward's new novel, "Sir George Tressady," which has been secured for its pages. There was a very spirited bidding for this novel on the part of several prominent publishers, with the result that the author will probably realize from the serial and book rights of it one of the largest sums that has yet been given for a work of fiction in the English language. It will be the leading feature in fiction for the coming twelve months, other and shorter novels being contributed by W. D. Howells, F. Hopkinson Smith, Mary Hallock Foote, and Amelia E. Barr. There will also be contributions from Mark Twain and Rudyard Kipling (the latter furnishing to the Christmas Century one of the most powerful stories he has ever written); a series of articles on the great naval engagements of Nelson, by Captain Alfred T. Mahan, author of "Influence of Sea Power upon History"; three brilliant articles on Rome, contributed by Marion Crawford, and superbly illustrated by Castaigne, who made the famous World's Fair pictures in The Century; a series of articles by George Kennan, author of "Siberia and the Exile System," on the Mountains and the Mountaineers of the Eastern Caucasus, describing a little-known people; articles by Henry M. Stanley and the late E. J. Glave on Africa; a series of papers on "The Administration of the Cities of the United States," by Dr. Albert Shaw. The Century will also contain during the year a great number of papers on art subjects, richly illustrated.

Prof Sloane's "Life of Napoleon," with its wealth of illustration, will reach its most interesting part,—the rise of the conquerer to the height of his power, and his final overthrow and exile. In order that new subscribers may obtain the whole of this monumental work, the publishers have made a rate of $5.00, for which one can have a year's subscription from November, '95, and all of the numbers for the past twelve months, from the beginning of Prof. Sloane's history.

THE SLATE WAS UNBROKEN.

CITY NOMINEES ARRANGED BEFORE THE CONVENTION WAS CALLED.

George DeMeza Gets the City Judgeship Nomination, While John Jonnson is Turned Down For Collectorship.

The Republican city convention was a remarkably short one last night, as it took only seventeen minutes to select their ticket.

The real work, however, was done between last Tuesday evening and last night and the wire-pulling did not cease until ex-Judge Codington called the meeting to order. The Republican Association rooms, in which the convention was held, began to fill long before eight o'clock and the delegates and their friends grouped themselves about the room and discussed the coming convention. The question of who will be the next City Collector was one of the most important. There were a number of candidates in the field, among whom were John N. Johnson, the present Collector; V. W. Naas, J. E. Mosher and Elias H. Bird. The Second ward's delegates were Johnson men, but Bird had the support of the First and Third wards, while during most of the contest the Fourth ward men remained on the fence, as it were. The City Judgeship has been the cause of considerable talk. George W. De Meza has been in the campaign from the first, and had the Fourth ward at his back. As the delegates from this ward equal in numbers any one of the other wards, he had a powerful friend. None of the other candidates could begin to think of getting all three of the other wards, so De Meza was nominated without much trouble.

The delegates were all present except M. S. Ackerman and J. P. Laire, of the Second ward, whose places were respectively filled by Howard Tracy and E. H. Ladd, Jr.

The meeting was called to order by ex Judge W. R. Codington, chairman of the city executive committee. John B. Dumont was unanimously chosen chairman and W. A. Westphal secretary. The secretary read the call and then it was decided by votes that the election officers should be appointed by the chairman. Chairman Dumont appointed the following: Judge, Geo. W. Rockfellow; inspector, John H. Tier, Jr.; clerk, W. W. Corbell.

The list of the delegates was then read and the nominating began.

The First ward delegates at large of the Coinmon Council were the first to be elected. D. S. Dunavan, chairman of the First ward delegation, stated that his ward had no nomination to make. Stephen A. Ginna, chairman of the Second ward party, nominated John B. Dumont. Jacob Kirkner, as the Third ward chairman, nominated A. C. Stebbins, and Harold Serrell was nominated from the Fourth ward by Justice William Newcorn, chairman of that delegation. No other nominations were made and a motion was made by Mr. Newcorn and carried that the secretary cast a ballot for the three men named.

The city treasurer was a cinch for Alex. Titsworth, as he was nominated from all the wards except the First. On motion of Mr. Ginna the secretary cast a ballot for him.

Elias H. Bird received the nomination for collector from the First and Third wards, while Mr. Ginna and Mr. Newcorn made no nomnations for their respective wards. Mr. Newcorn moved that the ballots be cast by the secretary, which motion was carried.

The city judge was the next office for which a candidate was to be named. There was silence from the first three wards, and then Justice Newcorn, in a few well-turned sentences, nominated George W. DeMeza as the Fourth ward's choice.

The secretary cast a ballot for him after a motion to that effect by Mr. Ginna was carried.

The First and Second Wards, respectively, nominated J. B. Coward and E. C. Mulford for the two commissioners of appeal. Mr. Mulford is one of the present incumbents. Mr. Dunavan moved that the secretary cast the usual ballot and the motion was carried. Charles F. Abbott was nominated by the Third ward delegation and was elected without opposition his opponents having seen the futility of running against him. Mr. Ginna made the usual motion that the secretary cast the ballot, which motion was carried.

The two chosen freeholders were the last to be selected and John H. Tier, Sr., and J. Frank Hubbard, the choices respectively of the First and Third wards were chosen to succeed themselves, Mr. Ginna making the motion to have the secretary cast the ballot.

Mr. Kirkner then moved that the chairman of the meeting and the chairmen of the different delegations be given power to fill all vacancies should any occur, which motion was seconded and carried. The convention then adjourned.

The convention was a very quiet one as well as short. There was considerable applause, however, when the councilmen at large were nominated and when Mr. Abbott was selected as school trustee.

A TALK ON MINUTE OBJECTS.

Stephen A. Krom Instructs an Audience on Bacteria.

There were many other attractions in the city last evening and the attendance at the lecture in the Y. M. C. A. Hall was not very large, but many of the best educated people were there and received from the words of Stephen Arthur Krom a very instructive as well as a very interesting lecture on bacteriology.

Mr. Krom's discourse was divided into two parts. The first part of the evening the lecturer treated his subject in a general way, stating in brief words the office which the different bacteria hold in the life of man. The reasons for the many contagious diseases which affect humanity were shown by the lecturer in very plain facts, and Mr. Krom said the time is coming when the cures for these diseases will be found and contagious diseases will be wiped off of the face of the earth.

Mr. Krom also stated to the great amusement of his audience that there were other kinds of bacteria besides the disease-producing ones, and it depended greatly in the kind of bacteria which the milk contained as to whether the butter and cheese would be of a good flavor or not. If all of the same kind of bacteria were used to sour or ripen the cream, the butter would be of a very much finer quality than if a mixture of many species were used. Thus bacteria hold an important office in the manufacture of some articles of food.

The latter part of the evening was spent in darkness and the audience was asked to follow with the lecturer the classification of the microbes which was shown by a diagram which was cast upon the screen by a stereopticon. This diagram at first was to the audience as a page of Xenephon is to a child in one of our grammer schools, but in a short time it was explained and everyone was well informed of the meaning of it.

The second picture showed the three different forms of bacteria, namely the micrococci, bacilli and sparilla. These bacteria vary from 1-250 000 of an inch in length to 1-25,000 of an inch. The third picture showed the different forms which are the causes of the different diseases.

Mr. Krom spoke very strongly for the use of the individual communion cups, stating that in a recent investigation made by an American that after the single communion cup had circulated through the congregation it contained just twenty-two different species of bacteria.

MANSLAUGHTER IS THE VERDICT.

Freehill Will Get Off With a Term in State Prison.

Lawyer Craig A. Marsh, senior counsel for the defendant, Frank Freehill, in the Rahway murder case, began to sum up for his client at ten o'clock yesterday morning, and was still talking at 2:15 in the afternoon. The lawyer put up a masterly argument for the accused man, and the general impression was that a verdict of manslaughter, or, at the most, murder in the second degree, would be rendered.

Lawyer Marsh dwelt strongly on the fact that Freehill had committed no overt act when the Rahway police went in pursuit of him and that, as the officers were no uniform or insignia to show they were police, the prisoner was not supposed to know them to be such. The lawyer claimed that Freehill, when he found himself hunted down by strange men, flourishing clubs or sticks, had a right to think his life was endangered and that his using the revolver was only in self-defence after he had warned them to fall back and not follow him.

The jury took the case at 4:30 yesterday afternoon and came into court this morning with a verdict of manslaughter. The maximum punishment for this crime is ten years. Freehill will be sentenced the first Wednesday in December. Craig A. Marsh, attorney for Freehill, was warmly congratulated on the outcome of the case.

Objects to Building a Sidewalk.

Street Commissioner Meeker instructed Contractor Michael Powers to lay a stone walk along the property of William Palmer Smith on Belvidere avenue, to comply with a city ordinance. Mr. Smith and family were in New York, and upon learning the fact Mr. Smith at once came on to Plainfield to consult with his lawyer and succeeded in having an injunction served on Commissioner Meeker. The work is at present at a standstill, and the result may be a lawsuit between Mr. Smith and the city.

Able Counsel.

The Elizabeth Daily Journal, the leading newspaper in Union county, thus speaks of Craig A. Marsh, of this city, who defended Murderer Freehill: "The prisoner had able counsel. Mr. Craig A. Marsh, who made the address to the jury, spoke for three hours and a half yesterday, and his eloquent and forcible interpretation of the law as applied to the case was endorsed by the Court in the charge."

A YOUNG GIRL ASSAULTED

GRABBED BY A MAN RIGHT IN THE HEART OF THE CITY.

She Screamed in Her Fright and the Strange Man Ran Away—The Police Notified But Have No Description of Him

When walking along Richmond street last evening shortly after half-past seven, Miss Agnes Boyd, of 843 Richmond street, was held up by an unknown man. She escaped before he had a chance to accomplish his apparent object of theft. Miss Boyd is a young girl about fifteen years of age, and her home is close to Watchung avenue. Last evening she wanted to see a friend residing on Fifth street and started off on a run. When about half way to the corner of Putnam avenue she heard footsteps behind her and stopped.

The next instant a hand grasped her by the shoulder. Supposing it to be some younger brother she looked around, but before she could see who it was another hand was clapped over her eyes and then placed over her mouth. She saw a fleshy man, rather short and with a sandy mustache. After struggling in the grasp of the stranger she, at last, forced his hand away from her mouth and screamed. The man released his hold and fled in the direction of Putnam avenue, while the badly frightened girl ran as fast as possible toward home where she startled her family with the intelligence that she had been held up.

The man is supposed to have been partially drunk as Miss Boyd smelt the fumes of whiskey on his breath. The police were notified by Mr. Boyd but with the slight description it will be hard to find the culprit.

BORROWED, BUT NOT RETURNED.

Two Colored Women Have a Legal War About Clothes.

The case in tort of Maria Pleasant against Amanda Dunham was tried in Justice Newcorn's court this morning. Lawyer H. C. Runyon represented the plaintiff and Lawyer Geo. W. DeMeza the defendant.

The facts are that about a month ago Mrs. Scott, a laundress at the Revere House, had $4.50 stolen from her. Soon afterward Maria Pleasant purchased a coat and a pair of shoes. Amanda Dunham heard of it and going to Maria said she would like to have them as Mrs. Scott wanted to see them. Maria let her take them and that is the last they have been seen, though Amanda says she left them in the laundry at the Revere House. After hearing both sides of the case Justice Newcorn reserved his decision till Monday.

SAN SOUCI WHIST CLUB.

Second Meeting for the Season Held Thursday Evening.

The San Souci Whist Club held its second semi-monthly meeting Thursday evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Murray Burtis, of Sandford avenue, under the auspices of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Lowe, and a very enjoyable evening was passed. After the game was over a collation was served and the prizes awarded. Mrs. B. Darby won first lady's prize, a handsome sofa cushion, while Mr. Darby was successful in securing the second prize for the gentlemen, a valuable penknife. The booby prizes were very significant. The lady's first prize was an egg beater and the second a whisk broom.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Hamilton, Fanwood; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Stater, Mr. and Mrs. Neil, Mr. and Mrs. B. Darby, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Messersmith, and Mr. and Mrs. Murray Burtis. The next meeting will be at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Darby.

University Extension Lecture Studies.

Arrangements have been completed for the delivering of six of these lectures by Prof. Riggs, of Rutgers college, New Brunswick. Its the intention of the committee in charge to make these popular lectures by putting them at the low price named (75 cents for the six) to bring them within the reach of those who are attentives excluded from sources of education by the high prices charged for concerts and lectures. Tickets can be had on application to Major Wm. D. Miller, Mr. Isaac L. Miller, Rev. E. M. Rodman, or at Estil's book store.

The Rig Came Back.

Yesterday a Westfield man hired a rig at Roberts' livery stable on North avenue and, in company with a Plainfielder, drove to Scotch Plains, intending to return early in the evening. The Westfield man went on to Westfield with the rig and the Plainfield man came home on the stage. As the evening progressed Mr. Roberts began to have fears that the rig had been stolen. He telephoned to the surrounding towns to the police, and at last located the rig at Westfield, where it had been driven by the man who hired it and who had become inebriated. The property was returned and proper explanations made.

THE AUTUMN FAIRIES.

Little fairy feet that prance
On the leaves cobl—
Little feet that gayly dance
On the cver cold.

Little wings that rob the sun
Of his choicest beams,
Flattering in the meadows dim,
And in the streams.

Cheering flash of light divine,
Softly peeping through
All the gilded charms that twine
In the morning dew.

Painting o'ers a springing weed
Mortal fears have none,
Till the glad expanse of mead
Gleams with autumn sun.

A NOTED OLD HOUSE.

A Residence in Georgetown and Something of Its History.

There is a house in Georgetown which from its foundation had a foreign influence about it. It is a large, substantial, though unpretentious mansion, minus low windows, turrets and other accessories which mark the modern dwelling. It stands at the corner of Twenty-ninth and N streets. It was planned by a Frenchman of fine attainments, literary tastes and a great linguist. He held office under the government, and not having a surplus of the "needful" was compelled to mortgage the house. The money was loaned from the estate of the celebrated Polish patriot, General Thaddeus Kosciusko, by Colonel George Bomford, the owner at that time of beautiful Kalorama.

The owner did not live to pay off his comfortable home, and his widow was compelled to rent it in order to pay off the mortgage. The first foreign tenant was Count Napoleon Bonaparte. His wife was Victoria, daughter of General Gratiot. The count was a charming man and most agreeable in all his business dealings with her, whom he termed his "amiable landlady!"

The minister from Mexico was the next foreign tenant, but he died shortly after taking office.

Baron Gerols lived eight years in the house and was so pleased with it that he made a proposition to purchase it. The Chevalier de Onis, the Spanish minister, whose wife was the beautiful Miss Chapman, granddaughter of the celebrated Dr. Chapman of Philadelphia, was a tenant during the time when there was a scare here on account of the southern troops being near the capital promised to hoist the Spanish flag should the place be taken.

The house did not lack for distinguished American tenants. R. Barnwell Rhett of South Carolina, a noted secessionist, succeeded Count Montholon and purchased from him his elegant Parisian furniture; Mr. Allen, an editor from St. Louis; Governor Fairfield, of Maine; Governor Colonel Charles Eliot, the great engineer; Mr. Worthington, a gentleman of wealth, whose daughter married Colonel William H. Phillips, a name of note in Washington, and others.—Washington Star.

"Maryland, My Maryland."

True merit in a song is a passport which no sentry will question, and long before peace had been declared James R. Randall's "Maryland, My Maryland," that fiery bit of rhymed eloquence, had crossed the enemy's lines and exacted its meed of praise from the literary circles at the North. It first appeared three days after the fall of Sumter. "It was the best poem produced on either side during the war." And the poet himself writes, "Soon after its appearance abundant evidence came to me that, whatever the fate of the Confederacy might be, my song would survive it."

It was not long before the fact became out in England Mr. Randall received an autograph letter from a member of Lord Byron's family, filled with expressions of admiration of the stirring lines, a request for a manuscript copy, and an invitation to the author to visit his correspondent in London. About this time Mrs. John R. Thompson, for many years connected with The Southern Literary Messenger, happened to be abroad, and upon his return he said to her husband:

"I envy you above all men."

"Why?" asked the poet.

"Because," said Mr. Thompson, "when I was in London I heard a young woman one of the most beautiful and charming of women, who asked if I would not like to hear a song of my southern country. When I replied in the affirmative, she went to the piano and sang 'Maryland, My Maryland.' After she had finished she turned to me and said:

"'When you are the friend who wrote that tell him that you heard it sung by a Russian girl who lives at Archangel, north of Siberia, and who loves to sing it there."—Philadelphia Times.

The Joke Was on Him.

I think the maid up at the B.'s must be an altogether remarkable person, if half they tell of her is true. A young man went to call on Miss B. one evening. Miss B. was not home, but she had left word with the maid that anybody who called was to wait her return. Accordingly this young man was shown into the dimly lighted drawing room, and found himself a comfortable chair in a corner. He was weary. In fact, the man who told me the story said he had been "all in," whatever that may be. At any rate, he fell into a doze. When he awoke, Miss B. was still absent. There was the same dim light in the room. He looked at his watch. It was 4 o'clock. There was only one thing to do, of course. He took his shoes off and slipped out into the hall. His hat he had left on, and this is all there is of it, except that he has never dared to look Miss B. in the face again, for he can't make out whether she knows it or not.—Washington Post.

In His Way.

Elder George Champlin was a colored preacher who lived and preached for many years in Rhode Island. He was a man of excellent common sense and no little wit. At one time some of his hearers complained that he had been rather too personal and severe in one of his sermons.

"When I am preaching," responded the elder, with a twinkle from his keen gray eyes at the remonstrants, "when I am preaching I try to shoot right at the devil every time, but if any one gets between me and the devil, why, of course, brethren, he will be liable to get hurt."—Youth's Companion.

A Shocking Example.

THE SUPERSTITIONS.

MOST PERSONS CHERISH A SECRET BELIEF IN SOME OMEN.

There Are Not Many Who Will Admit It, but Probably All Men Are to Some Extent Believers In Signs, Though They Fail In a Majority of Cases.

Every human being has his pet superstition. It came to him almost in the cradle and has remained with him, by a strange perversity, all his life. Man is too proud to admit that he is superstitious, but he no real foundation and must fall to pieces when its stability is tested, but no matter how silly a superstition may be, once imbedded in memory by a single instance when it came true, all its signal failures will generally fail to loosen its grip upon the human being who has been taught it in childhood. A set superstition will lose not a jot of its influence should it fail every time in a hundred, provided it proves true in the instance only. This fact shows how men are joined to their superstitious idols.

"Sing before breakfast, cry before night," is the most ridiculous of all old bogies and the most destructive of mirth, laughter and happiness. It is not difficult to prove its fallacy. Let every man, woman and child sing before breakfast, sing, howl, if they cannot give forth melodious sounds, laugh merrily and rejoice as the coming of day, like the birds, whose first song upon waking or on the appearance of the first streak of dawn is to sing happily with pure joy for the return of another day. Then let them cry as the birds track, so that for driving or racing purposes he had, in other hands, become practically worthless. When I learned his history, I gave him a good bit on the ground of the cruel bits with which he had formerly been driven, and which lacerated his mouth to such an extent as to make him unmanageable. Within a few days after I matched him against some of the fastest trotters in Baltimore.

"If he won the night and did not get mad, it took a good trotter to beat him a mile. For some reason or other, however, he would not repeat heats. One mile was as much as he would stand, for when he was brought out for the second heat he would invariably bolt the track, and no man was ever found strong enough to control him when in one of his crazy fits. Myself and friends won a pot of money with him in single heats. He had as pretty a trotting action as any one cared to see, splendid knee action, and how fast he could put 'em in when he wanted to!

"His reputation extended to the surrounding country, and I sold him to a sporting parties in Norfolk for $500. He subsequently won some races in fast time for a mile and certainly was a wonder. He was the best single trotting mule that we have any history of."—Washington News.

A NOVELIST'S BLUNDER.

Forgot He Had Killed Off a Character and Had to Resuscitate Him.

A great master of the art of throwing off stories by daily installments was Ponson du Terrail. When he set out to write his "Rocambole" he kept three running at the same time in different papers. His fertile imagination was never at a loss, but his memory was treacherous. He was apt to forget today what he did with a hero or heroine yesterday. To help his memory he at first noted briefly in copy books what happened to his men and women, but finding that often he could not read his own writing, he invented a new system. He procured large index books in which he gummed the names of his characters as they were born. Supposing there were, three stories running, there were three sets of alphabetical gummed pariteuse. When a character was settled off, the little man or woman in lead was taken away from the alphabet and laid aside.

One day when Ponson du Terrail was all behind in his work, he set himself to his task without examining the slain. His hand seized the book in terrible blunder. He had forgotten that he had killed Rocambole—the still famous Rocambole—the previous feuilleton, and, to the great surprise of the world, he made the talk again as if nothing out of the common had befallen him. This resuscitation is considered one of the most curious things in the history of the romans feuilleton.—Boston Transcript.

Stars.

The modern astronomical principle on which stars are classified—namely, the resemblance and difference between their spectra—and which makes the nebulæ, and this remarkable phenomenon, have led to various attempts to indicate the stage of advancement which each individual celestial orb in its life's history or development. Remarking upon this a recent writer cites Dr. Scheiner as putting, in his late work on stellar photography, the stars whose spectra contain the bright lines of helium and hydrogen in the first subdivision of his first class in view, and Beta Lyræ and Gamma Cassiopeæ being two such stars. He regards them as having atmospheres composed of those gases, enormously extended, and surrounding them as globes of stars and possibly hotter than the gaseous envelopes of their older companions. On the basis of this theory the query is considered pertinent how long it may be since our world was in the condition of Beta Lyræ, whether any helium now floats in our atmosphere, and whether that particular portion which is now embedded in the earth's crust got there, and other similar questions.—New York Sun.

Soup and Dyspepsia.

Frenchmen, who, as is well known, are particularly fond of soup, are dismayed to find a recent writer, M. Marvaud, declaring that that food or beverage is the cause of all the ills that dyspeptic nature is heir to. He accounts for this, the practice of beginning dinner with soup causes a distension of the stomach that is fatal to the process of digesting the solids which follow. Moreover, as all this warm soup is not enough, the same writer declares that there is little or no nourishment in it, and that as it is usually eaten very hot, it injures the enamel of the teeth.—London News.

FINNEGAN'S CRAZY MULE.

He Had Speed and a Habit of Not Turning Out For Hacks.

"Did you ever hear of Finnegan's mule?" queried Charles Mann, doorkeeper of the press gallery of the house of representatives, to a group of bystanders. He was probably the greatest mule ever foaled. He could trot a mile in 2:40 if you could control him, but there was the rub. He unquestionably carried, on the dam's side, race horse blood. When I innocently purchased him, about ten years ago, I knew nothing of his past record. The day after my father wanted a mule to work in a treadmill, and I purchased him at an auction sale.

"One day I wanted to go to the Pimlico races in company with a friend of mine, and as no horse was at hand we patched up an old harness, hoisted an old, rickshackle gig and started for the track. The mule drove quietly enough and seemed entirely devoid of guile. When we drove up to the Pimlico gate we found a line of hacks in front of us. The driver of one of the rear hacks happened to look back as we drove up, and after making a careful inspection of the mule suddenly shouted to his companions in front of him in a loud voice, 'Say, boys, here's Finnegan's mule!' Then began the most exciting stampede you ever saw of hacks. Why, they fairly fell over one another in getting away.

"Subsequently I ascertained the cause of the excitement. It appears that the mule was well known in certain quarters in Baltimore and was known as Finnegan's crazy mule. He had a habit, when owned by Finnegan, of running away in any vehicle in front of him and destroying the same. No one had been able to hold him when excited by meeting a hack on the track, so that for driving or racing purposes he had, in other hands, become practically worthless. When I learned his history, I gave him a good bit on the ground of the cruel bits with which he had formerly been driven, and which lacerated his mouth to such an extent as to make him unmanageable. Within a few days after I matched him against some of the fastest trotters in Baltimore.

"If he won the night and did not get mad, it took a good trotter to beat him a mile. For some reason or other, however, he would not repeat heats. One mile was as much as he would stand, for when he was brought out for the second heat he would invariably bolt the track, and no man was ever found strong enough to control him when in one of his crazy fits. Myself and friends won a pot of money with him in single heats. He had as pretty a trotting action as any one cared to see, splendid knee action, and how fast he could put 'em in when he wanted to!

"His reputation extended to the surrounding country, and I sold him to a sporting parties in Norfolk for $500. He subsequently won some races in fast time for a mile and certainly was a wonder. He was the best single trotting mule that we have any history of."—Washington News.

A NOVELIST'S BLUNDER.

Forgot He Had Killed Off a Character and Had to Resuscitate Him.

A great master of the art of throwing off stories by daily installments was Ponson du Terrail. When he set out to write his "Rocambole" he kept three running at the same time in different papers. His fertile imagination was never at a loss, but his memory was treacherous. He was apt to forget today what he did with a hero or heroine yesterday. To help his memory he at first noted briefly in copy books what happened to his men and women, but finding that often he could not read his own writing, he invented a new system. He procured large index books in which he gummed the names of his characters as they were born. Supposing there were, three stories running, there were three sets of alphabetical gummed pariteuse. When a character was settled off, the little man or woman in lead was taken away from the alphabet and laid aside.

One day when Ponson du Terrail was all behind in his work, he set himself to his task without examining the slain. His hand seized the book in terrible blunder. He had forgotten that he had killed Rocambole—the still famous Rocambole—the previous feuilleton, and, to the great surprise of the world, he made the talk again as if nothing out of the common had befallen him. This resuscitation is considered one of the most curious things in the history of the romans feuilleton.—Boston Transcript.

Old Eli won't down.

What is the Board of Trade doing?

There are 424,979 children of school age in New Jersey.

At the end of his term Governor Werts will resume the practice of law at Jersey City.

Thomas B. Reed thinks that he will be the next Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The Summit Record thinks that a few hangings would improve the moral tone of Union county.

What an unfaithful Republican Editor Runyon is. He says not a word either for or against in his paper.

There is talk of affidavits galore in the present municipal campaign. They are all conceived in a spirit of sour grapes.

The amount of money left in the hands of the State Treasurer at the end of the fiscal year, October 31st, was $893,747.88.

New Brunswick is going to ask for a bill from the incoming Legislature giving them a Councilman-at-Large, so in the future to prevent any more deadlocks.

North Plainfield people are commencing to talk about pushing a bill through the incoming Legislature looking to the annexation of the borough to the city.

Governor-elect Griggs is said to be in favor of putting the clerks of the Court of Chancery and Supreme Court on salaries instead of fees. These places are now worth from $20,000 to $40,000.

The Illinois State Board of Arbitration have only been in working order for three months, yet out of thirty controversies between employes and employers they have amicably settled all but one.

A decision of the Missouri Supreme Court would appear to draw the teeth from the Australian ballot law of that State. The decision is that a ballot is not vitiated by the fact that the voter writes his name upon it.

Many men become great in a day by a combination of circumstances, and then vanish into oblivion as the tail end of a political campaign, perhaps a little slower than they arose to notoriety, but none the less effectually.

When Governor-elect Griggs takes his seat New Jersey will have had four Republican Governors. The first was William A. Newell, elected in 1856, the second was Charles S. Olden, elected in 1859, and the third was Marcus L. Ward, elected in 1865.

Several of the faithful G. O. P. adherents are looking Trentonward. But there are only a limited number of places to be filled, and for every joyful man there will be a dozen disappointed ones after the first of January.

The Jersey City News, one of the most out-and-out Democratic papers in the State, says that Grover Cleveland can not carry one State in the Union on a third term nomination. Not because he is Grover Cleveland, but because the American people are unalterably opposed to third terms.

The new school law in New Jersey, which brings all the schools of every township under one management, has compelled a readjustment of school taxes, which in many instances has caused a very large increase in the tax rate in some sections, and thus has given rise to great discontent. This discontent called out a mass meeting of the citizens of North Vineland on Monday evening, which passed a resolution condemning the new law and directing that a suit be brought to test its constitutionality.

With reference to the Freehill murder case the Elizabeth Journal says editorially:

A tramp, armed with burglars' tools and a deadly weapon, is confronted by a officer of the law. He shoots and kills the officer to escape arrest. If that is not murder, what is it? If a vicious man, armed for burglary and deadly assault, kills an officer who is discharging what he thinks is his duty—they will agree—what protection is there for faithful officers if such a man escapes adequate punishment on a technicality? This undoubtedly expresses the sentiment of many people in this county with respect to the verdict rendered this morning. It is not a sentiment against court or counsel or jury, but against the legal condition and technicalities which prevent the punishment of murderous tramps and burglars.

The Lone Star twinkles no more.

New Jersey has 9,027 licensed drinking places.

Secretary of State Kelsey's term of office expires April 1, 1897.

Councilman Frazee says that he will not serve even if he is elected.

Editor Runyon's idea of police reform is to oust the man against whom he is opposed for personal reasons.

The coming session of the United States Senate will have 400 presidential nominations for postmasters to act on.

Editor Runyon's Republican flamboyancy is missing. Why is it? An interesting story lies behind the reason.

Because one man has satisfactorily filled an office for a long period of years it does not imply that another man cannot perform the duties of the office with just as great efficiency and satisfaction.

Congratulations by mail and telegraph have poured in to C. A. Marsh for his brilliant victory in the Freehill alias Sloane murder trial. To save the life of a tramp who was seen by many witness to shoot down a police officer after firing three shots, while the tramp, as a fugitive from justice, was trying to escape arrest, having his pockets filled with a kit of burglar's tools, fuses and dynamite cartridges, may probably be regarded as a great professional triumph. No one can justly criticise Mr. Marsh for his successful effort to reduce the verdict to manslaughter, as he was assigned by the court, and it was his professional duty to make the best possible defense for the accused. No doubt he persuaded himself as well as the jury that the accused did not deserve death. His speech to the jury occupied three hours and a half in its delivery. The prosecuting attorney made an able and eloquent reply, and the judge charged the jury impartially. After being out all night the jury this morning rendered a verdict of manslaughter.

A Legislative forecast says that great interest centres in the approaching session of the Legislature. If the policy suggested by the Governor-elect is carried out, the session will be a short one, and fewer laws will be placed on the statue books than for many a year. There is really little need of much legislation this year. Most of the remedial laws were passed last year and the one previous. Some of these need a little patching up, as, for instance, the appropriation bill. This is really an experiment, and a number of changes are already seen to be advisable. The constitutional amendments will be through last winter will come up for further consideration. There will probably be no trouble with their passage again this year, as is necessary before they can be submitted to the people, unless it may be the one providing for biennial sessions of the Legislature. This would legislate out of existence a Republican Senate, and some of the party leaders think this ill-advised. There has been a rumor that the amendment prohibiting all kinds of lotteries would be passed, but there is no foundation for this. The Republicans expect to push it right through.

BOROUGH EDUCATION.

Board of Education Fix the Period for Vacation.

The Board of Education, of North Plainfield, held its regular meeting at the school house last evening. Trustees Wells, Joseph, Overton, Schutt, and McCutchen were present. Routine work engaged the attention of the board. The monthly salary list and bills for supplies and repairs amounting to $1,516.66 were audited and ordered paid. The holiday vacation was fixed to begin on Friday, December 20th to extend to January 6, 1896.

The principal reported that the teachers were in attendance upon a teachers institute at Somerville, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, of this week, an attendance which is required by law.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury.

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces, such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. ADVICE FOR THE JUNIORS.

REVS. RANDOLPH AND RICHARDSON TALK TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

Rev. Mr. Randolph Thinks That We Live in Almost a Golden Age—Rev. Mr. Richardson Talks of the Principles.

Grace M. E. church was hardly able to hold the large number of people that desired to be present last evening when Rev. Herbert F. Randolph preached the annual sermon to the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. One hundred and twelve members of the order, representing Franklin and Somerset councils, of this city and North Plainfield, Twilight, of Scotch Plains, William G. Holjon, of Dunellen, and Pioneer, of Round Brook, were present and listened to one of the best discourses ever delivered before the order. The pulpit platform was neatly arranged with various colored chrysanthemums, while on each side was placed an American flag.

After the Scripture selection had been read from the third chapter of Proverbs an anthem was rendered by the choir, with solo parts by Miss Alice Carroll and Miss Angleman. Another selection was rendered by Miss Grace Carroll, Miss Alice Carroll and Charles Hummer, and a duet by the Misses Carroll. Miss Grace Carroll presided at the organ. Mr. Randolph then took his text from Proverbs 22: 28, "Remove not the ancient landmarks which thy fathers have set." In part he said: There is a time in the history of every Nation when the pinnacle of success is reached, a golden age so to speak. A period that is made famous by its poets, scientists and historians. A landmark of the nation. In olden times if anyone dared remove these landmarks it subjected them to the severest punishment.

While perhaps we are not living in a golden age, we are very near it, and today we stand head and shoulders above all behind us. We have no Roman arena, no King or subjects. The great resources of our country are incalculable, and yet we are only a babe in arms. Men scorn the pick and shovel covered with beads of sweat dropping from the hands of those who labored hard to acquire a fortune for them. There is a spirit on the part of some that would put away the cradle they were rocked in.

There is also a spirit to give the devil a front seat, but there are people who protest against these things and place a safeguard on our institutions. I understand your order represents great and vital fundamental principles. In the first place a member must have a good moral character. You must never remove that landmark; secondly you believe in a Supreme Being, and you should guard well that landmark; thirdly you are in opposition to a union of church and State. God made this distinction many years ago, and man's conscience is an oracle of God; fourthly you believe in fidelity to the public schools, and this we all believe that; fifthly, that the Bible ought to be in the public schools.

It isn't necessary to teach scholars how many spirits stand on the point of a needle or how to split a hair. It is easier to teach a blockhead algebra than to teach a bright boy to tell the truth. A boy's natural sense must be educated or he is just as apt to be a forger or a dynamiter as anything else. Teach them the undefiled word of God.

In the way of advice let me tell you to be careful how you use your weapons, know your foe before you attack him. One of the most unpleasant pastoral visits I ever made was to a home where there was a bull dog with confused ideas, for he didn't know the difference between a pastor and a tramp.

There are men in public offices who would not steal a pin in their own homes, yet they would put their hands in the public treasury and take thousands. We all need zeal with knowledge and a spirit of patriotism.

Rev. J. W. Richardson paid the following tribute to the principles of the order of Jr. O. U. A. M., in his sermon at New Market yesterday afternoon:

Brethern of the Order, all hail to your principle! You exhibit another phrase of the brotherhood of men. The secrecy of your ties is not because your deeds will not bear the light: it is the secrecy of the family.

With that secrecy, you go into the sick chamber and watch over the delirious brother who wrestles with damp sweat and death, and you fan his fevered and cool his parched tongue—and, the world knows it not. With that same secrecy you go into the bereaved home with the consolations of religion; the door is closed against want; the orphans are protected—and, the world knows it not.

You see a brother in distress, with that secrecy you go to him and place in his hand the kind of sympathy which has commercial value in the markets, and the world does not know it—no one calls him a pauper. This is the secrecy and tie of a family. It reflects honor upon the organization.

But in addition to this care of the sick, and burial of the dead, is the undying love you cherish for your Fatherland. Like an army, with steel swords and burnished rifles, you stand on guard about the principles that have made America grand in the sight of nations. I stood in the cemetery at Waterbury, and united in a service of love over a fallen brother. As the strains of the dirge floated out upon the still air, a thought with golden wings, phoenix-like, sprang into life from the ashes of that mound. The heart that had beat warm with patriotism was cold and silent, but above the old flag was unfurled. Ah, men may pass away, but how deathless is the principle for which Americans contend. So hopes makes bright the future. You too, shall pass away, but over that sacred pile of yellow dust which covers your dust, other comrades shall sing a pean of hope, and so on, through the years; the dear old flag always unfurled, till in the dawn of that brighter morning, when Christ, the Elder Brother, shall come, the emblem of liberty shall give place to the banner of eternal victory over sin and wrong.

AT THE CRIB.

Great Pressure for Public Places at the State Capitol.

The pressure of the office seekers is becoming burdensome to Governor-elect Griggs. Hundreds of applications have already been made, though there are less than fifty places which the new Governor can fill next year. These include the Chancery clerkship, a Justice of the Supreme Court to succeed Justice Dixon, a keeper of the State prison, two Democratic members of the State Board of Assessors, three lay Judges of the Court of Errors and Appeals, three members of the State Board of Taxation, an inspector of factories and workshops, and six deputies, a number of honorary places on State Boards, and prosecutors, law and lay Judges in several counties. There are more candidates for the prison keepership than for any other place. They include ex-Congressman Brewer and ex-Sheriff Chas. H. Skirm of Mercer, Senator Packer and ex-Senator Roe of Gloucester, ex-Prison Supervisor Henry L. Butler of Passaic, David Cartwright of Essex, and half a dozen men not so well known from other counties. For the place of Allan T. McDermott, Clerk in Chancery, there has been a falling off in applications since Mr. Griggs announced his determination to indorse Legislature Barre in view of its ante-election promises and place that office and the Supreme Court Clerkship on a salary basis. He thinks $6,000 a year about the proper figure, as that is what the Comptroller, Treasurer, and Secretary of State get. Now the Chancery Clerkship fees are worth over $20,000 a year, and the Supreme Court Clerkship about $40,000. Sheriff Toffey of Hudson, Major Carl Lentz of Essex, and Senator Herbert of Middlesex, are regarded as the leading candidates for the Chancery Clerkship.

DROPPED THE GUN.

And the Charge Narrowly Escaped Hitting Two Persons.

A few days ago William Friday, of Warren township, called at the farm house of Rev. George Bowers, which is near his place for the purpose of getting his son to accompany him on a few hours hunt for rabbits. The dominee's son was anxious to go and went into an adjoining room for his double barrelled gun. His mother, and his sister who was recently married, were entertaining Mr. Friday when the young man appeared with his gun. The weapon by some means fell from the boy's hands to the floor and struck both hammers of the fowling piece with such force as to discharge both barrels which were loaded. The charges fortunately passed between his mother and sister and did no other damage than to tear an ugly hole in the wainscoating, frighten his mother and sister almost out of their wits, and scare the youth so as to declare that he would not go hunting then, or even hereafter.

No Injunct on Issued.

There was no mandamus issued against Street Commissioner Meeker to prevent him from building a walk around the property of William Palmer Smith on Belvidere avenue. By mutual agreement the work was stopped for one day, and was resumed this morning. An attempt was made to procure an injunction, but it was without success. The sidewalk will be constructed of crushed stone.

FOUR TICKETS IN THE FIELD.

THE CITY CAMPAIGN WILL BOOM FROM NOW UNTIL TUESDAY.

Socialist Labor Party Nominate a Whole City Ticket—Councilman Frazee Consents to Run for Re-election in the Fourth.

The time is now up in which petitions for new tickets for the City Election may be filed and Plainfield voters will have four tickets to pick from, the straight Republican, the Citizen's, the Wheelmen's, and the Socialist-Labor. The certificates of a convention, at which the Socialist Labor ticket was nominated, were filed last evening at the last moment, thus making a fourth party in the field. But as the Citizen's and Wheelmen's tickets are exactly the same, there will really only be three different tickets. The Republicans are the only ones, however, to nominate candidates for all the offices. The nominations of the Socialist-Labor party were made at a convention held November 22d, at which John W. James was the presiding officer.

The following candidates were named: Councilmen - at - Large, Charles Grieb and William E. Van-Norden; Collector, Arthur Scott; City Judge, James Bell; Commissioner of Appeal, J. Winzenreid; Fourth Ward Councilman, Richard Higham; Third Ward Councilman, Claus R. Wallander.

At the last moment, Councilman Vincent L. Frazee allowed his name to be filed as a candidate for the Fourth ward councilmanship on the Citizens' and Wheelmen's tickets. It was only after considerable deliberation that Mr. Frazee consented to run for re-election. The petition by which he was nominated as the Wheelmens' candidate was signed by the following: H. M. Sherwin, Patrick Marron, Edward E. Vail, Theodore Kurzhals, T. E. Morgans, Charles VanWinkle, Frank R. VanDerhoof, James L. Love and I. Lederer. The Citizens' nomination was signed by Abraham Angleman, G. W. Force, T. A. Kurzhals, John Roth, H. Roth, Jr., J. J. L. Holmes, Robert Tingley, H. A. Weber, John Corey, C. A. Leveridge and T. V. Saums.

AN ABSENCE OF FORMALITY.

IT MAKES A DELIGHTFUL TIME FOR MR. AND MRS. SQUIRES' GUESTS.

Hope Chapel Bible Students Enjoy Saturday Evening in Sociability and Listening to a Versatile Man—Those Present.

One of the most delightful receptions held in this city in some time was given Saturday evening by Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Squires at their beautiful home on Watchung avenue, to the Bible classes taught by H. R. Munger and Silas Yerkes at Hope chapel. There were also a number of the teachers present. The genuine hospitality of both host and hostess was paramount and their home was thrown open wide to receive their guests. Mrs. H. C. Squires received and was assisted by Mrs. S. R. Struthers and Mrs. William B. Ostrom.

The freedom from formality was quite noticeable during the entire evening. After the guests had arrived, they were all provided with seats, and Mr. Squires introduced Mr. Hart, of New York, who entertained those present for over an hour with amusing recitations and songs. Mr. Hart is an artist of no mean merit, and he succeeded admirably in his undertaking, that of pleasing all. His selections included some exceedingly amusing anecdotes about "Lee Thruckmuch" who was an habitual stutterer, and the following songs: "The Turnkey," from Rob Roy; "A Pathetic Ballad," "Yeoman's Wedding Song," "His Own Mother Wouldn't Know Him Now;" "The Belfry Tower," "Standing on the Corner;" "The Verdict Was," and "The Koster's Courtship." Miss Carrie Dewey was the accompanist. He succeeded in keeping his audience in a continual laughter. When Mr. Hart had concluded his programme, Mr. Squires suggested that those present sing one of the chapel hymns, Rev. G. Kenedy Newell took charge and one of the hymns was rendered. The balance of the evening was then devoted to social intercourse, during which excellent refreshments were served in abundance. A feature was an immense cake, which was named the "Wedding Cake," and each one was given a piece to take home in remembrance of the event.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Squires, Rev. and Mrs. G. Kennedy Newell, Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Munger, Mr. and Mrs. Silas Yerkes, Mrs. and Mrs. S. R. Struthers, Mr. and Mrs. William B. Ostrom, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. H. Otis Newman, Mr. and Mrs. Hansen, Mr. and Mrs. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Higgins, Mr. and Mrs. Whitlock, Mr. and Mrs. Force, Mr. and Mrs. Harris, Mr. and Mrs. Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Weber, Mr. and Mrs. Bowman, Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery, Mr. and Mrs. Bushby, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Gray, Mr. and Mrs. William Gray, Mr. and Mrs. Morning, Mr. and Mrs. Page, Mr. and Mrs. Pearce, Mr. and Mrs. Hill, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. McComas, Mr and Mrs. Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. McInnes, Mr. and Mrs. Wharton, Mr. and Mrs. Leighs, Mr. and Mrs. Gow, Mr. and Mrs. Pearson, Mr. and Mrs. Farlee, Mrs. Bittell, Mrs. Roll, Mrs. O'Neal, Mrs. Sheldon, Mrs. Shepherd, Mrs. Landen, Mrs. Rounsville, Mrs. Bunn, Mrs. Manchester, Mrs. Radin, Mrs. Cox, Mrs. DeHart, Mrs. Green, Mrs. Myers, Mrs. Wellnse, Mrs. Bassett, Mrs. Frank, Mrs. Cundy, the Misses Wilson, and Misses Nellie Bittell, Helen Hall, Jessie Stewart, Ellen Low, Carrie Dewey, Marie Newman, Miss Hunter, Miss Force, Miss Harris, Miss Hall, Messrs. Newman, Landen, Farlee, Dye, Hordin, Muir, Gordon, Dunham, Peebles, Cashman and Young.

Avoid the Rush.

Do not fail to secure your boxes and reserve seats for the coming Firemen's Fair, to witness the great dances and drills which will form the opening part each evening, and will be different at each representation. The booths have been given to the different ladies who kindly take part, and they are hard at work preparing to make a grand display of articles, both useful and ornamental.

MORE ABOUT SEWER BEDS.

ADDITIONAL FACTS AS TO HOW THE SYSTEM WORKS.

Only One Bed to be Used at a Time, Thus Avoiding the Possibility of Any Offence Troubling Nearby Residents.

As a supplement to the descriptions published in The Daily Press of the work now being done at the sewage disposal beds, the following explanation of the proposed manner of operating them will be interesting:

The sewage will reach the Smock farm by gravity through the twenty-four-inch outfall-sewer, just completed by Mr. Marsden, and will run into the screening tank described in the former article. The sewage will flow downward, then upward through a horizontal screen, which will retain the coarser materials, breaking up the greater portion of them. From there the flow will be through the eighteen-inch pipes laid in the dividing banks between the beds to gate-wells about four feet square, from which the water may be made to flow on to any one of the beds desired. There are drains under all the beds, about forty feet apart, each one running to the brook, the drains being covered one foot deep with gravel, but the rest of the ditch is filled with sand. It is not intended to have the water find its way too readily to the underdrains, but rather to have it percolate slowly through the whole body of sand between the drains, and so be purified before reaching the brook through the four-inch outlets.

Only one bed will be used at a time, each one being given a rest of several days after flowing, thus allowing the water to soak away and the air to follow it into the pores of the sand; before another application of sewage.

The screenings will have to be removed occasionally from the tank, and may be disposed as may be found most desirable; they may be buried, burned or deodorized and used as a fertilizer. It is not expected that there will be a sufficient quantity of the screenings to present any difficulty in their disposal.

The high part of the farm is being graded off just enough to allow the sewage to flow out of the pipes on to the beds, while low part is leveled off and will be filled six feet deep with sand obtained from the high part and eventually from the Smock tract. The two rows of beds nearest Dunellen avenue are five feet higher than the three rows nearest the brook, thus reducing the amount of material to be moved as much as possible.

The low lands along the brook are composed of clay and loam, but this is six feet below the grade of the beds, so will have no influence whatever on the work of purification.

A Quartette of Compositors.

Twenty years ago the New Brunswick Times had on its force of compositors four bright young men named Gibson, Mattison, Morrison and Boyd. These young men were not of the kind of typos who degenerate into tramp printers, but were full of ambition and determination to succeed, and they did succeed. Compositor Gibson is now City Comptroller John S. Gibson, of Newark; Compositor Mattison is now Editor and Publisher John H. Mattison, of the Somerville Messenger, one of the leading journals of Somerset county; Compositor Morrison is Thomas W. Morison, who founded the Plainfield Evening News and made it a very profitable paper; and Compositor Boyd is Hugh Boyd, proprietor of the New Brunswick Home News, the leading newspaper of Middlesex county.—Newark Evening News.

To Attend Religious Service.

At the regular meeting of Queen City Lodge, No. 226, I. O. O. F., held last evening, the third degree was worked on two candidates and four propositions were received. An invitation was received from the Y. M. C. A. and accepted, to attend the meeting in the building Sunday afternoon, December 15th at 4:15. Charles DeGraw the representative to the Grand Lodge presented a very interesting report conditions

In some conditions the gain from the use of Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil is rapid. For this reason we put up a 50c. size, which is enough for an ordinary cough or cold or useful as a trial for babies and children.

In other conditions gain must be slow, sometimes almost imperceptible, health can't be built up in a day. For this Scott's Emulsion must be taken as nourishment, food rather than medicine, food prepared for tired and weak digestions.

GRAND LARCENY THE CHARGE

FRED WILLIBALD ARRESTED ON A SERIOUS CHARGE.

It Is Alleged That He Took Two $50 Bills From the Person of Michael Keefe, While the Latter Was Inebriated.

Yesterday afternoon Fred Willibald was arrested on the charge of grand larceny and appeared before Justice Newcorn in the evening. He was committed to the Elizabeth jail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

Michael Keefe went into Goff's saloon on Liberty street last Tuesday and while there imbibed too much of the fiery liquid. When he went into the saloon he had two $50 bills and $11 in small change, but when he got over the effects of his over-indulgence he found to his dismay that the two $50 bills had disappeared. Fred Willibald told a lad that he found two $50 bills close by the cuspidor at the bar, but when Chief Grant and Sergeant Kiely made inquiries regarding it he said that he found them just outside the door of Goff's saloon.

The rest of his story was that he then went to Day's saloon on West Third street and persuaded the bartender to go to Newark the next day with him. They went on Wednesday and Willibald purchased a $13 suit of clothes and claims that he gave Newman $5. Willibald cannot account for the rest of the money, only that he says that it has gone somewhere. His memory is also rather indistinct in regard to what happened before he returned home.

Willibald was charged about two years ago with robbing the depot and the Union News Company's stand. He was convicted on the last charge and served a term in the county jail.

OFFICERS NOMINATED.

The Independent Fife and Drum Corps Hold a Regular Meeting.

The Independent Fife and Drum Corps held a meeting last evening and nominated officers for the election which takes place the last Tuesday in December.

The following were nominated: Drum-Major, Frank L. Manchester; President, Edwin E. Vail; Vice-President, J. Henry Adams; Recording-Secretary, Lambert B. Bodine; Financial-Secretary, David Bodine; Treasurer, Frank L. Manchester; Fife-Sergeant, Albert Allen; Fife-Corporal, to be nominated next Tuesday; Drum-Sergeant, Harry C. Ackerman; Drum Corporal, J. Henry Adams; Manager and Sergeant-at-Arms, David Bodine. A committee was then appointed to make arrangements for a dance to be held in the Olympia some evening during the second week in December. It consisted of William C. Force, Chairman, Lambert B. Bodine, John Bolsterle, Frank L. Manchester and J. Henry Adams. The corps meets again next Tuesday.

SERENADED THE ROOKERY.

Fitzgerald Had a Glass Too Much and Felt Good.

There was one victim in the police net this morning and he was charged with imbibing too freely and then acting in too free a manner. He was escorted to the lockup yesterday afternoon by Sergeant Kiely and Officer Flanagan and persisted in showing off his vocal accomplishments. The inside of the cell did not please him and he spent the evening in serenading himself. This morning he was arraigned before Judge Coddington and gave his name as Morris Fitzgerald. The Judge decided that $3 to the city or ten days' visit to the county jail was about right and the would-be vocalist chose the cash payment.

Congratulation.

To the Editor of the Daily Press:—The writer, an old friend of Mr. William H. Miner, the former choir master of Holy Cross church, (although I don't attend the Episcopal church) was glad to observe in your Saturday issue a notice of his coming marriage. Mr. Miner is training two church choirs in Naugatuck, Conn., and as I am already cognizant of the fact, is to marry into one of the first families of Naugatuck and a very estimable young lady, has the best wishes of a large majority of those who took so much pleasure in hearing the music rendered by the choir under his charge in North Plainfield. A Friend.

Merry Time in Prospect.

The following is the programme that will be rendered at the entertainment to be given by the Ladies Aid Society of the German Reformed church next Monday evening:

Recitation, Mrs. Frank; Bass solo, Charles Dresselt; Soprano solo, Miss Bach; Play, "A Catch at Last," Mrs. Bach, Fred Bach, A. Wolff; Recitation, Mrs. Fred Conde; Soprano solo, Miss E. Ecke; Recitation, Miss Mary Youresen; Recitation, Miss Lillian Haberle; Play, "Nechtigel Nichte," A. Wolff, Miss Ida Faller, P. Postler, Otto Keller; Comical recitation, Chas. Geise; Recitation, Herman Klinsmen.

A SHIPWRECKED TRUNK.

CRAIG A. MARSH GETS A TRUNK LOST IN THE ENGLISH CHANNEL.

Went Down With the Ill-Fated Seaford, But Was Water-Tight and Drifted to the Holland Shore—Returned to the Owner.

J. C. Pope & Co., agents for the Hamburg-American Line Steamship Company, were informed by the latter some time ago that a trunk belonging to Craig A. Marsh had been found in the North Sea, off Holland, it having been picked up by a pilot's crew and delivered to Paul Smith, United States Consul agent at Flushing, Holland. It will be remembered that Mr. Marsh was one of the passengers on the Seaford, which collided with another vessel in the English channel last summer, and had a narrow escape from going down with the sinking ship. In reply to enquiry of a Daily Press reporter this morning, Mr. Marsh said: "Yes, I learned of it several weeks ago and gave an order to have the trunk forwarded. All of the trunks were down in the hold of the Seaford when the vessel was foundered in the English Channel last summer. My theory is that the pressure of air caused the bursting of the deck as the ship went down, liberating the heavy luggage. The trunk in question was a new one and water-proof, which explains the fact that it floated. The first intimation that I received concerning the trunk was through Dr. Lassar, of Berlin, who was a fellow-passenger on the steamer to Spitzbergen this summer. Dr. Lassar is as eminent in Europe as the late Dr. Loomis was in America. He had given me a letter of introduction to a friend in Paris and this letter was found in the trunk. Dr. Lassar was at once communicated with and he in turn communicated with me, and thus I secured the trunk which is in excellent condition."

IN THE EMERALD ISLE.

Rev. T. Logan Murphy Carries an Audience Through Ireland.

Those present at the illustrated lecture on Ireland given by Rev. T. Logan Murphy in the rooms of the Camera Club last night were certainly given a treat. People in general have mixed views and ideas concerning the Emerald Isle, but those who witnessed the superb pictures shown last night, have a better idea of this beautiful country than ever. There were the lakes of Killarney, surrounded by high, stately hills and mountains, Dublin, Cork and Belfast, with all the modern improvements of the age, and then the principal industries of the country were given a prominent place in the lecture. Mr. Murphy had an exceedingly interesting manner of relating all that is of importance about this country, making the lecture one of rare pleasure to all. A beautiful picture of one of the lakes of Killarney by moonlight was thrown on the screen with all the mechanical effects, while Miss Etta Krymer rendered two soprano solos, "Killarney" and the "Low-Back Car" in a delightful manner and won hearty applause. Miss Lillian A. Force was the accompanist. In all the event was one of the most pleasant given this season.

A Man of Exs.

Ex-Marshal, ex-Health Inspector, ex-Constable, ex-Milkman, and now Farmer Job Coddington, of South Somerville, was visiting friends in the borough a few days ago. Mr. Coddington is a member of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, of this city. He received first premium on pumpkins at the late Somerset county fair. His farm adjoins the three-hundred-acre Duke dairy farm, that was purchased by money made from cigarettes.

RUDYARD KIPLING AN ACTOR.

The Novelist's Father Was Very Proud of the Young Man's Talents.

B. Ellis Ibentrop, inspector general of forests to the government of India, is well acquainted with both the Kiplings. In a recent interview he said:

"Personally, Mr. Kipling, the father, is a man of ordinary stature, with a massive and remarkable head. It is well balanced and at once striking to look at. His hair is getting very white, but there is a youth about his face that is quite unusual in a man of his age. He is very proud of Rudyard and carefully reviews everything the young man writes. I recollect very well the first literary work Rudyard produced. He came to Lahore from London to work on The Civil and Military Gazette, and in a short time he was so familiar with all the people of the locality that he issued a little book called 'Department Ditties.' It was full of humor and satire, and attracted a great deal of attention. In a short time he was sent around the world as a correspondent to a syndicate, and when he came back to Lahore he was famous. He is idolized there, and his success is our pride.

"Very few people know it, but Rudyard Kipling is one of the best actors I ever saw. On one occasion in Lahore the people got up an amateur theatrical company and put on a play called 'Plot and Passion,' with one Fouche, a character who is at the head of the police, is introduced. This part was played by Rudyard, and when this initial performance came off, Rudyard, meanwhile having done very badly at the rehearsals, played the part very well and with such marvelous understanding that the entire cast was thunderstruck. He went at it like an old hand, and had the audience with him from the very start. Everybody in Lahore advised him to go on the stage at once, but he refused and staid by his pencil. I tell you it was the best piece of amateur acting I ever saw, and I begged him to follow the life of an actor, but he only laughed and continued to call me the 'Gigantic Head of the Indian Forest' in his stories. He always had a peculiar way of forming quick acquaintance, and he knew every man in Lahore from the poorest to the richest. He never let a story escape him, and his understanding of men and their eccentricities has made it possible for him to give the world all sorts of literature."—San Francisco Call.

TYRANTS IN AMERICA.

How Miss O'Reil Views Our Public Servants and Officials.

Max O'Rell, writing in The North American Review, tells of the many petty tyrannies that rule us in America, and reiterates that "the patience of the American public is simply angelic, nothing short of that." Apropos of our servants and officials he says:

"The Americans, like the French, have no initiative and lack public spirit. The English are the only people who are served by their equals. In England you see the ministers of the crown, the directors of public companies or mere railway porters, in every one to whom John Bull pays a salary, says, 'Please to remember that you are the servant of the public.' When the English appoint a new official, high or low, it is a serious affair for the old to their household. When the French and the Americans appoint a new official, it is a new master that they give to themselves to wash them and finally to shave. For example, when the English railway companies started running sleeping cars, the public said to them: 'We do not wish to be herded up together like hen pickers. You will please have the cars divided at night into two parts by a curtain, so that our ladies may be spared the annoyance of having to share a section with a man.'

"I do not know a single American lady who has not told me of that grievance, and how on that account she decided traveling alone. Yet I am not aware that the American public has ever told the officials of any railway company in this country, 'We pay you, and we insist upon having such accommodations as will secure the comfort of our women.' On one occasion, in a crowded sleeping car from Syracuse to New York, I occupied an upper berth and a lady occupied the lower one. If she only felt half as uncomfortable as I did, I pity the poor woman."

The Fickle Parisian Public.

The Parisian world was in fact very fickle. Society in Paris was excited over the execution of Enghien; rumors of coming war furnished interesting topics of conversation. The giddy majority had in few days changed its opinions, grasped about one theme and the other alternately and then went on with its amusements. The grave men only sincerely desired their country's welfare were profoundly moved and whispered serious forebodings to each other. The world at large was sensitive to both currents of thought, but in the main the masses considered the coming coronation ceremonies, the splendors of empire, and the prospects for unbounded glory opened by Napoleon's unconquered conquest vastly more entertaining as the subject of speculation than anything else. They were not deceived in some portions of their dreams; the time of imperial grandeur was at hand, the influence of French civilization was marching over Europe, and the political vision of France as supreme in prestige and renown was opening on their view."—Life of Napoleon," by Professor William M. Sloane, in Century.

Miniature Painting as Exacting Art.

Those who know only the finished miniature and have no acquaintance with the method of its production cannot conceive of the labor that it represents. Each of these tiny masterpieces—huge ornaments with human identification—these concentrated expressions of pictorial art—stands for more toil, of a peculiarly exacting sort, than the largest canvas. In many cases, some of them containing scarcely half a dozen hairs, make strokes so fine that upon of the painting must be done under a magnifying glass. And the touches on the frail bit of ivory must be as unerring as they are light, for the smallest mistake may destroy characteristic transluscence that constitutes the miniature's greatest charm.—Nancy Houston Banks in Ladies' Home Journal.

Josephine.

Josephine, the wife of Bonaparte, was far from being the beauty that she is commonly supposed. Her nose was too long, her chin was small and receding, her eyes were rather oblique, her teeth were brown and decayed and her breath very bad. Her gait was not easy, and she had a foolish giggle that spoiled her conversation.

Close.

These limbs—whence had we them; this stormy force; this lifeblood, with its burning passion? They are dust and shadow—a shadow system gathered round me, wherein though some moments of pure the divine essence is to be revealed in the flesh.—Carlyle.

SHE REBELS.

The Young Married Woman Wants a Club to Play To.

A young married woman with gazelle-like eyes astonished the writer the other day by declaring that she was just tired and sick of the present matrimonial conditions, and though she had no desire to be a new woman she would just like a few things changed in the lives of women who have promised to love, honor and obey. "Where would you begin this great reformation?" we queried.

"Where it is needed most. I would just make it a rule that a woman had quite as much right to slam the door and go out, even in the evening, after a quarrel, as has her liege lord. At present a storm begins to brew, and the first thing you know his majesty remarks, 'Well, I'm not going to stay here and be nagged to death,' and he delightedly picks up his hat and van lishes from the scene, to return hours later, after the poor little wife has cried herself to sleep imagining all sorts of horrible things happening to him, and ready to say 'Forgive me' when he returns, even though she was in the right all the time, yet so fearful is she that he will go out again that she is quite willing to eat humble pie, though she does not relish the flavor of it one bit.

"And what does he do when he goes out? Does he weep a single tear or have a single lonely hour? Perhaps! Not in this of it. If he is a clubman, he goes there, and meeting a lot of congenial friends forgets all about the sulking one at home. If he has regular seances of this sort, he selects a cafe, a hotel corridor or drops in to see an act or two at the theater. He isn't at all loss for entertainment, and if finally he brings home a few soft shell crabs or a box of ice cream he puts himself on the back for his forgiving disposition and feels sure indeed if his wife is not appeased by these delicacies, which are meant to make her forget the length of his absence.

"He often declares that he never quarrels, for he doesn't allow himself to get into an argument with his wife, and in consequence is considered a man with an unusually good disposition. His wife, however, is regarded with suspicion, her red eyes and his frequent outings giving rise to the belief that she is termagant. We, indeed, I am not in favor of such a one sided privilege, and I believe there are dozens of wives who feel as I do, and would gladly go out and forget their woes if there were only some nice, respectable place sanctioned by society as an outlet for temper, a depositbe for matrimonial squabbles."—Philadelphia Times.

A Close Call.

There is an old fatsman on the Susquehanna who has a pretty smart boat. It is that he has never been whipped in a fight. This means a good deal, for the sturdy fatsmen are all splendid specimens. Fights over this boat in trivial ways are of daily occurrence. Ole Dan, as he is called, has now grown very feeble and rheumatic, but he is never tired of recounting his exploits as a fighter when he was a young man. The old fellow always stoutly affirms that he has never been licked, but after a good deal of pressing he can sometimes remember that he once came very near being soundly thrashed.

"Yes, sir, the nearest I came to being whipped was more than a year ago. I was carrin a load of logs up to the mill one powerful hot day in August. The sun was a-shinin fit to sizzle your brains. As we went goin alongside of a wood which threw a shadow jess half way across the road I met a man in a buggy coming straight at me.

"'Turn out,' says he.

"'Turn out into the sun yourself,' sez I.

"Well, after that we came to words. Blamey we came to blows.

"We fit till the sun went down, and then I turned out."

"Oh, you did turn out for him then, Dan?"

A Court Decides That Dogs Cry.

Does a dog cry? This knotty question has occupied one of the civil courts under these circumstances: A certain gentleman rented a handsome set of rooms, and the lease contained a clause forbidding the tenant from keeping animals which cry. It happened that a friend sent the gentleman two little dogs from Mexico. The arrival of the animals led to notice being served on their owner for breach of the terms of the lease, and the matter had to be settled by legal argument. The defendant insisted that the pup and Pipa, his dogs were called, weighed only 12 ounces apiece, and their bark was correspondingly diminutive, but counsel for the plaintiff contended that dwarfs were known to be bad tempered, and very small dogs were no exception and were inclined to quarrelsome and noisy. In ordinary language their whimpering might be called crying. The court took the same view, and Pipa had to find for another home in 24 hours or subject their master to a penalty of 5 francs for each day's delay.—London Telegraph.

German Reverence For Science.

Electric cars have been prohibited on the road from Berlin to Charlottenburg because they would have to pass the Imperial Technical Institute, whose delicate scientific experiments would be affected by the current. Science is of less importance here. A similar effect was noticed in the Jefferson Physical laboratory at Harvard, when the grounds were surrounded with trolley wires several years ago, but there happened to be no scientific work going on, expressed for the scientist who would have dared to place the claims of research above the privileges of the general public.—Boston Journal.

Rude.

"Well," said Mrs. Bruggins after a solo by a fashionable female quartette, "if that ain't the rudest thing I ever saw!"

"What!" inquired her niece.

"Why, didn't you notice it? Just as soon as that young man began to sing every other member of the choir stopped, but he went right through with it, and I must say I admire his spunk."—Washington Star.

CAMPAIGN OF DECLINATIONS.

THREE OF THE PROPOSED CITIZENS' CANDIDATES REFUSE TO RUN.

But the Managers of the Movement Hustle Around and Get Other Candidates —Petitions Being Circulated Now.

The Citizens' ticket for the coming charter election is still alive, at least it looked so at the headquarters on East Front street this morning, but there are several changes on the ticket since it was made up yesterday. The appearance of an opposition to the straight ticket has aroused considerable comment, but the new ticket will not run the way it was planned at first.

Leonard Spangenberg objected strongly to running on the ticket, so his name was crossed and that of George O. Stevens, the popular coal merchant, substituted in the nomination of councilman-at-large.

William H. Drayton told a Daily Press reporter this morning that he would not take the nomination for councilman in the Second ward and declined to run against Councilman Frost.

When seen by a Daily Press reporter this morning Councilman V. L. Frazee stated that he did not intend to run for re-election and, although a number of people from the Fourth ward had asked him to accept the nomination, he would not be a candidate this year.

The nominations will be made by petitions, and when a Daily Press reporter visiting the Citizen's ticket headquarters, he found them being prepared.

There was a general tendency towards silence, but it was admitted that Mr. Spangenburg had withdrawn and Mr. Stevens substituted. Nothing would be said about the Second ward except that it was undecided yet. Those at the headquarters seemed to think that Frazee would run.

So after the petitions were read and the work of circulating them among the voters of Plainfield was began. The party has until Monday night to file the nominations with the City Clerk.

In conversation with a Daily Press reporter this afternoon, one of the prominent backers of the new ticket said that there would be no ward ticket except in the first ward, where Dennis Carney will run against C. W. Nichols, the Republican nominee for justice of the peace.

E. L. Tolles, Republican nominee for first ward councilman, has allowed his name to be put on the citizens' ticket. Neither Mr. Drayton nor Mr. Frazee will be put up as candidates for the new party.

String Music.

At the grand banjo concert at Music Hall, Tuesday evening, November 26th, under the management of George Jenkins, of Somerville, there will be some of the best talent in this country. Dore, Farmer and Dore and Brooks, Denton and Ossman the world's greatest trios. The famous metropolitan quartette, William Jeakins, Daly, humorist, Master Francis Hastings, of Brooklyn, the child elocutionist, George F. Holloway, guitarist and Prof. Charles Van Burr, the composer of the Yale two-step, and J. Silberberg, pianists. The programme promises to give the music loving people of Plainfield a rare treat, as Mr. Jenkins has carefully selected his artists and is working earnestly to make this musicale a success. There will be a banjo orchestra of fifty banjos, mandolins and guitars, in the opening.

Progressive Euchre.

The Young People's Progressive Euchre Club, of Dunellen and North Plainfield, met at the home of Miss Jessie Haynes, of Dunellen. After a very exciting game the first prizes were won by Miss Janie Churchill and Charles Boice. Miss Emma Martin won the second feminine prize while Robert Giddis and Charles English tied for the second prize for men. Mr. Giddis won on the play off. After the game dainty refreshments were served and the rest of the evening was spent in dancing.

THOSE WHO WAIT AND WORK.

DR. LEE TALKS ON THESE POINTS TO CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS.

Second Anniversary of German Reformed Church Society Held Last Night—Beautiful Floral Decorations.

The German Reformed church was filled with bright and cheerful faces last evening to celebrate the second anniversary of the Young Peoples Society of Christian Endeavor. The decorations were designed by F. G. Boeh. They consisted of a large orange crescent with the motto of the C. E. Society, "For Christ and the Church." worked upon it in gray; under this was the pledge which was surrounded by evergreens, forming a very pretty border and from this was suspended a large C. E., the design of the society pin. The floral decorations consisted of a large and handsome collection of chrysanthemums, while a beautiful bouquet of roses stood upon one end of the pulpit. The flowers were furnished by Peter F. Doeringer, Mr. Samuel McCutchen's florist, and were exceedingly beautiful.

The meeting opened with a fifteen minute song service, during which many of the favorite C. E. hymns were sung. Rev. Cornelius Schenk offered prayer. After the singing of a hymn Mr. F. G. Bach, secretary of the society, gave his annual report. Five new actives and five new associate members were added to the membership list during the year. The financial state of the society is remarkably good.

The address was given by the Rev. Dr. Lee, of Newark, and was very interesting. The subject of Dr. Lee's address was "Waiting and Working." Dr. Lee quoted as a standing example the laying of the great Atlantic cable by Cyrus W. Field, how he was nearly discouraged by the breaking of the cable but with all this discouragement Mr. Field waited, paying no attention to the sneers and scoffings of the world, and finally succeeded. Dr. Lee said, "So it is with this society society although you are not many and although you may be jeered at by the people of the world, it is for you to wait. It is your duty to cast the seed into the furrow and await the harvest; you may not be here to reap, but God will furnish the reapers and we are only to do the work of the present and are not to look for forward to great results, God will look after them."

The meeting closed with the old hymn, "Blest be the Tie that Binds," and every one went away feeling greatly impressed by the excellent meeting.

DOGDOM MOURNS

The Colonel Eats Poisoned Meat and Leaves This World.

All of Plainfield dogdom mourns this morning. The cause of the bowwows tears and meek expression on their shaggy faces is the untimely demise of Colonel, the leader of the pro of Plainfield's canine population. He was an intelligent collie-shepherd dog, the property of Druggist J. Howard Leggett, and was known all over the city as a dog who made friends with everybody. But some brute with the meanest kind of a disposition fed Colonel with beefsteak sprinkled with some poisonous substance, and yesterday Colonel turned up his toes, gave a few kicks and went to the place where all good dogs go. Peace be to the remains of Colonel.

RED MEN DEBATE.

Miantonomah Tribe Discusses an Important Lodge Question.

At the meeting of Miantonomah Tribe, No. 114, I. O. R. M., last night, an interesting debate was enjoyed. The subject was "Whether the Great Council of New Jersey Should be Made a Representative Body." Slips of paper were handed to every member and all were blanks except seven, those receiving the latter were chosen as follows: Affirmative—Past Sachem Walsh, of Newburgh, D. C. Allen and W. A. Westphal; Negative—Fred VenEyck, C. L. Holstein, P. Krog, Judge, David Morning.

The question was decided in the affirmative, after which there was a general discussion by the members. The pipe of peace, cigars, sandwiches and coffee brought to a close an enjoyable evening.

To Be Wedded At High Noon.

The invitations have been issued for the marriage of Miss Leafer Belle Page, of Naugatuck, Conn., and William Hall Miner, formerly of this city, but now of Naugatuck, which is to take place at St. Michael's church, of that place, on Wednesday November 27, at high noon. A reception will be held at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Page, after the wedding.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher, That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

RAPID TRANSIT IN 1835.

A Rare Old Specimen of Plainfield's Early Days.

Freeholder L. E. Barkalew, of the borough, is the possessor of an old family relic in the shape of an advertising poster which his father had printed in 1835 to announce to the Plainfield public his intention to start a stage and express line to New York. It was printed by Isaac Cole, who then had a small printing office where the store now occupied by Gaveit & Co., stands. Typographically it is a good specimen of work for those days. The poster has been nicely framed and will be put on exhibition in the postoffice window this afternoon. It reads as follows:

NEW LINE.

PLAINFIELD TO NEW YORK VIA

ELIZABETH-TOWN POINT.

The subscriber has commenced running a two-horse stage hut between Plainfield and New-York by the way of Elizabeth-Town Point, to leave his Public House in Plainfield at 8 o'clock in the morning, so that Passengers may be by that time at the Ferry in the City, and leave New York in the afternoon—so as to arrive in Plainfield just at the close of the day.—FARE, 25 cents.—Way Passengers in proportion.

The subscriber intends to continue running every day so long as he can obtain Passengers enough to justify the expence. If any change is made timely notice will be given. On this Plan there will be 5 hours to do business in New York, and return home the same day. The subscriber will drive his own Stage—Or, when he may not—will employ a trustworthy person for whom he will be accountable—they will go into the City, and attend to any errands or Business entrusted to them for a moderate compensation. Believing such a line as this will be a great accommodation to many—and intending to exert himself to give entire satisfaction, the subscriber hopes for general patronage, and especially that of the citizens of Plainfield, and their friends in New York

He will be in charge of letters or parcels from the pupils of either of the Plainfield Seminaries, or from their Parents and friends in the City. VINCENT BARKALEW.

Plainfield, July 25, 1835.

The public house referred to in the announcement was located on the corner of Front and Somerset streets where Charles Smith's saloon is now situated.

For the Library Fund.

A benefit concert to take place on December 3d, will be tendered to the Ladies Aid Society of the Monroe Avenue M. E. chapel by E. Arthur Jenke and P. Ludwig Conde. The proceeds of concert will be used in furnishing the new library building, adjoining the chapel. Mr. Jenke, who has recently come to Plainfield, is a pianist of high ability, and the opportunity of listening to his rendering of classical numbers is anticipated with much pleasure by his friends. Messrs. Mason & Hamlin have generously offered one of their grand pianos for the occasion.

TIME OF GREAT SOCIABILITY.

A PLEASANT EVENT HELD IN THE METHODIST CHURCH.

Arranged by the Ladies Aid Society and the Epworth League—Programme Rendered and Names of Participants.

The first regular sociable of the season at the First M. E. church was held last evening under the combined auspices of the Ladies Aid Society and the Epworth League. Quite a number of the congregation were present and everybody appeared to enjoy themselves. After allowing the audience to be seated, Robert Davis, President of the Epworth League, as master of ceremonies, announced that James R. Joy would give a reading entitled "Patsy in the Kindergarten." The selection was a humorous one and Mr. Joy's manner of reading, especially the dialect parts, sent his hearers into roars of laughter. A violin solo by Clarence Mills was artistically rendered and an encore was given. Rev. Dr. C. D. Barnes then made the remarks after which a duett was pleasingly sung by Miss Margaretta Barnes and Louis H. Bond. The programme closed with a recitation entitled "A Cup of Tea" by Miss Grace E. Overton.

After a brief interval in which to allow those present to gather in groups all about Vincent chapel, ice cream and cake were passed and a period of sociability followed.

The programme was produced by the social and literary committees of the Epworth League.

The social committee consists of Miss Essie Horne, Chairman, Miss Lucie P. Davis, Miss Sarah Douglass and the Misses Day, F. W. Rittenhouse, J. V. Rittenhouse, R. A. McGee, Ralph Campbell and J. A. Stafford. Those on the literary committee are D. S. Dunavan, Chairman, J. R. Joy, Miss Angleman, Miss Gertrude Sharp, Miss Cora Shepherd and Miss Etta Raybert.

The refreshments were under the charge of a committee from the Ladies Aid Society which consisted of Mrs. C. B. Barnes, Miss Tillie Alexander, Miss Dolly Bolsterle, Miss Melissa Angleman, Miss Ida Angleman and Mrs. S. C. Baker. Robert Davis presided over the ice cream freezer while the young men passed it. Those who assisted were W. B. Rittenhouse, J. V. Rittenhouse, Robert Douglass, Garfield Pike, J. A. Stafford and Alvah Davis. The following young women passed the cake: The Misses Grace Barnes, Margaretta Barnes, Florence Barnes, Lizzie Day and Elizabeth Cornwell.

Pleased Everybody.

Prof. E. L. Leonard, business manager of Pennington Seminary, writing to Jere M. Cobb, the elocutionist, says: "It is my experience that students are the most exacting audience a lecturer could have. When I say, therefore, that you not only gained the attention of our school, but highly pleased them, I consider it the strongest testimonial I could give." Mr. Cobb will appear in the second entertainment of the Y. M. C. A. Star course, Thanksgiving evening, Nov. 28th.

ANOTHER COMMUTER COMPLAINS.

Thinks Trains Are Chronically Behind Time on the Central.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—I was glad to see in your paper of last Thursday that our commuters are beginning to realize how poor the train service is.

First—It is very slow. The 8:27 reaches New York in 50 minutes. Allowing 15 minutes for the ferry, and it leaves 35 minutes as the running time for about 23 miles, with one stop. The 4:20 and 5:30 trains require 44 and 40 minutes respectively, with no stops.

Second—The trains are chronically behind time. The 10:04 has been from 5 to 15 minutes late at Plainfield several times lately. The 8:27 never arrives in New York on time and frequently is overtaken by the 8:31 which makes four stops.

Third—The trains are few and badly arranged. Between 7:53 and 9:48 there are five trains, three of them within 21 minutes; between 10:04 and 10:27 there are three trains; there is no train to New York between 8:48 and 10:04.

Fourth—The peddling on the train is a nuisance. In the Jersey City station boys and men are continually passing through the trains selling papers, puzzles, books, candy, chewing gum, cough drops, fruit, magazines, (some of which are almost obscene), and other articles. The vendors bawl through the cars and push and crowd the passengers. They confer no benefit on the regular passengers; their customers being, almost exclusively, the occasional travelers. They have been banished as an intolerable nuisance from the Pennsylvania and other first class railroads, and if the Jersey Central wished to be considered first class it must do likewise.

Fifth—Spitting on the floors of cars and ferryboats. It is remarkable to see men, often well dressed, who will spit on the floor; they are as unconscious of wrong doing as an unbroken puppy. I believe that an effort to repress this filthy habit would be surprisingly successful. The company might well begin with its own brakemen, some of whom are habitual offenders. And right here let me say one word to the women. They are the principal sufferers and can assist in checking the habit by working on the men of their own families and others over whom they may have influence. The reforms needed then are these: Give us faster trains morning and evening; distribute them more evenly; trains or else put on one about 9:15; give us a fast train at 5 p. m.; abolish train peddling; try to stop spitting on the floor.

High School Notes.

The following will be the special song at the Thanksgiving Day services of the High School:

THANKSGIVING.

To the giver of all blessings.
Let our voices rise in praise
For the joys and countless mercies
He hath showered on us days:
For the homes of peace and plenty,
And a land so fair and wide,
For the labor of the noonday,
And the rest of eventide.

For the splendor of the forest,
For the beauty of the hills,
For the freshness of the meadows,
And a thousand sparkling rills,
For the blossoms of the springtime,
And the memories they bring,
For the ripened fruits of autumn,
Do we thank Thee, O our King.

For the wealth of golden harvests,
For the sunlight and the rain,
For the wonders of the ocean,
For the mountain and the plain,
For the ever-changing seasons,
And the comforts which they bring,
For Thy love so grand, eternal,
We would thank Thee, O our King.

Next in the Star Course.

The next of the series of Y. M. C. A. entertainments will be given by Jere M. Cobb, elocutionist, Miss Kathryn Rymer, of Brooklyn, contralto, and Mayhard Evans, whistling soloist, in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, November 28th, (Thanksgiving evening) at eight o'clock. These excellent entertainments are free to all $5, $8 and $10 members. Course ticket, $1; single admission twenty-five cents.

A Plainfield Artist.

The Thanksgiving number of Harper's Bazar will contain a handsome full-page design advertising Royal baking powder. The whole thing was designed and executed by W. Montgomery Smith, of this city, and when we state that the Royal people accepted his design from among several of the best designers in the country, including Mr. Bradley, we but give the credit due him for the beautiful piece of work accomplished.

Last Sewer Pipe Laid.

Though Hoagan & Son expected to be able to finish their sewer contract with the city by last Saturday, they were not, owing to the unexpected obstacles which arose and prevented rapid progress with their work. They completed the laying of the seventeen miles of sewer pipe last night, the last section of which was on Ravine road. With the exception of a few odd jobs about the city they are practically through with their work.

CRESCENT CLUB PRACTICALLY DECIDE TO GIVE A SHOW.

It Will Be Made Up of the Best Local Talent and Will be Staged in a Luxurious and Spectacular Manner.

Plainfield is to see another minstrel show this winter, or, at least, so it was decided at the regular monday evening of the Crescent Wheelmen last evening. After the regular routine business had been transacted, the entertainment committee made its report. The report was a favorable one and proved satisfactory to the members, for after some remarks on the subject it was decided that the minstrel show should be held some time soon after the Christmas holidays. It was announced that W. E. MacClyment and Plainfield's only William N. Runyon had consented to assist and that only home talent would be used. W. L. Price offered the club the use of the hall in the Columbia Cycle Academy and a vote of thanks was unanimously passed and ordered sent to him for his kind offer which will be considered.

The committee will go to work at once and the lovers of minstrelsy may rest assured that Plainfield will see something well worth seeing.

SHOT IN THE HAND.

Harold Armstrong Cleaning a Revolver When It Was Discharged.

This morning Harold Armstrong, son of Capt. George P. Armstrong, residing at the Revere House, accidently shot himself through the hand while cleaning a revolver. The bullet was of 32 calibre. A moment before the shot was fired Mrs. Armstrong was standing directly in the direction that the bullet took, and had only moved back a moment before. The bullet struck the window sash and embedded itself in the shutters.

Dr. Endicott was hastily summoned and in a few minutes was with the injured boy. He dressed the wound and expressed the opinion that no serious results will follow. Mrs. Armstrong is quite prostrated with the shock.

Good Place to Get Acquainted.

Next Friday evening the Ladies Aid Society and the Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal church will hold a sociable in Vincent chapel. They extend a hearty welcome to all the members and friends of the church, including the strangers who have been lately called upon by members of the visiting committee and the pastor. The committee in charge will furnish refreshments, and a pleasing programme is being prepared. There will be no charge for admission or refreshments, and nothing to sell; only come, get acquainted, and enjoy yourselves.

Exhibition of Art.

It was decided at the meeting of the Camera Club Tuesday night to give a grand loan exhibition of art and Messrs. Audsley, J. E. Stewart, H. Stillman, J. Hervey Doane, Harold Serrell, G. Thorn and H. Squires were appointed a committee to arrange the affair which will be given about February 1st. One member was elected at the meeting.

New Fire Alarm Boxes.

Three new fire alarm boxes have been established within the city limits. One is at the corner of Watchung avenue and East Front street, and is known as number 14. Number 29 is located at the corner of Watchung and Woodland avenues, and number 49 is to be found at the corner of South Second street and Clinton avenue.

Grocery Store for Evens.

Barnes Brothers, the West Front street grocers, have purchased a lot at the corner of West Front street and Clinton avenue through the agency of Wallace Vail, and will at once erect a building which will be used as a grocery store.

May Go With the Country Club.

George B. DeRevere is considering a proposition to take charge of the Union County Country Club this winter.

After the rendition of the programme all adjourned to the basement where refreshments were served.

FOR THE COLES' BRONZE.

Bishop Williams Suggests that the Donor's Father's Name Be Inscribed.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. John Williams, Bishop of the Diocese of Connecticut, Chancellor of Trinity College, etc., in a recent letter to the son of the late Dr. Abraham Coles, referring to the bronze and its pedestal to be unveiled in Lincoln Park at 12:30, noon, on Thanksgiving Day, says:

"An inscription of the last stanzas of your father's beautiful National hymns, "Columbia the Land of the Free," and "My Native Land," upon the marble pedestal of the bronze historical group you are about to present to the city of Newark, N. J., would not only be a graceful tribute to your father's memory, but would also give a National as well as a local value to the gift."

The gift Newark was settled by people from Connecticut. The Bishop's suggestion will be carried out.—Newark Advertiser.

FAIRYLAND FOR CHILDREN.

The Toy Department of Edsall's Commercial Palace.

One of the great features of Edsall's Commercial Palace is the toy department, which is really a store by itself. In descending the stairs to the basement one is given the idea of Aladdin's cave.

In this department the eye is first attracted to the mechanical iron toys, such as railroad trains, running on a circular elevated track, wagons, engines and a host of other kinds. From there one is brought to the doll apartment, where all kinds of dolls are to be found. They have been imported direct from Europe. Among the wooden toys special features are the pneumatic sulky and horse that goes, singing birds, cabs, talking dolls and Chrismas ornaments of all kinds for trees. In the other departments there are children's wagons, velocipedes, wheelbarrows, hobby-horses, sleds and violins. A very novel toy is a cow, which does everything but give milk.

Then there are steamboats, circus wagons, tin toys consisting of fire engines, express wagons and magic lanterns. *Among the important fea*tures are the fire and sailor uniforms for boys, and a complete line of the latest styles of mechanical banks.

Thomas A. Neely has charge of the basement, and no one should fail to visit this department, for he has a large stock of goods that will interest all.

Want to Be Citizens.

The following have applied in the Union County Court of Common Pleas to become citizens of the United States: Thomas Kiernan, of Monroe avenue, James Traynor, of West Third street John McPhillips, of South Second street, Cornelius Guinee, of West Third street, and John Corrigan, of South Second street.

Events of the Fair.

Those in charge of the firemen's fair to be held Dec. 9th to 14th, are making preparations for a grand event. Under the direction of Madame Menzeli Bartlett a serpentine dancer will entertain those attending, as will also a fortune teller and a prestidigitateur. The committees are hard at work in every department.

A Profitable Booth.

The Spanish booth at the Kirmess last week, which was in charge of Mrs. S. A. Cruikshank, realized $321.17 for the hospital.

MUSIC TO HELP LITTLE ONES.

Appreciative Audience Attend the Children's Home Benefit Concert.

Over three hundred and fifty people gathered at the Casino last evening to hear the concert given there for the benefit of the Children's Home. The different numbers were of more than ordinary merit, and the audience showed its appreciation of them by their long and hearty applause. Several encores were given. Miss Annie P. Hardenbergh was troubled with a severe cold and was unable to take any part except in the quartette.

The programme opened with an instrumental trio from "Barcarolle" by Miss Nellie Udelle, violinist, Phillip Egner, violincellist, and Frank J. Smith, pianist. Mrs. Minnie Marshall Smith then gave a recitation entitled "The Spanish Dancing Girl," which especially pleased her hearers. A tenor solo—"Adieu Marie" was beautifully rendered by Elmer E. Runyon in his usual excellent manner, after which Phillip Egner showed his skill on the violoncello in "Simple Eyer" and "Hungarian Hongrois."

"Ava Maria," written as a soprano solo, was next sung by Miss Emily M. Banta with violin obligato by Miss Nellie Udelle. Another amusing recitation by Mrs. Smith closed the first part. To this selection her imaginary lisping was especially good.

A violin solo, "Second Tantaisie Ballet," by Miss Udelle, opened the second part. "Wee April," a soprano solo by Miss Banta, followed and then Mrs. Smith recited another selection entitled "The Marriage of the Flowers." Charles Lewis' bass voice was appreciated in the solo "Toreador Hat," and after the applause for that had died away the regular quartette of the Crescent Avenue church choir, Miss Banta, Miss Hardenbergh, E. E. Runyon and Charles Lewis, sang "O, the Sad Moment of Parting" as a closing selection.

The concert was given by the choir of the Crescent Avenue church and their friends. Mrs. Charles Lewis and Frank J. Smith were the accompanists. The ushers were F. W. Walz, H. W. Beebe and W. E. Gilbert.

PARTY OF MASQUERADERS.

Arranged by New Brunswick Young People for Plainfield Sociability.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Shultise, of Manning avenue was last night the scene of a merry party of masqueraders, who came in upon the host and hostess about 10 o'clock. The party was arranged by a number of New Brunswick young people, who on a previous occasion endeavored to arrange a surprise party for Mr. and Mrs. Shultise, but were unable to reach Plainfield owing to an accident to their conveyance at Metuchen. The costumes were of a varied lot and made plenty of fun for those present until unmasking time came. Music was furnished by Naylor. After midnight refreshments were served.

Those present from New Brunswick were: Misses Minnie Gray, Agnes McClelland, Nellie McClelland, Dena Bitson, Mary Knautsion, Julia Sullivan, Sadie Riley and Alice Hall. Those present from Plainfield were as follows: W. B. Overton, A. Wilson, L. Terhune, J. J. Smith, Peter Knautsion, Charles Hunt, Robert Davis, Franklin Green and wife, Philip Kirch, George Towsley, Authur Mills, John Boster, Miss Bosterli, A. C. Ford, Miss Shepard, Miss Smith, Mrs. J. Moore, Squires, Miss J. C. Gordon, Miss Emma Stram; Walter Fray, Freddie Goodwin and Mr. and A. Goodwin, James Hoagland, wife and daughter, of Somerville, Miss Rila B. Smith, of Frankfort, Mr. Johnson and Fred VanDuren of Griggstown.

LITTLE GIRL'S SURPRISE.

A Number of Juveniles Give Alice Shanley a Surprise.

Miss Alice Sharkey, of East Second street, was given a pleasant surprise last evening. Many of her friends were present. The children spent the evening in playing games. About nine o'clock supper was served. Among those present were: Lottie Chamberlain, Lucy Jennings, Irene Hope, Lena Jennings, Violet Hope, Agnes Wentmore, Donald Bent, Alice Nichiols, Alice Shanley, Katie Ryan, Walter Sharkey, John Ryan, Maggie Kenney, Lulu Kline, Mattie Kline, Anna and Alice McAfee, Margie and Leo DeCourcy, Gilbert VanHorn, Melissa Bird, Jack and Nellie Callahan, Frank Newman, Chester Allen, Edna Moore, Lewis Fisher, Leslie Palmer, Clarence Linbarger, Anna Morrison and Dan McAfee.

Vacation for Borough Children.

The Somerset Teachers Institute will be held at Somerville on November 25th, 26th and 27th. As all teachers are required to attend the Institute, no sessions will be held in the North Plainfield public school on these dates and as November 28th is Thanksgiving day the Board of Education have decided to have no sessions of school during the week at all.

A CHICAGO CHARACTER.

Uncle Zig White, His Truthfulness, His Costume and His Epitaph.

Every child in North Clark street knows Uncle Zig White. He is the most familiar character between the river and North avenue. His right name is not Zig White, but when anybody calls him by the other name he feels embarrassed and out of place. Uncle Zig is respected and beloved because of his scrupulous honesty and truthfulness. He is fond of sitting on a salt barrel and telling about his adventures. According to the stories told by him at various times, he was a contemporary of George Washington, Andrew Jackson, Abraham Lincoln and other historical characters. He has been through the Revolutionary, Mexican, civil and various Indian wars and always escaped without a scratch, although he was always in the front ranks. Aside from being a soldier Uncle Zig was one of the pioneer settlers of California, New Mexico, Nevada, Kansas and Oklahoma. From time to time he has made grand reputations in certain regions as a powerful religious exhorter. It is said that he can draw more people to the Old Testament by having the first few words given him.

Uncle Zig's favorite costume consists of a tall, black silk hat, a long black frock coat, a wide colored vest, blue overalls or trousers and white shoes. He wears at the same time a red, white and blue shirt to testify to his patriotism and over this a white shawl in which he mummifies himself in it. A heavy piece of lath for a cane and a big chew of tobacco complete his best attire. Many attempts have been made to induce Uncle Zig to take a drink of liquor, but he has refused steadily to be led into temptation. However, he confesses that a drink now and then would be a good deed during those time he could count chickens in the dark at 20 paces, and that he could even tell their breed at that distance.

Uncle Zig has been engaged in his declining years, and with the money he has saved he has purchased a lot in Oakwoods cemetery, near where the Confederate dead lie. On the tombstone which will be erected over his grave he will have engraved this inscription:

Shun the wicked; choose the right;
Do a man like me.—Zig White.

SULLIVAN'S SECRET.

How He Could Tell Whether It Was a Boy or a Girl.

When John L. Sullivan was in Washington once upon a time he amused a crowd of listeners who happened to be of a variety intellectually superior to the average crowd of hangers on who worship the great man's memory for what he was, with an exhibition of fistic manners in which, according to John's idea, brain instead of brawn and fistic prowess plays the better part. He told the age of any man in a crowd who was large enough to add, subtract and divide a series of compound figures, which John furnished, and nine times out of ten hit the mark.

But one feat which he performed and in which he believed with the fervor of an idolater goes into the marvelous. It involved the guessing before the firstborn of a given couple was a boy or a girl. The way that this feat was accomplished was a profound secret with the pugilist, but the head of confidence he disclosed the method to the writer.

To solve the problem the only necessary data is the given name of the mother of the mother and the full name of the father. According to Mr. Sullivan's formula, if, after counting the letters in both names, the odds is an even one, the firstborn is a boy; if odd, the issue of the union is a girl. For example, all the letters in Mary Jane Brown and William Smith form a total of 23, an odd number; result, a girl. If this formula is reliable, it will serve forestalling purposes as well as the establishment of good will, but no editorial guaranty goes with the prescription.—Washington Post.

The Beauty of Sympathy.

Sympathy, beautiful and pure, is apt to be marred by its being prompted merely by a sense of duty, and thus its true and beautiful character lost. It is true that the habit becomes second nature to us, and by habit we may and do develop honorable and charitable sympathy with our fellow men, but the true sympathetic are so born, and it is as impossible for them to enshroud their true desires and feelings in a cloak as to transform by the hook." It is in the late youth and mature years that, as a rule, we see its most splendid achievements. In childhood it is apt to be but in embryo.

In the old age of good people its beauty is enhanced, and yet in many instances, in the sere and yellow leaf, all that was of sympathy, all that one might have been, becomes bitterness, and the selfish man clings to what he has gained, covetously. Then, indeed, is the sympathy which baffles description. All his treasures are on earth, and as he knows he must and shall leave them there can be no moral influence in him, and he becomes centered on that which is of but short duration. He becomes "earthen," and the rest of his days are spent in sordid contemplation of that which is but an idle dream.—Current Literature.

A Miniature Inland Ocean.

One of the queerest sheets of water in New England or within the limits of the United States, or the world, for that matter, is the celebrated "Oneota pond," in the state of Maine. When calm, it is, to all appearance, an ordinary pond of no great dimensions, but observations and investigations made from time to time during ago prove that the little body of water is a veritable ocean. It is located in Orrington near Bangor, and its peculiarity is that, though situated among some high hills some distance from ocean or river, it has tides which rise and fall as regularly as do those in the great Atlantic ocean. So careful scientific examinations of this miniature ocean's bed and surrounding banks have been made, but so far no tenable explanation of the phenomenon has ever been given to the public.—St. Louis Republic.

How to Clean Necktios.

Take 18 grains of powdered white castile soap, 5 fluid drams of strong aqua ammonia, 24 grains of granulated saltpeter. First dissolve the soap in a pint of warm soft water, then add the saltpeter, and after it has dissolved add the ammonia. Set aside over night, or the equivalent ten hours, and then it is ready to use. Take a cloth or small sponge, and after wringing it out of this mixture gently rub the ties until all dirt disappears.—Philadelphia Times.

A Hard Lesson.

"Do you think you could learn to love me, Maud?"

"I don't know, George," she answered softly; "I might. I learned German once."—London Answers.

CHARACTER IN LEGS.

Uncertain, Sloppy Lower Extremities Mark Their Owners as Failures In Life.

"Did you ever notice," asked the observant Jerseyman, "that you could never tell what the general character of a man for efficiency and ability is simply by seeing his head and face and the upper part of his body? It is a fact. You have got to scan a man's legs to be able to give a fair estimate of him, and if this rule applies as surely to women—and of that I can't speak, with anything like certainty from lack of close and exhaustive observations—then the quicker the rage for bicycle riding comes in the better it will be for the young men with brains and ambition. It will, of course, supposing that they are going to exercise some judgment in making their selections.

"The manner in which I was first led to observe this was through a man who occupied the humble place of cashier in a cheap restaurant. Why a man with such an intellectual face should be occupying such a cheap place was a fresh source of wonder to me every time I saw him there. His head was well shaped, his voice and manners were those of a man well brought up, his hands were shapely, and the whole of his body, so far as could be seen as he stood behind the cash counter, was that of an active, well formed, vigorous man.

"But one day I saw him out on the street, and there was then no room to question why he was a cash cashier. It was all in his legs. There was no lack of mere physical strength in his legs apparently, for he walked all right, but the trouble is best expressed in the term sloppy. They were uncertain, indeterminate legs, that had a sort of unfinished look about them, and which gave the effect of matching his hands, were just as sloppy in form as his legs. I have seen many such pairs of legs in an insane asylum.

"Since that time I have noted the appearance of the legs of many of the persons whom I know and compared their characters with them, and the histories of those persons, and in no case have I failed to find that a sloppy pair of legs was the mark of the men who were failures in life, despite the possession of good health, good habits, good natural talents and these often combined with all the advantages which education and well off parents could give to them in beginning the world.

"On the other hand, whenever I see a man with a good clean cut pair of legs answering to those, or a man with a firm, sturdy, emphatic pair of legs, I am just as certain as I can be that that man is going to get there. Can be, do you suppose, that it is because of an instinctive knowledge of this that we seek so naturally to see what sort of ankles the women have carved and colored hours in that study on a rainy day without wearying? Applied by my rule it would certainly be a profitable study, and the coming days of bloomers and wheels will afford us a fair test. I still fear that we shall never be able to make sure of the character of the women we see unless the law were to step in to aid us."—New York Sun.

Didn't Go to New York Yet Dis.

A policeman at the Grand Central station came into bone getting himself into a fierce fight through a ludicrous misunderstanding. The day express from Buffalo had just arrived at the station and the passengers were making their way through the gates to the street. An Irishman dressed in overalls and jumper stepped from the crowd and walked up to the policeman. Said he:

"I'm a tectrician. I works with linemen laying of wires. I do be comin down here to get wurrick with the Western Union. Cud yo tell me where they have their buildin?"

The fellow seemed to be a good natured sort of a chap and the policeman took extra pains to set him right. He took the fellow by the arm and walked him out in Forty-second street, where he could see the elevated station of the Sixth avenue line. Then the policeman said:

"You go down there and get on an elevated train going down town. Get off at Park place station and then walk up to the corner of Broadway and Dey."

"Oi'll do nothin of the kind!" shouted the Irishman. "Go down to the corner of Broadway and die yerself! I am from the country, and maybe I am green, but yo nor any other man can make fun of me. I'd have ye to understand that."

He began to make hostile demonstrations and only the timely and timely restrained from assaulting the officer, but finally he was made to understand.—New York Tribune.

Vermont's Volcano.

People who live in the vicinity of Gassetts are all familiar with the story. The region is one of remarkable interest, and one who examined it even slightly would not feel surprised to hear that an earthquake swallowed it or a volcano had poured forth sufficient lava to engulf it. The hills about Gassetts are continuations of Hawk mountain, which orginates in Weathersfield and quite somewhat nearly reaches into Chester. At Gassetts it is broken and gashed by gulfs and chasms, evidently left by violent convulsions ages ago. A stone has been found which appears to have been of volcanic origin. There is some question as to whether in the present age there has ever been any disturbance, most of the stories to that effect originating from some one seeing a burning trush heap. Geographically, however, it is one of the most interesting spots in the state.—Burlington Free Press.

The Genuine Article.

Guest—Do you keep champagne?

Landlord—Yes; the genuine article as 4 marks a bottle.

Guest—Why, that can't be genuine?

Landlord—Besides we have some still more genuine at 6 marks, and, lastly, some supergenuine such as you won't get in the house of a crowned head. We sell that at 10 marks a bottle. Which will you take?—Humoristische Blatter.

Akin.

"Do you think that marriage is a failure, Mr. Askin?" said Miss Elder to a young man whom she knew to be engaged.

"I don't get it that far yet. Was the frank reply, "but I'm pretty well convinced that courtship is bankruptcy."—London Tit-Bits.

Friends should not be chosen to flatter. The quality we prize in that aptitude which will shrink from the little tragedies which increase vanities destroy friendship.—Channing.

"I have generally found that the man who is good at an excuse is good for nothing else," said Franklin to a servant who was always late, but always ready with an excuse.

A tablet has been placed in the Church of St. Giles, Cripplegate, recording the fact that Oliver Cromwell was married there in 1620.

THEATRICAL.

"The Fire Patrol," a new melodrama, will be presented at Music Hall Nov. 28th. It was written by the author of "The Midnight Alarm," which played a successful engagement here but a short time ago. "The Fire Patrol" was presented in New York city for three weeks in the early part of the season and was warmly received. It serves to introduce a fire patrol wagon with two magnificent horses. This is but one of the many thrilling situations in this really clever melodrama. A matinee will be given.

A Pretty Dance.

It is understood that the celebrated Flower Dance, composed by Mme. Menzeli Bartlett and introduced by her in Music Hall about two years ago, will be considerably altered and improved in the way of grouping and poses so as to suit the present pupils talents, which have considerably increased since first Mme. Bartlett instructed them. The attraction on the dance will be much greater, as the Butterflies will be introduced with it, and in consequence make the grouping more improving. Do not fail to visit the Firemen's Fair and see these great dances and drills.

Harper's Magazine

IN 1896.

Briseis, a new novel by William Black, written with all the author's well-known charm of manner, will begin in the December Number, 1895, and continue until May. A new novel by George du Maurier, entitled The Martian, will also begin during the year. It is safe to say that no novel has ever been awaited with such great expectation as the successor to Trilby. The Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc will continue and will relate the story of the failure and martyrdom of the Maid of Orleans. Other important fiction of the year will be a novelette by Mark Twain, under the title, Tom Sawyer, Detective; a humorous three-part tale called Two Pharaohs from Maddfey, by Langdon Elwyn Mitchell; and short stories by Octave Thanet, Richard Harding Davis, Mary E. Wilkins, Julian Ralph, Brander Matthews, Owen Wister, and other well-known writers.

Prof. Woodrow Wilson, will contribute six papers on George Washington and his colleagues, illustrations by Howard Pyle. Poultney Bigelow's history of The German Struggle for Liberty, illustrated by R. Caton Woodville, will be continued through the winter. Two papers on St. Clair's defeat and Mad Anthony Wayne's victory, by Theodore Roosevelt, with graphic illustrations will be printed during the year.

A noteworthy feature of the MAGAZINE during the will be a series of articles by Caspar W. Whitney, describing his trip of 2000 miles on snowshoes and with dog-sledge trains into the unexplored Barren Grounds of British North America in pursuit of wood-bison and musk-oxen. Mr. Whitney's series will have the added interest of being illustrated from photographs taken by himself.

The Volumes of the MAGAZINE begin with the Numbers for June and December of each year. When no time is mentioned, subscriptions will begin with the Number current at the time of receipt of order.

Remittances should be made by Post-office Money order or draft, to avoid chance or loss.

Contest of Insurance Agents.

The three districts into which the Metropolitan Insurance Company is divided, Elizabeth, Orange and Bridgeport, Conn., have been holding a contest for the past six months to see which division could secure the most new business. The contest closed a few days ago when it was learned that Elizabeth had won. The other two districts accordingly were obliged to give the Elizabeth district a banquet, which they did in the Drake Opera House, Elizabeth, Thursday night. There were about seventy five present, including Superintendents Dolan and Barton and several agents of this city.

Acknowledgments.

The ladies in charge of the French booth and the German booth of the Muhlenberg Hospital Kermess desire to acknowledge the liberal and valuable aid gratuitously given to them by Messrs. Pearson and Gayle, and also Marsh & Ayers, who not only furnished the materials for the said booths, but erected and decorated them, and aided the ladies in every way in their power to make them successful.

Plainfield Stone for Philadelphia.

Smalley Brothers are shipping crushed stone to Philadelphia parties in large quantities. The freight charges per ton are almost as much as the stone can be purchased here for. The quality of the stone that is to be obtained in this locality and its nearness to the railroad is the best in the State.

Harper's Bazar

The twenty-ninth year of HARPER'S BAZAR, beginning in January, 1896, finds it maintaining its deserved reputation both as a fashion Journal and a weekly periodical for home reading.

Every week the BAZAR presents beautiful toilettes for various occasions, Sandog, Baude, and Chapuis ll illustrate and engrave the newest designs from the finest models in Paris and Berlin. New York Fashions epitomizes current styles in New York. A fourteen-inch pattern sheet supplement with diagrams and directions enables women to cut and make their own gowns and is of great value to the professional modiste as well as to the amateur dressmaker. Children's Clothing receives constant attention. Fashions for Men are described in full detail by a man-about-town, Our Paris Letter, by Katharine de Forest, is a sprightly weekly recital of fashion, gossip, and social doings in Paris, given by a clever woman in an entertaining way.

Both the serials for 1896 are the work of American women. Mrs. Gerald, by Mary Louise Pool, is a striking story of New England life. Mary E. Wilkins, in Jerome, a Poor Man, elaborates the most interesting problems of the relations between labor and capital. Short stories will be written by the best authors.

Special Departments. Music, The Outdoor Woman, Personals, What We Are Doing, Women and Men, report and discuss themes of immediate interest.

Answers to Correspondents. Questions receive the personal attention of the editor, and are answered at the earliest practicable date after their receipt.

The Volumes of the BAZAR begin with the first Number for January of each year. When no time is mentioned, subscriptions will begin with the Number current at the time of receipt of order.

American Agriculturist.

An Ideal Farm and Family WEEKLY.

To extend its usefulness and make it a practical necessity to every progressive farmer and his family, the American Agriculturist is now published weekly instead of monthly at

$1.00 A YEAR.

All the leading features that have made the monthly so popular are retained and many new features added: such as general and local market prices, crop reports in their season, condensed farm news, and letters among the farmers.

Its Farm Features

Such as Live Stock, Dairying, Horticulture, Poultry, Market Gardening, and other topics, written by Practical and Successful farmers, supplemented with illustrations by able artists, combine to make it invaluable to those who "farm it for a living."

The latest markets and commercial agriculture are leading features, in which the Agriculturist is not excelled.

A Little Fellow's Sickness.

Master Andrew Carney, the young son of A. L. Carney, of Emily street who for a few weeks has been undergoing surgical operations on his left arm, in the New York Hospital, West Fifteenth street, where he has become quite a favorite, had the misfortune to contract diphtheria from one of the patients that came into the ward where he was before the nature of the disease was known. The little fellow is only seven years old. He was removed to another hospital and every care will be bestowed upon him. His parents are considerably worried. A few weeks ago a number of his playmates paid him a visit at the hospital.

Cut By a Broken Glass.

Theodore Smith, clerk at A. B. Findlay's on East Second street, met with a very painful accident Saturday afternoon about 5 o'clock. He was handling several glasses when one of them fell and in his endeavor to catch the glass he was severely cut on the thumb of his left hand, badly lacerating the member. He suffered a good deal of pain along with the loss of blood. After having the wound dressed he continued at his work.

For Needy Clergymen.

The Ladies' Christian Work Society, assisted by the Whasoever Circle, King's Daughters, of Trinity Reformed church, have filled a large box with articles needed in a poor man's family, and will send it to the home of one of South Dakota's needy ministers in in a few day to gladden their hearts at Christmas time. The contents of the box is valued at $94.

Harper's Weekly

IN 1896.

HARPER'S WEEKLY is a journal for the whole country. It deals with the events of the world that are important to all Americans.

In carrying out this policy, in 1895 Julian Ralph visited China and Japan, and journeyed through the West. Richard Harding Davis took a trip through the Caribbean Sea; the events of the Venezuelan war were described and illustrated by Rufus F. Zogbaum. Frederic Remington presented studies of Army and Frontier life; Poultney Bigelow attended the opening of the Kiel Canal.

In 1896 like attention will be given to every notable happening. The chief events in art, literature and music and the drama will be artistically presented. W. D Howells, in the new department, Editor's Easy Chair, will discuss in his interesting way books and the social questions of the time. E. S. Martin's sprightly gossip of The Easy Work will be continued. The progress of the Transportation Commission around the World will be followed, and Caspar W. Whitney will conduct the department of Amateur Sport.

In 1896 will occur a Presidential election. In its editorials and through its political articles HARPER'S WEEKLY will continue to be an independent advocate of good government and sound money.

In 1896 HARPER'S WEEKLY will be especially strong. It will publish the only novel of the year by W. D. Howells and a stirring serial of a Scotch feud by S. R. Crockett. The short stories selected are of unusual excellence and interest. In every respect HARPER'S WEEKLY will maintain its leading place in the illustrated journalism of the world.

The Volumes of the WEEKLY begin with the first Number for January of each year. When no time is mentioned, subscriptions will begin with the Number current at the time of receipt of order.

Remittances should be made by Post-office Money Order or Draft, to avoid chance of loss.

Proceedings of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union County.

[OFFICIAL.]

Regular meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union, held on Thursday, November 7th, 1895, at 2:30 o'clock p. m.

The following members were present:

Director Hubbard, Freeholders Baigley, Clark, Ehrlich, Halliday, Farrel, Hulskamper, Krause, Littell, Miller, Ogden, Roll, Swain, Tier, Westcott, Woodruff.

Absent—Morrell.

The minutes of the previous meeting reading of which was omitted were on motion approved as read.

COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.,

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

Whereas The Board of Health of the Township of Union have knowledge of the existence in the public highway known as Westfield avenue, where at Aldene, in the said Township, a stream of water passes through a bridge erected by the Freeholders across the said avenue, of an obstruction to the said bridge, which the Board of Health believe causes a nuisance injurious and a menace to the health of the inhabitants of the said Township of Union.

You are therefore, hereby notified that the said Board of Health will meet at the Town Hall at Union, in said Township of Union, on Monday, the Fourth day of November next, at two o'clock in the afternoon to examine into the said matter, and to do further what the law may require, at which time and place you may be present, if you so desire.

Dated at Union Township, Union County, New Jersey, this twenty-eight day of October, eighteen hundred and ninety-five.

D. H. Beach,
Chairman Board of Health.
D. Hobart Sayre,
Clerk and Secretary.

From the Board of Health of the Township of Union:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

You are hereby notified that the Board of Health of the Township of Union have found that there exists in the public highway known as Westfield avenue, which is a county road, and under the care and supervision of the Board of Freeholders of Union County, where at Aldene, in said township, a stream of water has heretofore passed through a bridge erected by the Freeholders said avenue, an obstruction in or under the said bridge which prevents the passage of water has heretofore been accustomed to pass under the bridge, and which obstruction works an injury to the health and is also the cause of ill health and disease to the inhabitants of said township, and that the said Board of Health have adjudged the same to be a nuisance hazardous to the public health.

The said Board of Health of the Township of Union, do therefore hereby order you to remove the said nuisance at your own expense, within five days from the date of the service of this order upon you.

Dated at Union Township, this fourth day of November, eighteen hundred and ninety-five.

D. H. Beach,
Chairman Board of Health,
D. Hobart Sayre,
Clerk and Secretary.

After some discussion, the two communications were on motion of Freeholder Farrel, received and placed on file.

From Henry Howard and J. Mell Howard as follows:

Rahway, N. J., November 6th, 1895

To the Honorable Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union County, N. J.

Gentlemen:—We, the undersigned, representing in part, interests of James Howard's estate, wish to call your attention and action in the matter of a sewer pipe being laid to carry off water from a low point on St. George's avenue, fronting our property. This pipe we think should be at least 18 inches in diameter, and it will require 100 feet, or about the same number of feet. This place has been allowed to exist for a number of years through the fact of our not having any use for the land, but now wanting to use same, we ask your Honorable body for a prompt and considerate action in the matter.

Trusting this will meet with your approval, we remain,

(Signed)
Yours very truly,
Henry Howard,
J. Mell Howard.

On motion of Freeholder Westcott, received and placed on file.

From James W. Fink, County Road Inspector:

Westfield, N. J., Nov. 6th, 1895.

To the Honorable Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union County:

Gentlemen—The undersigned would respectfully call the attention of your Honorable Body again to the following report of repairs made on county roads to November 1st, 1895.

On St. George's avenue 1,425 lineal feet of road has been repaired, 2,800 feet of gutters cleaned, 1,500 feet of ruts filled with stone.

On North avenue at Cranford, 3,543 lineal feet of road repaired, 8,486 feet of gutters cleaned, 2,697 feet of ruts filled with stone.

On Morris avenue at and near Mr. Kearns, near the Hammick, from Meeker Inn to Ball's store at Springfield and Summit Township line in Summit, and at New Providence, in all 21,111 lineal feet of road repaired, 56,402 feet of gutters cleaned, 13,636 feet of ruts filled with stone, the road approaches at New Providence. This work has been all 16 feet wide except at New Providence, Summit, and at Springfield and Summit Township line, which has been 14 feet wide. In miles the work amounts to nearly 5 miles roads repaired, 13 miles of gutters cleaned, 4 miles of ruts filled.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

EVENING OF CLASSICAL MUSIC.

THE BENEFIT CONCERT AT MONROE AVENUE CHAPEL A SUCCESS.

The Attendance Was Large and the Different Numbers Excellently Rendered—Those that Took Part and the Selections.

The walk in the clear and cold atmosphere last Tuesday, made the benefit concert at the Monroe Avenue chapel seem all the more enjoyable. The beautiful full moon tempted many to come out and add their quarters to the furnishing fund of the library building. The concert was tendered to the Ladies Aid Society by Mrs. Anita Tovell, cellist; L. H. Bigelow, baritone; E. Ludwig Conde, violinist; and E. Arthur Janke, pianist. Miss Julia J. Ketchum was to have taken part, but a severe cold prevented her.

Those present were treated to a delightful evening of music rendered by those taking part, each one of which is a master. The different numbers, which were all classical, were rendered with a skill that made them all the more enjoyable to a lover of music. P. Ludwig Conde played especially well and deserved the praise he received. Mr. Bigelow's singing was also very good, while Mr. Janke pleased all his hearers by his excellent rendition of all his selections. Mrs. Trovell showed her excellence on the 'cello.

The programme opened with a trio from Wohlfahrt, Mrs. Trovell, and Messrs Conde and Janke. Then followed a selection, 'Romanza" from one of Grieg's Sonatas by violin and piano. Mr. Bigelow sang "Evening Star" by Wagner, and gave as his encore that beautiful lullaby by De-Koven "Ferry to Shadowtown." A violin solo by Mr. Conde, "Cavatina" by Raff, was vigorously applauded. "Fantaisie Impromptu" by Chopin, and "Romanza" by Schumann were next rendered by Mr. Janke and closed the first part.

Another of Conde's violin solos, "Preis Lied, Meistersinger" by Wagner, was heartily applauded, and then Mr. Bigelow in the solo "Margarette" by Helmun, received his share of praise and gave "Good Night" by Dvorack, as his encore.

The programme closed with a selection by violin and piano "Rondo" from a Sonata by Beethoven.

Go to Florida This Winter by the Clyde Line.

Because on their new, fast, steel steamships, which take but two and a-half days from New York to Florida, without change, you are perfectly safe and away from all domestic or business cares and troubles. A Praise Service.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Crescent Avenue church will hold a praise meeting on Friday, December 6th, in the church parlors, at half-past three o'clock. An interesting address is expected by Mrs. Grant, a medical missionary, who has been laboring among the Waldenses in North Carolina.

A Thrilling Effect.

Among other numbers on Friday evening George Riddle will give scenes from Victor Hugo's "Lucrezia Borgia," of which the New York Tribune speaks thus: "Mr. Riddle has never produced a more thrilling effect or left a stronger impression on the minds of his hearers than in 'Lucrezia Borhia.'"

Board of Health at Work.

A meeting of the City Board of Health was held last evening and an ordinance passed which allows no connection to be made with the sewer without the permission of the representative of the Board. This ordinance will be published and will go into effect at once. Routine business was transcted.

Many very bad cases of rheumatism have been cured by it. For sale at 50 cents per bottle by Reynolds' Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

ORGAN LOFT ILLUMINATED.

First Presbyterian Church Adopts a Simple But Important Improvement.

Ordinarily, in examining or tuning church organs, candles are carried about in the different parts to see to make the repairs or changes. The consequences have been disastrous in several cases, notably in Henry Ward Beecher's church in Brooklyn. The fire, which destroyed the church, was caused by a lighted candle being left in the organ, which burned down so low that the woodwork caught.

The First Presbyterian church of this city, after having a motor put in to pump the organ, concluded, on the suggestion of Willard M. Miner, a prominent electrician of this city, to have the organ loft completely illuminated by five incandescent electric lights. The lights are only used for a short time, but are always ready when wanted, lighting the organ completely from top to bottom as bright as any ordinary room. This not only gives a superior light to the the tuner or repair man, but it is also an absolute safeguard against fire. The First Presbyterian church is the only church in Plainfield which has this inovation, and as far as is known, the only one in the State.

Funny Paper That is Funny.

The first number of Clips, a new and handsome "funny paper" just issued in New York has been received. To the jaded gentleman whose business it is to read "first numbers" of alleged humorous publications it is indeed a relief to find something, once in a way, bright, vivacious and eminently readable. There is already a large number of clever periodicals of this nature and one might think that the field of humor was nearly exhausted, but in spite of this fact, or perhaps because of it, Clips has issued a very promising initial copy. The editorial shears have been well directed and the best of the humor of the world is clipped each week and cemented together with original matter of interest and merit. All this, to say nothing of the original illustrations, is served to you on the news stands for five cents. The artistic work is in charge of H. B. Eddy, the famous illustrator of Chimmie Fadden, and the other departments are in equally competent hands. Clips should have a prosperous career.

Funeral of Miss Sauer.

The funeral services of the late Miss Lena Sauer whose sad death occurred at Muhlenberg Hospital Sunday afternoon were held from Warren Chapel yesterday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock and were largely attended by friends.

Rev. J. O. McKelvey, pastor, conducted the service and spoke very tenderly of the decedent.

The floral tributes consisted of a handsome pillow from her Sunday-school class, bearing the inscription "Asleep in Jesus," a cross from unknown friends and several bunches of cut flowers.

The pall-bearers were Augustus Wilson, Samuel Terry, Jr., Harry Adams and Arthur Adams. Interment was in Hillside cemetery.

A Big Time.

F. L. C. Martin has returned from his trip to Atlanta with the "Crescent" people and he expresses the time they had as a very "large" one. The big wheelmen's dinner, given by R. Lindley Coleman, president of the Western Wheel Company, was greatly enjoyed by all, while the exposition was a great attraction. Mr. Martin brings back with him a box of cotton that he picked himself, besides a number of other souvenirs of the trip.

THE REPUBLICAN WAY

The Whole City Carried by Big Pluralities for Them.

GEO. DEMEZA MAKES A GREAT RUN.

The Election Was Without Exciting Incident, the Voters Casting Their Ballots Silently—Elias H. Bird Goes Into the Collector's Office With 445 Plurality, While DeMeza Gets a Majority Over All—Official Conduct of Mayor Gilbert and the Common Council Endorsed, Notwithstanding the Lies Circulated by the Disgruntled and Disappointed Party Organ.

The Citizens' and Wheelmen's party was born in a day and though it was a fairly lively youngster for a short time, it succumbed to the avalanche of Republican votes yesterday and now lies in the tomb of the defeated.

The campaign leading up to Tuesday's election was a remarkably tame one, and the scenes around the polls Tuesday was in keeping with the previous spirit.

There was no cat hauling and pulling by the workers and the votes that were polled were cast by men who did it in a quiet manner. The heaviest voting was done after one o'clock. In nearly all the districts the election boards did not finish their work until three and four o'clock this morning.

The run which George DeMeza made for City Judge was a surprise of everyone. He was the only man who received a majority of all the votes cast.

George W. D Meza was born twenty-four years ago at Hartford, Conn., but came here before he was one year old, and was educated in private and public schools. When only sixteen, his father died, throwing him upon his own resources; he started life as an office boy with Schepplin & Co., for one year, then took up the study of law with Jackson & Codington, one of the leading law firms in New Jersey. Mr DeMeza was admitted to the bar at the age of twenty-one, and the day following he started in business for himself in the First National Bank building. His first case in the Superior Court met with success and his success has been looked upon as some thing remarkable for so young a man. He is spoken of by lawyers as being blessed with a brilliant future. He has the finest office in this city, consisting of three rooms, three clerks and one stenographer. This is his first attempt at office seeking.

The plurality of 445 which Elias H. Bird received was the cause of his receiving innumerable congratulations this morning personally and by telephone.

The detailed vote follows:

POMPEY'S WIDOW WRATHY.

She Pulled a Revolver and Threatened to Shoot Ex-Senator Corle.

Mrs. Pompey Lane, colored, is in the Somerset county jail on a charge of assaulting ex Senator Calvin Corle. The affair took place in front of the Second National Bank, on Main street, at Somerville, Tuesday.

Mr. Corle had left the building with ex-Sheriff B. F. Totten, when Mrs Lane, who is a middle aged woman with white hair and wears gold eye glasses, stepped up and demanded that he pay her money which he is holding in trusting for her.

Mr. Corle told her he would pay her when the money was due and not before.

The woman was very angry, and as Mr. Corle turned away she pulled a revolver from the folds of her dress and pointed it at his breast. Ex-Sheriff Totten caught her hand and pushed it aside. The woman was then overpowered and taken before Justice Suthphen, who committed her to the county jail in default of $2,000 bail.

Mrs. Lane is the widow of one of the most prosperous colored men in the county. They lived at Neshanic until Pompey Lane's death two years ago. Since that time the widow has been keeping a boarding house in town. She is a tall, handsome woman, and quite a leader among the colored folks.

When Pompey Lane died he left a farm and considerable property. Mr. Corle was made the administrator. Mrs. Lane has had a strange hallucination that Mr. Corle was withholding her money from her. She made frequent calls upon him for it.

Mr. Corle says that he has always paid her as the will of her husband provided, and he could not do more.

THE JUNIOR RALLY.

Young Endeavorers As Active As the Older Ones.

That the Junior Christian Endeavor Society can equal the Senior Society in interest and activity was conclusively shown last Tuesday at their rally in the Trinity Reformed church, at which time a large audience was present. A large platform had been erected and the members were provided with seats. Mrs. Wheaton Lowry, the local president, was in charge and D. E. Titsworth led the singing, accompanied by Miss Emma V. Fish on the piano. Several hymns were rendered by the society, after which E. E. Anthony announced that he had received two telegrams from State President Arthur Spooner stating that his wife was ill, and also that he had been taken ill, and in consequence was not able to be present. He then introduced Rev. C. E. Herring, who had been secured in Mr. Spooner's place. He gave a highly interesting object talk on "Lights," making use of various sized candles to explain the same.

This was followed with a duet by Viola Hellyer and Florence Cuming the whole society joining in the chorus. Mr. Anthony followed with a few remarks in which he asked the audience to hold up their right hands, after which he said now put them in your pockets for the ushers are going to take up a collection. As an offertory Lindly Hillman rendered a violin solo, accompanied by Miss Poole.

A few sentence prayers and testimonies as to what the society had done for the juniors was then given. Another violin solo by Lindley Hillman preceeded a very interesting exercise by the following: Norman Hill, Violet VanWinkle, Harold Smalley, Fanny Fisk, Wm. Remsen Lillian Richardson, Charles Hellyer, and Marion Shotwell. Each one wore a placard bearing the monogram "C. E." Upon the removal of them the word Junior came into view.

A hymn by the society and the benediction by Rev. C. E. Herring brought the rally to a close.

CAMP HAND ELECTS.

The following officers were elected at the meeting of John Hand Camp, No. 24, S. of V., last evening, to serve for the ensuing year:

Captain, W. S Sutton; First Lieutenant, C. F. Stephens; Second Lieutenant, H. C. McVoy; Camp Council, Charles Graves, Jr., L. E. Eaton, James Stryker; Delegates at Large to Division Encampment, H. J. Martin; Alternate, Fred Sutton; Delegate, C. F. Stephens; Alternate, Raymond McVoy.

The balance of the evening was devoted to routine business and the admission of L. E. Eaton by transfer card from the Alfred, N. Y., Camp.

High School Notes.

The weather is growing colder and the ice is forming on the lakes, therefore the interest among the boys is increasing and a "hockey team" is being talked of and will soon be formed.

A recitation was given yesterday morning by Mildred Titsworth entitled "The Orchestra."

As the three upper classes of the school all sit in one room the class spirit is small and feeble, therefore it is quite a problem for the classes to know how to decorate the room with their class colors. All three classes will have to unite and combine the many colors in the way in which they blend the best, leaving the platform and the forward part of the chapel to the class of '96 to decorate.

Bicycle Men Meet.

The Board of Trustees, of the Plainfield Bicycle Club met last evening at the home of George P. Mellick, of La Grande avenue. Those present were President D. M. VanVliet, F. L. C. Martin, J. W. Sandford, Jr., A. L. C. Marsh. G. P. Mellick, Townsend Rushmore, M. W. Daboll and T. S. Burr. Routine business was transacted.

Major C. T. Picton is manager of the State Hotel, at Denison, Texas, which the traveling men say is one of the best hotels in that section. In speaking of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy Major Picton says: "I have used it myself and in my family for several years, and take pleasure in saying that I consider it an infallible cure for diarrhoea and dysentery. I always recommend it, and have frequently administered it to my guests in the hotel, and in every case it has proven itself worthy of unqualified endorsement. MOHAMMED WAS ILLITERATE.

DR. RIGGS EXPLAINS THE CHARACTERISTICS OF MOHAMMEDISM.

Its Power in the Eastern Countries Shows Much Vitality in Spite of Many Corruptions—Other Points of Interest.

The chapel of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church was well filled Tuesday with interested listeners to the second of Dr. James F. Riggs' University Extension lectures on the Eastern Question. The subject for the evening was "Mohammed and Mohammedism."

One of the great central facts with which we have to deal in studying the Eastern Question, said Dr. Riggs, is the religion known as "Islam." It is a remarkable combination of truth and error, and has shown an amazing vitality in spite of many corruptions.

At the time of Mohammed's birth, the Christianity of the world was almost worse than none. The greatest learning and piety were shut up in the monasteries, and the large cities were a hot bed of vice.

Mohammed was born at Mecca about A. D. 569, and began to preach about 609. It is certain that it first he was perfectly sincere. His aim was to break down polytheism and to bring men back to the pure faith of their fathers. He made a genuine effort for reform. But later he began to waiver in his allegiance to truth.

The Mohammedans have many strange legends covering the founder of their father, a large number of which they accept as implicitly true. For example, there is the story of the "night journey to heaven," which represents Mohammed as going to heaven on the stud of the lightning, seeing the wonders of heaven and hell, talking with Moses, and receiving, face to face with God, a detailed description of what the new faith was to be.

Mohammed was an untaught, illiterate man. There is no adequate reason for his success, aside from his own personality; he had enormous native force of character.

Mohammedanism is the protest of the East against idolatry. The articles of faith are six:—God, predestination, angels, both good and bad, books, chiefly the Koran, prophets, the resurrection and the final judgment. In the teaching on these points, there is a curious blending of truth borrowed from the Hebrew scriptures, and errors of every imaginable sort.

The Mohammedan has five duties; prayer, five times a day, almsgiving, fasting, specially during the month Ramazan, pilgrimage and war against the infidel. The last two duties are not now very strictly observed.

Dr. Riggs closed his lecture by reading a few short selections from Mohammedan sacred literature, after which a large number of those present remained to the conversation class which Dr. Riggs conducts at the close of each lecture.

A MATCH FOR A CIGARETTE.

It Is Thrown on a Y. M. C. A. Carpet and Starts a Blaze.

Plainfield's handsome Y. M. C. A. building came very near being the scene of a disastrous fire last evening.

The final rehearsal for the Old Folks Concert was being held in the hall and during one of the intervals between the different numbers William M. MacClymont, who is in charge of the concert, noticed several faces at the door and went out to see who they were. As he opened the door into the hall, two boys ran out, each puffing on a cigarette. Then Mr. MacClymont noticed a lighted match that had been thrown on the floor and had already set fire to the matting. As the fire had only just started he easily stamped it out, but there was excitement for a few moments. It is a strict rule of the Y. M. C. A. that no one is allowed to smoke in the building.

An Erroneous Statement.

The statement published in The News that the pupils in St. Mary's School were to participate in the dances of the firemen's fair is entirely false. They are pupils of Madame Bartlett.

When most needed it is not unusual for your family physician to be away from home. Such was the experience of Mr. J. Y. Schenck, editor of the Caddo, Ind. Ter., Banner, when his little girl, two years of age, was threatened with a severe attack of croup. He says: "My wife insisted that I go for the doctor, but as our family physician was out of town I purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, which relieved her immediately. I will not be without it in the future." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Reynolds' Pharmacy, Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager,

FOOD AND MORALS.

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE SPIRITUAL AND PHYSICAL.

Nutriments That Exert a Good or Bad Influence on the Soul or Body—Common Hygienic Laws That Should Make Every Housewife a Moral Agent.

Few things in domestic life deserve more careful study than the influence exercised by food on our moral life, and it is to be feared few of these obtain less attention. Indeed, with an unfortunately large number of people the study of food is looked on as almost wicked, certainly derogatory, and the duty of "high thinking and low living" is insisted on ad nauseam.

Now that it is possible to attach too much importance to the question of "What shall we eat and what shall we drink?" no one will for a moment deny. At the same time it is probable that inattention to that very important question has far more to answer for. From the way some persons talk it would almost seem as if the physical body and the mental body were two entirely separate entities, absolutely independent the one of the other, though for practical purposes the greater and more important was, so to speak, imprisoned in the lower and least considerable portion. If this were true, no doubt much might be said in favor of the doctrine that our mental and moral powers are to be considered above our bodily ones. But as a matter of fact, plainly demonstrated by modern research, these two entities have, at present anyway, no separate existence, but, on the contrary, are inextricably bound up in one complex whole, the spiritual needing for its bodily and the body in its turn influencing the spirit or soul, call it which you will, and it is to this reciprocal action that we owe the absolute importance of the food question.

It is not too much to say that no ill fed man can be either thoroughly sane or intrinsically moral, and unluckily ill fed does not necessarily mean under or insufficiently fed, for in that case the remedy would be of the simplest, viz., a more generous supply of nutriment. Of course it may not be in the poor man's own power to obtain more food, but it would certainly make the task of those anxious to relieve him easier, as it would be plain what to do.

Broadly speaking, all disease is originally preventible. Eliminate dirt and its spiritual prototype, sin, and the human race would be both healthy and happy. As, unfortunately, we can, however, get rid entirely of neither of these factors, we can only do our best to minimize their effects, and in this work, little as many appear to realize it, no one has more part than the house mother. For unless the knowledge that such and such tendencies are, so to speak, in your blood, but face it, and make it your study to counteract them, if not in yourself, at least in your children. Now, in this work food is undoubtedly a firm ally. Take a baby, for instance, and see how entirely its moral condition depends on his bodily. A healthy, properly fed and tended baby is never a fretful, peevish, little imp, always on the whine, and restless and uneasy just when it ought to be asleep. To hear a great deal of the improvement in the health of our girls, and attribute it to the increasing physiological knowledge of the day is, as a matter of fact, it is due to the increasing amount of out of door exercise, fashionably considered a part of actual education by the well to do, which means, of course, that the girls mentalate their food better than in the old days, when a mile was looked on as an unusually long walk for a well bred gentlewoman, and the consequent abstinence, or at most la grace, was the extent of their athletics. A man's diet, and more particularly a woman's, requires to be carefully adjusted to the needs of life. If hard out of door work is their lot, strong nitrogenous food is in our climate both suitable and necessary, but when a sedentary and confined life is inevitable, the diet should be, while nourishing enough to repair the waste of tissue, yet light and digestible enough not unduly to tax the already overworked internal organs.

At the same time it must be borne in mind that too much coddling is as harmful as neglect. To deny a child some brown keepers study the wholesomness so exclusively as to hopelessly weaken the digestive organs they desire to spare. There is a stage in the case of every suitable food, as such by removing to the very uttermost all innutritious matter from our food stuffs, leaving as the only edible only what can be absorbed into the system. Now on the face of it this would appear a wise plan, but as a matter of fact it is productive of great harm. For if formed to lead useful, industrious lives, bearing our fair share of the heat and burden of the day, not to be the coddled, idle inhabitants of a kind of hothouse, the wholesome we are given organs of various kinds fitted for the work we are to perform. But as it is a law of nature that unused powers should be taken away the coddling produces the very effect it is intended to prevent—i. e., by want of use it gradually withers away the digestion we do not seem to need, and then when we have to leave this hothouse atmosphere, as sooner or later we all must, we find ourselves unfitted for the more solid and varied food, as by removing to the very uttermost all innutritious matter from our food stuffs, leaving as the only edible only what can be absorbed into the system. Now on the face of it this would appear a wise plan, but as a matter of fact it is productive of great harm. For if formed to lead useful, industrious lives, bearing our fair share of the heat and burden of the day, not to be the coddled, idle inhabitants of a kind of hothouse, the wholesome we are given organs of various kinds fitted for the work we are to perform. But as it is a law of nature that unused powers should be taken away this coddling produces the very effect it is intended to prevent—i. e., by want of use it gradually withers away the digestion we do not seem to need, and then when we have to leave this hothouse atmosphere, as sooner or later we all must, we find ourselves unfitted for the more solid and varied food, and blame poor heredity for the evils brought on us either by the ignorance or the overzeal of our upbringers.

To produce successful results our diet should not only be generous and wholesome, but it should be suitable to our manner of life, our climate and constitution, varied enough to give work to all our internal organs by turns, and sufficiently appetizing to tempt us to take the necessary and wholesome food provided by our way of life. Unless it is so regulated we shall not be healthy, and in consequence shall probably be morose and gloomy people, irritable and uncertain from nervous prostration, and, in short, unfitted for the life before us long before we have worked out our first youth. There is another very serious point to be considered in regard to food. A well fed man is less liable to the morbid cravings that beset an unsatisfied digestion, and so is less predisposed to what some people call our national sin, drink, while a man weakened by indigestion and ill-feeding is more apt to fall a prey to the hundred and one diseases that surround us on all hands. Those acquainted with the awful epidemics of bad drink will tell you that immunity from such is due more to morals than to medicine, and that once a man's morals give way his health pretty surely follows it. Now, this is only another way of saying that a man who has led a wholesome, healthy life is less apt to let his nerves run away with him, and, without begging the question, it may unhesitatingly be asserted that "nerves" is only another word for digestion—or indigestion, as the case may be!—London Queen.

A DREAM OF HEAVEN.

EDWARD FOSTER TEMPLE'S IDEA OF A HAPPY HEREAFTER.

The Bright and Beautiful Condition of the Soul In the Abode Beyond the Grave Reasoning That Brings Comfort to the Bereaved.

There is nothing in life so interesting as death. Whether we have an immortal soul and what becomes of it when the spirit is out of the earthly body is a problem ever in the human mind, and one that ever cries to us trumpet tongued as we stand by the side of our beloved dead. In Today Edward Foster Temple declares his conception of a bright and happy spiritual life in an article entitled "A Dream of Heaven." He begins by saying:

"In my conception of heaven there are bloom and bird song very much akin to the bloom I see by the wayside and the bird song I hear under my window. When my eyes open to the experience of the hereafter, I expect to be greeted, not by something marvelous, but by familiar sights and sounds. Why may not even nature have its spiritual counterpart? Before the violet existed as a substance it existed as an idea in the thought of God. Why, then, may not that mental conception continue to exist after the substance itself has perished, so that when the violet is no longer visible to our natural vision we may still know it as a violet through our sense of spiritual recognition? I cannot believe that anything loses its identity by dying. Because the flower withers when the first frost touches it and before long becomes a heap of unsightly decay it is not evidence that the flower ceases to exist any more than the pulseless form of a man arrayed in his Sunday best is evidence that his life is forever extinct. Some one will say perhaps, 'There is a presupposition to immortality in the case of man because of his spiritual attributes.' How do we know that vegetation has no spiritual attributes? Who indeed among the wisest who ever lived has actually demonstrated when the vegetable creation ends and the animal creation begins?"

Mr. Temple's belief that heaven is nothing more or less than a glorified earth is thus beautifully expressed:

"I believe that everything in nature has a spiritual form which is the exact likeness of its material form. The pattern of what has been always must be, and the heaven which I cherish in my holiest dream, and which I expect to realize after my feet have crossed the threshold of this hereafter, is only this beautiful earth transfigured. There will be laughter and sunshine, tinted sky and springing grass blade, gurgling brook and melodious bird song just the same as we experience here, only we shall know them then, not as tangible things, but as conditions of soul, according to the higher conception of heaven, which some believe even today, it is a place where the elect spend eternity in the worship of deity, but I do not see why it is not quite reasonable to suppose that the lover of flowers will have flowers, that the lover of birds will have birds, that the lover of sunshine will have sunshine and that the homage we render deity will be our willing and faithful care for something we love rather than any mere vocal and sentimental praise.

"Beecher always thought that going to heaven was going to claim one's own. He wanted no band of crape tied to his door knob. He looked in death for a reunion of beautiful flowers. He wished it to be understood that the transition from the here to the hereafter was not something to be regretted, but that something to be rejoiced in as a triumphant going home."

That we shall meet in another world the friends whose departure has wrung our hearts in this, Mr. Temple firmly believes, as this paragraph proves:

"The reunion of friends is another feature that should be omitted from any rational conception of heaven. We are often told that the future is a sealed book. We are told that we cannot follow the spirit into the other world and come back and demonstrate the absolute certainty of a continued existence after death. That is true. But, assuming inside them when their breath grows fainter and fainter, when they have taken their final leave of us, and are only waiting until the glad spirit can lawfully flood from a worn out frame, what does it mean when they see faces which we do not see and hear voices which we do not hear? It sometimes happens that before the natural vision has closed the spiritual is opened, and the hand of the dying is not only put into ours in the parting, but into the hand of a loved one gone before. This may be at the same time put into that of an angel for a pressure of affectionate greeting."

"We are told that there is progress even in heaven is a theory vigorously maintained by Mr. Temple thus:

"The law of progress is a universal law. It operates as much in the lowest spheres of spirit as in the realm of matter, and is concerned both with the evolution of a planet and the growth of a human soul. I believe that the future state is a state of progression. Growth is essential to happiness. While we are subject to bodily limitations it may be that our growth is obstructed. There are sometimes physical infirmities which prevent us from reaching the heights we aspire to, but when we have left behind the mortal coil and when we have no laudable excuse for staying be hind.

"To me," said Goethe, 'the external existence of my soul is proved from my idea of activity. If I work incessantly until my death, nature is bound to give me another form of existence when the present can no longer sustain my spirit.' Open the door of heaven but a little way and we must surely see movement toward higher ends. The law of progress beginning on the life God has mapped out for the human soul. Infinite development is before us. Our longings and our affections have a meaning in the glorious promise fully unfold. There are conditions of glory which the human spirit can attain to only in the hereafter, joys and hopes and attainments which are the fruition of aspirations of being, and the more we observe, the more we think, the closer we live to the inexorable laws which govern the evolution of a true manhood, the more we are inclined to believe the poet that "Man's heart the Almighty to the future hath By secret but inviolable springs."

Whether Mr. Temple's reasoning is sound philosophy or only good theology, it is certainly comforting to the one who's heart sore from recent bereavement will be disposed to regard it either cynically or hypercritically.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

THE BATTLE FOR SUFFRAGE.

NEW JERSEY WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE ADVOCATES CONFER AND ELECT.

Mrs. Florence Howe Hall Elected President—Papers Read by Plainfield Conference That They Will Win.

The New Jersey Woman's Suffrage Association held its annual meeting yesterday afterday afternoon in Trinity church chapel, Elizabeth. Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, of Plainfield, presided, and there were thirty persons present. Dr. Mary D. Hussey, of East Orange, was secretary. The reports were all read. They included "Distribution of Literature," Mrs. D. W. Pond, Plainfield.

"Suffrage Work in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union," Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, of Plainfield.

During the past year only one county union was organized. This was at Plainfield. It was reported that twelve women had been elected school trustees by men's votes.

Mrs. J. D. DeWitt, President of the Essex County Suffrage Association, read a report that showed that many effective meetings had been held. Mrs. DeWitt was warmly applauded when she finished reading her report.

The New Jersey Association was reported as being the first one to put itself on record last year as demanding from the Legislature the restoration of full suffrage, which woman enjoyed prior to 1807.

Mrs. Philbrook, the woman lawyer, reported that through the efforts of the association four important laws had been enacted in favor of women by the last Legislature. One of these was giving women power to act as Commissioners of Deeds and another was giving women privilege to practice law in New Jersey. Another was holding married women's property liable for debts.

A resolution was passed giving the executive committee power to add to its number in order to prepare petitions to be presented to the next Legislature for the restoration of school suffrage to women and to take such other steps as may be necessary to accomplish this.

The points which the association will work for the ensuing year are to organize in every county in the State to gain school suffrage for women, and to study up so as to be able to vote intelligently when this is obtained.

Rev. Antoinette Brown Blackwell the first woman minister in New Jersey, was present.

The following were chosen: President, Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, of Plainfield; Vice President, Rev. Antoinette Brown Blackwell, of Elizabeth; Recording-Secretary, Mrs. Ireland; Corresponding-Secretary, Dr. Mary D. Hussey, East Orange; Treasurer, Mrs. S. B. Krom, of Plainfield; Auditor, Mrs. Susan W. Lippencott of Cinnamensen, Burlington county.

Those present expressed confidence in being able to win next year the battle for school suffrage.

THE COLES MEMORIAL UNVEILED.

Under the most favoring circumstances the handsome bronze Coles memorial was unveiled in Newark yesterday. The memorial is a group in bronze commemorating the purchase of New Jersey from the Indians by the whites. There are three figures in the group, two Indians and one white man. It was presented to the city by Dr. Johnathan Ackerman Coles in memory of his father, the late Abram Coles, who was a well-known writer of patriotic hymns.

Several thousand men and women and about 1000 school children gathered around the statute in the north end of Lincoln Park about noon. The children sang national hymns. Addresses were made by Mayor Lebkucher and others. The statue was unveiled by two children, Master Robert B. Bradley, grandson of the late Supreme Court Justice Bradley, and Miss Lucy Depue Ogden, granddaughter of Judge Depue of the Supreme Court of New Jersey.

To Institute a New Lodge.

Past Master Workman N. C. Magee, of Central Lodge, No. 48, A. O. U. W., will institute a similar lodge at Basking Ridge next Tuesday evening. The new lodge will start off with a charter list of forty-two. A stageload of members from Central and Columbia lodges of this city will be present, as will also the grand lodge officers of the State. A supper will be served in Hotel Washington after the business is transacted.

Orient. Degree Worked.

Seven candidates received the grand orient degree at the meeting of Oriental Council, K. of P., last evening. The committee reported on the costumes for the new work giving styles, prices, etc., and the council thought that $400 would secure the costumes. The matter will be brought up again next week and decided upon. The balance of the evening was devoted to routine business.

HIT THE MARSHAL ON THE NOSE.

Then He Gave Leg Bail, But Was Finally Captured.

For being drunk and disorderly in the borough last night a laboring man named Kiely was arrested by Marshals Doud and Lines. This morning Justice Crosley fined him $10, which he paid.

Patrick Boyle also visited the borough last night and imbibed too freely, which resulted in his being disorderly. Marshal Lines questioned him and he made an insulting reply, whereupon the officer attempted to arrest him. Boyle became infuriated and struck the Marshal on the nose. He then got away. Marshal Doud gave chase, caught him, and he again got away. Officer Frederickson arrested him as he was going through Park avenue and placed him in the lockup.

This morning he was taken to the Borough court on a complaint made by Marshal Lines. Lawyer George W. DeMeza appeared for Boyle and asked that the court be lienent with him. Borough Counsel Reed said he thought it was about time that the practice of this class of young men in coming to the borough and making a disturbance was stopped. He considered the charge a serious one, and if the man was let off with a light fine it would establish no precedent in the future.

Justice Crosley then imposed a fine of $20 and costs, which amounted to about $27.10 ill. The fine was paid and the man released.

CAUSE OF THE EXPLOSION.

Gas Leaked Into the Sewer From a Broken Main.

The source from which the gas that caused the explosions on Thanksgiving Day has been found after several days of incessant work by the employes of the Gas Company. The four-inch gas main in Richmond street was found broken near Watchung avenue and the work of repairing will begin at once.

Yesterday and today a more careful examination has been made of the sewers in the vicinity of the explosions. The manholes at the corner of Franklin place and La Grande avenue were cracked, as told in yesterday's issue of The Daily Press. But the investigation of Chief Engineer Gavett and his assistants showed that the lamphole on Putnam avenue, just above Richmond street, had been shattered and the pipe, for one or two lengths in each direction of it, was wrecked. The engineers entered the manholes, but there was no odor of gas in any of them, the way in which they had been ventilated having accomplished its object.

Litigants Come to Blows.

The case of Bird against Smalley, for nonpayment of rent, was tried in Somerville yesterday and resulted in a decision in favor of the plaintiff. While at the depot, preparatory to their return to this city, the two principals in the case became involved in an altercation concerning their previous records. Then blows were given and blows exchanged before the combatants could be separated by their friends.

SOCIETY PEOPLE QUARREL.

Ignoring a Bound Brook Young Man Leads to Words.

The season's festivities opened in Bound Brook with an assembly, says the New York World this morning. A number of the borough Four Hundred were absent. When the committee having the assembly in charge made up its lists of invitations it decided to omit some names which were on the old list. No reason was given, but the committee had that discretion.

Among the snubbed was Horatio Negus, son of William Negus. The three daughters received their cards, but when they found that their brother was left out they indignantly returned them. There was a loud protest from friends of the family and from others who had been turned down.

Edward French, who lives in Plainfield, is an intimate friend of the Negus family. He had subscribed to help the assembly along and intended to participate in it. When he heard of the way young Negus was treated he took it as a personal affront. Wednesday morning, when he boarded the train for New York at Plainfield, he saw Harry Baily, a member of the assembly committee. He immediately demanded his $2, and when it had been paid over there were some hot words. French said he considered that he had been insulted, and demanded an apology. He is a big fellow, and Baily is slight, but the latter replied that he had no reason to apologize.

French slapped Baily's face. Edward Powlson, a Bound Brook young man, came to Baily's rescue and struck French. A Plainfield friend of the latter stepped up, and there was a general scrimmage in the car, which continued until ther trainmen separated the combatants. It was feared that there would be trouble tonight.

SHOOTING FOR A PORKER.

Germans Have a Good Time at the Targets Yesterday.

The Independent Scheutzen Corps had an all day shoot on their grounds in Hyde's grove yesterday. The first on the programme was prize shooting for a pig by the rifle section. The four largest prizes were won as follows: Christopher Stoeckel, August Reuber, Leofold Kuntz and H. Rummel. The pig was killed, roasted and divided among the contestants. Next came the trap gun shooting at blue rocks. The scores were: George Richter 13, Henry Haurand 11, Fred Hui 6, J. A. Blatz 3. The sweepstakes resulted as follows: Ahrends, Rummel and "Ikie 3" 5 each; "Ikie 3" won on shooting off tie. J. A. Blatz 6, F. Hui 4.

The most sport was furnished by H. Wedemeyer and George Richter, who shot 13 times each and neither one could win the match, as the blue rocks were all used.

After the State Trophy.

A team from the Elizabeth Whist Club will come to Plainfield Tuesday evening to meet the Park Club in a match game of whist for the State trophy. Assembleman C. A. Reed will take the place of Samuel Townsend on the Park Club team. Mr. Townsend is in Europe.

YOUNG ENTERTAIN OLD.

Monroe Avenue Chapel Members Know How to Get Enjoyment.

The Junior Epworth Leaguers of the Monroe Avenue chapel, under the direction of Rev. Mr. O'Donnell, pastor, Miss Mattie Aldrich, Miss Leland and Miss Brower, gave their older friends an entertainment last night that was excellent in every particular. Rev. Mr. O'Donnell presided and after making a few remarks along the line of Junior work, offered prayer.

The Junior hymn "Who will follow Jesus ?" was heartily rendered by the members, after which the president of the league, Daisy Bronard, rendered a piano solo. A recitation, "The Transformed Pie," by Belle VanNest won applause as did also a piano solo by Edna Phillips. "The Tramp," a recitation by Lulu Randolph, received notable recognition. A pleasing number was a vocal solo, "Tom and Tim," by Sadie Elliott, which preceeded a recitation, "The Ship's Colors" by George Whitley. This was followed with a pretty and amusing exercise by Edna Scribner, Lillie Cockley, Florence Phillips, Carrie Brower, Sadie Elliott, and Nellie Thompson. Recitations by Minneola Dodds and Stella Anderson, and a piano solo by Etta Randolph were all heartily appreciated.

The last number on the programme was the "Gypsy Festival," a cantata. Its rendition was fine and very amusing. The following participated in the cantata: Queen, Daisy Bronard, Fortune teller, Lulu Randolph; Peddler, Aaron Brower; Gypsy chorus, May Brower, Ada Van Dorn, Sophie Saums, Bessie Walls, Nellie Whitley, Ruth Thompson, Sadie Elliott, Gracie Corwin, Jessie Burt, Lulu Hayes, Clara Scribner, Margie Phillips, Abie Irene Aldrich, Minnie Gurzelman and Lulu Beekman. Miss Mattie Aldrich was the accompanist. Coffee and cake was served in abundance by the Juniors to their friends which brought to a close a pleasant event.

Fashionable Thinking.

A parlor meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held at the residence of Mrs. Charles Potter, 427 West Seventh street, Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The meeting will be addressed by Miss Elizabeth N. Yeaton of Maine, on the subject "Fashionable Thinking." The committee in charge consists of Mrs. M. I. Cooley, chairman, Mrs. J. M. McNaughton, Mrs. J. Middledith, Mrs. D. E. Titsworth and Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson. A silver offering will be taken.

The Yale Dinner.

The annual dinner of the Yale Club will be held at the Casino on Thursday next. President Dwight will respond on behalf of the University; President Austin Scott, of Rutgers, on behalf of the State of New Jersey; Dr. B. Van D. Hedges for Princeton alumni, and Mr. Jose A. Machado, for those of Harvard.

The present indications are that about fifty persons will be present, including several from Westfield and Elizabeth. Any members of the club not yet supplied with tickets should apply at once to the chairman of the committee, Mr. Albert H. Atterbury, 214 East Ninth street.

EXPLOSION OF SEWER GAS.

CONSIDERABLE DAMAGE TO THE SEWERS YESTERDAY MORNING.

The Pipes Could Not Stand the Pressure of Gas Which Leaked Into Them and Blew Out a Number of Manholes.

Shortly after 10 o'clock yesterday morning, a very loud explosion of illuminating gas took place in the two man holes at the corner of Franklin place and LaGrande avenue, throwing the caps of them eighteen feet into the air. After an interval of a half a minute another explosion took place at the corner of LaGrande avenue and Richmond street in the second man hole there.

Then followed a series of explosions, decreasing in violence, through Putnam avenue into the Netherwood district, the last being at the corner of Woodland avenue and Ravine Road. Investigations resulted in finding that for several days past there has been considerable leakage of illuminating gas in the vicinity of Richmond street and Watchung avenue. The gas worked its way into the sewer pipes through the joints and drains and collected in the man holes for a considerable section of the sewer system between Watchung avenue and the limits of the sewer line at the high ground at Netherwood.

The violence of the explosion blew off the covers of the man and lamp holes along Putnam avenue, two of which were broken, although heavy and sound pieces of cast iron.

The network in the manhole at the corner of Franklin place and La Grande avenue was cracked in several places.

The immediate cause of the explosion was that the sewer connections have been taken into a number of houses, unknown to the engineers or sewer committee, so as to be ready to connect with the plumbing when the disposal beds are opened. These house connections have been closed with a plug and carefully cemented. In one of the houses in the vicinity of Franklin place and La Grande avenue, the gas leaked through the end of the pipe and became very offensive to those in the house. A plumber was called in Wednesday to look up the leak. Yesterday, finding the gas still as bad as ever, the man of the house turned off the gas at the meter, thinking the trouble was there, and then lighted a match in the vicinity of the sewer connection. The explosion followed immediately.

Concerning the extent of the damage done, the sewer engineers and Councilmen Frost and Ginna spent most of the day in examining the sewer system. Besides the damages already named, considerable dirt got into the pipes and at these points the ground will have to be excavated and the pipes 'cleaned out. Then the sewer will be flushed and tested. No pipes have been found damaged in the slightest degree.

The gas company has been hard at work trying to find the leak and are still at work, but the men find the gas so strong as to sicken them. When a Daily Press reporter investigated last evening he found the odor of gas very strong at Richmond street and Watchung avenue. The sewers will be kept thoroughly ventilated until the leak is found.

"It is well to note," said Councilman Frost last evening to a Daily Press reporter, "that another source of like trouble is at the corner of Central avenue and Front street where gas has been accumulating for several days and was so offensive Wednesday that a workman was unable to go into the manhole. The public should be cautioned against bringing the sewer connection into the houses. It is better to end the pipe within four feet of the house."

It is hardly necessary to add that anyone fooling with lighted matches about the opening of a manhole may expect to be carried home in pieces.

In the house of William Callahan, of Woodland avenue, the plug in the house connection blew out and caused considerable excitement. Only an hour before the explosion a man had been at work in the manhole at the corner of Richmond street and LaGrande avenue. There were several narrow escapes of carriages which had just passed over the manholes.

Regarding any future trouble Councilman Frost said:

"There is no occasion for alarm as the question of ventilation has been well attended to, and when the system is complete it will be thoroughly ventilated through the air shafts outside of every house.

Her Fourteenth Birthday.

A very enjoyable birthday party was given last evening in honor of the fourteenth birthday of Miss Lizzie Sheldon, of West Second street. About twenty-five were present. The evening passed very pleasantly with dancing and games, while refreshments were served during the evening. The gathering broke up at about one o'clock. Prof. Hewitt furnished the music.

LOCAL KICKERS VICTORIOUS.

Y. M. C. A. ELEVEN BEAT A NEW YORK TEAM 28 TO 0.

The Superior Team Work of the Plainfield Boys Won Them the Game in an Easy Manner—The Line Up.

It was not the most enjoyable Thanksgiving Day possible for the football players of the Emory Athletic Club, of Harlem, yesterday. They missed their Thanksgiving dinner to come out to play, then they missed the train and finally, when they did come, it was only to be crushingly defeated by the Plainfield Y. M. C. A. eleven by a score of 28 to 0. The Harlem boys arrived on the field at 3:45, and the two elevens lined up immediately as follows:

Plainfield Y. M. C. A.		Emory A. C.
Y. F. Green	left end	Atkinson
F. W. Bell	left tackle	Miller
R. A. McGee	left guard	Sullivan
H. Band	centre	Lindeman
Edward Brown	right guard	McCarthy
Gus Schumaker	right tackle	Rubenstein
Roger Erickson	right end	Lovejoy
L. E. Waring	quarter back	Elam
T. U. Smith	left half back	Daly
F. H. Freeman	right half back	Fama
G. E. Cathcart	full back	O'Neill

Charles Murray, of Yale, made an excellent referee. F. W. Dosche, of the Emory Athletic Club, was the umpire. The linesmen were Auguste Saltzman, Jr., of Lehigh, and James Murray.

Plainfield chose the northern goal and the Harlem boys took the ball. The ball was kicked and rushed 15 yards.

Schoonmaker went through tackle for six yards. Several other short rushes followed and then Freeman started around the left end and cracked in the sixty yards to the goal, scoring a touchdown inside of three minutes of play. The splendid interference of the Y. M. C. A. backs and ends took him around and when he was once ahead he left both teams far in the rear for it takes a fleet footed man to catch him on the open. Soon after the ball was worked down within thirty yards and Freeman again ran around the left end for a touchdown. Smith kicked both goals without trouble. A third touchdown was made by Smith after running fifteen yards through the line. He kicked the goal. Freeman then dropped out and Louis Darling took his place. The first half ended with the score 18 to 0. The playing of all the Y.M.C.A. men was excellent. Waring put up a remarkable game and quarterbacked splendidly, materially breaking through the line and guarding the runner. Smith, Freeman and Cathcart made a splendid trio. Green played his usual excellent game and downed the runner many times far behind the line. Erickson's tackling was also very good. In the second half some of the other men were given a chance to play and Clarence Peck took Green's place. Chas. Dupee took Schoonmaker's place and finally E. L. Cathcart took Cathcart's place. But before Cathcart left, he ran around left end and made another touchdown. Smith kicked the goal. Toward the close of the game Walz was pushed through the line for fifteen yards to the centre of the field and then handed the ball to Smith who ran to the goal and made a touchdown. He missed the goal.

The Harlem boys were lighter than the home team, and although there was some brilliant individual playing, the play was noticeably absent. Twenty minute halves were played. Had they wished it, the Y. M. C. A. team might have scored fifty points; the final score was 28 to 0.

Gathering at the Fireside.

A reunion and Thanksgiving dinner of the Hart family was held yesterday afternoon and evening at the home of the Misses Hart, 432 Watchung avenue. T. S. Burr was unanimously selected as master of ceremonies and a programme, including recitations, vocal and instrumental music, dancing, a cake walk, and several amusing games, were indulged in and the evening was one full of enjoyment to all.

Cigars Instead of Turkey.

Dr. Nelson, of New Market, was initiated in the junior and workmen's degrees at the meeting of Central Lodge, No. 48, A. O. U. W., last evening. Owing to a misunderstanding between Past Master Workmen Brokaw and Randolph the turkey was not presentable and cigars were enjoyed instead.

Better Service.

The Norfolk and Western train, popularly known as the Shenandoah Limited, with sleepers to New Orleans and Memphis, which has been leaving Washington at 11:20 p. m., will, commencing Sunday, December 1st, leave Washington at 9:10 p. m. Connection from New York Royal Blue Line train leaving New York at 3:30 p. m.

Leave the Chinaman Alone.

The Chinamen who run the laundry on West Front street, near Madison avenue, have been complaining a great deal of late about a crowd of boys who persist in annoying them. The matter has been placed in the hands of the police.

TABLEAUX AND PANTOMIME.

Successful Entertainment Given in Grace M. E. Church.

The entertainment given in Grace M. E. church, last evening was very largely attended and a complete success. A CRIPPLE FOR LIFE.

A Thirteen-Year-Old Bound Brook Boy Loses a Leg.

An exceedingly sad accident occurred at Bound Brook yesterday afternoon between 4 and five o'clock when Willie Anderson, aged thirteen years, had his left leg frightfully crushed while trying to ride on a coal train.

The boy was picked up and sent to Muhlenberg hospital by Dr. Fisher, of Bound Brook, where it was found necessary by Dr. Probasco to amputate the leg at the knee. He was assisted by Drs. Endicott and Long.

Several other doctors were present and witnessed the operation.

Addressing Prisoners.

Rev. T. Logan Murphy led the services at the Union county jail at Elizabeth yesterday. T. Marion McAllister, of Elizabeth, who died a short time ago, has led the services there for the last fifteen years, and it was by the request of his wife that Rev. Mr. Murphy took charge of the services. At the conclusion of the services yesterday the prisoners were given a Thanksgiving dinner.

Broke Three Ribs.

Jacob Yakes, of Union Village, was visited by a tramp a few days ago who made a demand that he be allowed to sleep in his barn. Mr. Yakes refused and the tramp became insolent. This somewhat aggravated the Union Village agriculturist and he essayed to eject the wanderer from his premises. During the process of the ejectment proceedings Mr. Yakes fell from a small foot bridge and broke three of his ribs. He is now confined to his home while the tramp moves on in an unknown section of the country.

Amateur Theatricals.

The Dramatic Association of the Plainfield Catholic Club is to put a new comedy drama on the stage. It is a three act play entitled "Confusion" and includes a twelve characters. It will be given at Music Hall about the middle of December.

Chase the Shades.

The class of '96, of the North Plainfield Public School held a class meeting Friday afternoon and decided on the shades of their class colors, orange and white. The class pins are expected Monday.

A DEADWOOD STORY.

IT IS TOLD BY DAN COSTELLO, THE OLD TIME CIRCUS CLOWN.

The Hero of This Tale Was California Joe, a Picturesque Character—How the Minister's Death Was Avenged—An Indian Head in the Belle o' Union.

There was a little gray haired old man sitting in the corridor of the Tifft House the other day who seemed to be taking a lively interest in what was going on around him. Nobody knew him, and he sat there alone and unpetted, for he was a complete stranger in the city. He was from Dakota, and it had been a quarter of a century since he had made his home in the east. Years ago he had been a man *of wealth and had owned interests in Da*kota mines worth many thousands of dollars, but he now had very little of that fortune left, and his name was no longer known among the business men of the state where he had lived. He was Dan Costello, the once famous clown, who for several years was in partnership with P. T. Barnum in the show business.

Costello is the boniface of one of the old pioneer days, when the town was filled with lawless characters, cowboys, Indian fighters and miners, when a dollar would be had left Barnum. Will Bill and a score of other characters whose names have since been prominent in 10 cent blood and thunder literature, were his guests. Costello knew them all. Sometimes he played poker with them in the Bella o' Union, the old gambling place where they gathered together on a night or when a quorum of them were killed. "Going down to the Bella o' Union to see somebody get shot" was quite a fashionable phrase with Deadwood citizens in those days.

One of these lawless men whom Costello knew was California Joe, and it was about this man that the clown told the New press reporter an interesting story, which although it happened 15 years ago, had never crept into print. Here it is:

"Well," said Costello testily, as it doesn't make much difference how we mortals die, and it didn't matter much to California Joe, except that he would have said he would rather like to quit the world with his boots on. And he did. To begin with, there's an Indian's head, with some of the skin and hair left on it, hanging in the Smithsonian Institute in Washington. I don't suppose any of the people at the institution know that the Indian came to be killed, but it happened in a peculiar way. In Deadwood, when I was there, there was a minister hanging about the town and holding out fine inducements to the miners. What was his name or to what denomination he belonged I never knew, and I don't suppose there were many who did, but that doesn't matter much as far as the story is concerned. One day this minister started out on horseback to ride over to Butte mountain. He took the trail around through the hills and then across the plains. It was a very dangerous one, for there were many good places for the Indians, when they were on the warpath, to lay their traps and more than a few of the whites had been waylaid and killed on it. Butte mountain overlooked the plains, and from its top could be seen for miles from its summit and watch for travelers. The minister rode slowly through the hills, with his head hanging down in saddle and his Bible bulging out from his coat pocket, and he did not see so much as a sign of an Indian. It was not until he was at the foot of the mountain and his horse over the long, straight stretch of road that lay before him that he heard a war whoop, and suddenly half a dozen Indians sprang from their hiding place. The minister had fighting blood in his veins and he began to shoot right away. He got a few balls into the Indians and succeeded in killing one of the Indians. But the Indians got the best of him, and his body was found riddled with bullets.

"It happened that California Joe and his partner were on their way from Crook City to Deadwood that day, and it was their misfortune to meet the same band of Indians on the mountain. The two scouts, California Joe's partner was killed almost as soon as the firing began, and at the same time California Joe was shot in the head, fell to the ground and fired shot after shot in quick succession. Two more of the Indians were killed, and then the rest, taking fright from Joe's quick marksmanship, hurried away. Joe then bent over one of the Indians lying in the road. The Indian was dying, and Joe finished the job by cutting off his head. Then he mounted his horse, took the head with him and rode full speed for the town. He rode to through the streets in fast and furious gallop, holding the Indian's head, the blood from which had spattered his saddle, by the hair. The lights were just being lighted in the Bella o' Union, and everybody but the gambling tables to hear Joe's story.

"That Indian's head was hung on the wall in Bella o' Union, and it was there for a good many years. It was finally thrown it out on a garbage pile. It lay there all one summer. After the Deadwood fire somebody found it. It is one of the few relics found it lying out in the yard, and *in some way or other it got to the Smith*sonian institute."

"As I said before, California Joe died with his boots on. It was only a little while after his adventure that Deadwood a host he had killed by falling out with a man near Red Cloud agency. He called him a liar, or something of that sort, and the fellow took offense. He hung around trying to get him down, and finally he got his hold, ing the Indian's head, the blood from which had spattered his saddle, by the hair. The fight

Fanwood politicians should dwell in harmony.

An Elizabeth young lady has been emulating Rip Van Winkle by sleeping fifty-five hours.

King Alcohol is the only potentate who is said to be on really friendly terms with the Sultan.

The barbers begin to take on a cheerful countenance. The football season is drawing to a close.

Governor-elect Griggs's inauguration will be accompanied by a big parade of Republican clubs.

Major Carl Lentz, of Newark, is said to be after Allan L. McDermott's place as Clerk of the Chancery Court.

Foster Voorhees seems doomed to retire from public office with a record of being a candidate for something which someone else got.

Nowadays it isn't the man who stands on the street corner and proclaims his preference for a candidate that tells which way the votes are going.

It is noticeable, with one exception, that Editor Runyon has spoken favorably only of the Republican candidates against whom there was no opposition.

Major J. K. Pangborn, well known throughout New Jersey, has retired from the editorship of the Jersey City Journal. He is succeeded by William Walter Phelps.

Richard Croker makes the suggestion that it would be a good idea to hold Democratic primaries all day, thus allowing the members of the party plenty of opportunity to participate.

The bloody shirt ought to be sufficiently tattered by this time to be cast into the ragbag of politics. Some editors seem to take delight, however, in flaunting it around to the disgust of ordinarily sensible people.

Jersey is a great State. Her lightning is known the world over, her mud of a kind peculiar to itself, her citizens celebrated for their influence and intelligence, and now she bids fair to develop into a veritable gold mine. Great is Jersey and the hills of Peapack.

The Sunday closing movement in New York affords an example of where New York is compared to Plainfield and not Plainfield to New York. Mr. Roosevelt ought to visit Plainfield and get a few points on Sunday observance.

Now that New Jersey is to have the real yellow metal from the bowels of her own Watchung mountains wouldn't it be policy for E. J. White head, the Populist talker for The Westfield Standard, to tone down his sentiments against the gold standard. He is liable to offend local pride.

Cape May Point will again resume its position as a township. Judge Howard Carrow entered a judgment in the case of the borough under the decision of Chief Justice Beasley that the law under which it was organized was unconstitutional. The law of 1891 was declared unconstitutional a year ago in the case of Ridgefield Park. Under this decision any borough formed under the law of 1891 could be dissolved if contested.

The Newark News says that precisely the same qualities that make women the best teachers of children fit them to vote upon the government of the schools. School suffrage ought to be restored to them in New Jersey, and it ought to be extended, too. The Suffrage Association, far from realization as may be its aim of securing the general privilege of the ballot, seeks an object that should be well within reach when it advises systematic effort to regain the power that was exercised so satisfactorily, and that was growing in appreciation and good results when taken away by the Court.

New York courts have been having sensational trials galore for the past few weeks. Following close upon the Hannigan murder trial, in which the son's life was saved by the jury and the father's sacrificed by the worry and strain of the ordeal of the trial, comes the remarkable confession of perjury on the part of Barbara Aub against W. L. S. Langerman. Langerman seemed doomed to spend the greater portion of his remaining life behind prison bars, but now this fate stares his feminine accuser in the face. This case is an example of what an effect a pretty face has on a jury.

Now let us settle down to business.

It is a crushing defeat for Editor Runyon.

It was the votes that counted; not the affidavits.

Editor Runyon's boycott didn't amount to much.

Honest now, did you read the President's message through?

No Democrat will grace the council chamber after January first.

Plainfield will continue to be the best governed city in New Jersey.

George DeMeza will be the youngest City Judge Plainfield has ever had.

Editor Runyon and the three D's—Dictator, Disgruntled and Defeated.

The people were not as dissatisfied as some dissatisfied people thought they were.

Either make the cider joints pay a license or close them up. Under no circumstances should they be allowed to flourish on Sunday.

The fact that the Republicans were confronted with a bolting and sulking editor makes their victory all the more gratifying to them.

The Supreme Court has decided that the borough act of 1891 is unconstitutional. Boroughs formed under that act are wiped out therefore, their organization being invalidated. This is a highly important decision, although lawyers who have given the case some study say that the decision affects only the boroughs of Asbury Park, Bradley Beach, Spring Lake, Point Pleasant and a few others along the coast. It does not, they also say, affect the boroughs of Roselle, Fanwood and others of Union county, since these were formed under the provisions of the law of 1878 and not under those of the law of 1891. At the same time it is not yet known just how far the principle laid down by the court with reference to the law of 1891 affects all the other borough acts on the statute book, and in consequence those banks and capitalists that have loaned money to boroughs for public improvements are very anxious to know whether their security is as good now as it was prior to this decision.—Elizabeth Journal.

PRESENTATION TO THE LIBRARY.

Valuable Acquisition of Job Male's Naturalization Papers.

The regular meeting of the Board of Directors of the Public Library was held at the Library last night and was called to order by the President. There were present Directors A. M. W. Tyler, A. C. Baldwin, J. Evarts Tracy, Wm. H. Larrabee, J. B. Dumont, J. W. Yates and Wm. M. Stillman.

The minutes of the meeting of October 3d, were read and approved.

On motion, Miss Mary K. Jobs was engaged as Assistant-Librarian in place of Miss Davie, resigned, at the same salary, the employment to date from November 1, 1895, at which time she began her service.

A communication was received from Messrs. J. C. Pope & Co., donating to the Library the framed letter of naturalization issued to the late Job Male, in 1834. On motion the communication was ordered received and placed on file and the secretary requested to extend the the thanks of the Board for the gift.

The library committee reported progress in the matter of purchasing books, and that they had authorized the employment of extra assistance to the librarian for three days in each week at the rate of fifty cents each day, believing it to be necessary and proper expense. On motion the action of the committee was approved and their report ordered received.

It was moved and carried that the communication of Miss Adams and the subject matter of binding referred to in same be referred to the library committee with authority to order the binding done if in their judgment they think best.

SCHOOL CALENDAR FIXED.

BOARD OF EDUCATION ARRANGE THE TERMS FOR THE YEAR.

One Resignation Received, One Salary Increased, a Few Contracts Made and Several Minor Matters Looked After.

The regular December meeting of the Board of Education was held at the High School building last Monday. Messrs. Probasco, Lovell, Lounsbury and Finch were present when the meeting was called to order. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved. Secretary Finch then read a number of approved bills, which on vote of the board, were ordered paid. The interest amounting to $700 on the school bonds was also ordered paid. The report of Tax Collector Johnson showed that $4,203.30 in school taxes had been collected, which with the interest, amounted to $4,621.02.

Superintendent Maxson brought up the subject of the Christmas vacation and recommended that school close on Friday, December 20th, and open on Thursday, January 2d. Dr. Probasco wanted the opening to be Monday January 6th, so as to allow those who wished to be away New Year's Day opportunity to do so. Mr. Lounsbury moved that Superintendent Maxson's recommendation be adopted, which motion was unanimously carried. Dr. Jenkins then arrived.

The report of the committee on building and repairs was made by Mr. Lounsbury.

He reported that a contract had been made with Fernando Brown to carry away the ashes once a week from all the schools, except the Irving, for $80. Another contract had also been made with A. D. Phillips to put in the electric fixtures in the Washington building for $80.90. He suggested that as Janitor Harris of the Washington School had performed his duties satisfactorily, his salary be raised from $40 to $50 a month. The report was accepted and his suggestion ordered carried out. The question of connecting the Wadsworth School with the sewer was laid on the table.

Superintendent Maxson then gave his suggestions regarding the school calendar for 1896 which, on motion of Mrs. Lounsbury, were adopted. They were as follows: Winter term to close March 28th; spring term to begin April 5th; spring term to close, June 26th; fall term to begin, September 7th.

The committee on teachers, through Mr. Lovell, reported the resignation of Miss Anna Tiekner, sixth grade, Franklin School, and recommended its acceptance and the appointment of Miss Jennie Davis to take the position. The report, including all its recommendations, was accepted.

Mr. Lounsbury's motion, that the question of the purchasing of a safe be taken from the table, was carried and the question was again discussed. Dr. Jenkins suggested in a very good second hand safe now at Thicksun's coal yard. Messrs. Finch and Lovell expressed themselves as in favor of a safe in preference to a vault. Dr. Jenkins had no opinion to offer. Mr. Lovell moved that the building committee be authorized to purchase a safe for the High School building, and the motion was carried.

Mr Lounsbury then moved that the consideration of the letter-file be taken from the table. It was carried. The letter-file cost $30 and the base $3 more.

As the base was not necessary for the use of the file, Mr. Finch and Dr. Jenkins did not favor it. Dr. Probasco and Mr. Lounsbury thought it should be purchased. Mr. Lovell thought that it would be better in the long run and moved that the question be left to the discretion of the building committee. His motion was carried.

Captain George E. Edwards, who has been instructing the High School Cadet Company in military tactics, addressed the board on the subject of securing arms for the cadet company and read several letters from Quartermaster-General Donnelly regarding them. The letters stated that the only arms available were Springfield rifle muskets, muzzle-loading, 58 calibre. It would be necessary for the principal of the school to make application for the loan of arms and for him to furnish a bond for the amount of $850 for forty arms and accoutrements and five swords that Captain Edwards had stated were the correct number needed. They need not be insured for more than $200 to be carried by the High School.

Dr. Probasco thought that it was a matter for the Principal, not the Board, to look after, but Captain Edwards said that it was necessary for the Board to make some arrangement for the storage of the arms.

Mr. Finch moved that a committee of three, including the President of the Board, be appointed to settle the matter.

Dr. Probasco believed that such a matter should be put before a committee of the whole. The motion, however, was seconded and carried. The other two members of the committee, appointed by Dr. Probasco, were Mr. Lounsbury and Dr. Jenkins.

MANY MATTERS ACTED UPON.

CITY FATHERS TRANSACT LOTS OF LITTLE BUSINESS.

A Letter From Expert Allan Hazen Stating That the Sewage Beds Are Ready—Honan & Sons Work Finished.

In the absence of President See at last Monday's City Council meeting, Clerk MacMurray called the meeting to order and on motion of Mr. Fisk, Mr. Erickson was chosen to fill the vacancy.

The usual batch of claims preceded the reading of the minutes in the order of business, after which the minutes of the last regular and adjourned meetings were read and approved.

A communication was received from Contractor John Siddall asking for an extension of time till May 1st, 1896, in completing his work of making house connections. The time was granted, on recommendation of the Sewer Committee.

A bill of M. Honan & Son's for $79.16 for certain pipe used on Watchung avenue was referred to Consulting Engineer Farquar for settlement.

J. A. Karet made application to the Council for an auctioneer's license.

The matter was referred to the license committee.

Rev. E. S. Gibson, pastor of the Mt. Olive Baptist church, and others petitioned Council for a crosswalk on West Third street, corner of Liberty street. It was referred to the committee on streets with power.

The Treasurer's and Collector's reports were received and referred to the financial committee, and later ordered filed.

Resolutions were offered by Mr. Dumont that $2,000 and $3,000 be drawn and charged to the general and first funds respectively to meet the city bills, also that $16,000 and $4,000 be drawn for sewer work. The resolutions were adopted.

Mr. Moore offered a resolution that an electric light be placed on West Front street between Girard avenue and Waynewood place and one on West End avenue. The resolution was adopted.

Communications were read from Engineer A. J. Gavett which stated that the work of Contractors M. Honan & Sons and J. Marsden was completed and asked that the same be accepted. The matter was concurred in by the sewer committee and the same was accepted.

Mr. Frost then stated that the fourth of the sewage beds was nearing completion and would be ready in a short time, and as soon as practicable they would be opened for use. To prove that they would be no difficulty experienced in using the beds at this time Mr. Frost submitted a letter from Expert Allan Hazen on the subject, which shows in an official way that the same will be all right. The letter is as follows:

In reply to yours of the 24th, I have considered carefully the question of declaring your sewage beds ready for connections December 15th, or thereabouts, and applying the small amount of sewage which would probably result from this action to a part of your sewage disposal system to be ready at that time. I have had occasion to observe repeatedly the action of experimental filters at Lawrence put in operation for the first time at this season of the year, and I am of the opinion that after your screening tank, etc. and at least two beds are ready for use, you will be able to take care of all the sewage that you will receive during the winter, securing adequate purification without injury to the beds and without the production of a nuisance.

The small danger is that the small amount of sewage will freeze, but owing to the depth of your outfall sewer the sewage will be comparatively warm and not inclined to freeze and every it does the quantity will be small and will probably not be detected by odor or smell and when it thaws with warmer weather the land will be in condition to absorb and purify it promptly.

All bills were reported correct and warrants ordered drawn for the same, after which Mr. Fisk made a motion that when Council adjourn it be to meet Thursday evening, December 5th. The motion prevailed and Council adjourned.

Art in Advertising.

A novel entertainment will be given in Y. M. C. A. Hall on Tuesday evening, December 10th, entitled "Art in Advertising." There will be an exhibition of over sixty fine stereopticon views with a verbal description of each. In the afternoon from three to six o'clock there will be an exhibition of American and foreign bills and posters.

MISS LENA SAUER, TAKEN SUDDENLY ILL, DIES IN THE HOSPITAL.

Her Ailment Was Found to Be an Unusual One, Being an Ulcer of the Stomach—She Was a Favorite Among Acquaintances.

Miss Lena Sauer, a domestic in the home Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Leader, corner Duer street and Mercer avenue, died in Muhlenberg Hospital Sunday morning at four o'clock, after being in the hospital only a few hours. She was attacked with excruciating pains in her stomach Thanksgiving day while preparing the dinner about six o'clock. Mrs. Leader and her sister, Miss McKee, of Brooklyn, who fortunately was present, prevailed upon Lena to go to her room and they labored with her from that time all night, under the direction of Dr. D. C. Adams, who was summoned as soon as she went to her room.

He did everything known to his profession, to alleviate her sufferings, which were so terrible that on Saturday he was forced to give hyperdermic injections to relieve her pains. Towards evening he found her condition so alarming that he ordered her removal to the hospital, inasmuch as he foresaw that a surgical operation was necessary to save her life. Mrs. Leader and sister, assisted by kind neighbors, properly prepared her for the journey, thoroughly wrapping her in quilts and making her perfectly comfortable.

About ten o'clock she was taken in the ambulance to the hospital, where she died about two o'clock in the morning. No operation was performed as it was seen she was near her end.

She was one of two orphan girls, both living in Plainfield. Her sister Tillie living with Mr. and Mrs. Robinson Pound on East Second street. Mr. and Mrs. Leader are greatly crushed over the death of Lena, as they had learned to love her for her many good qualities. They could not have done more for their own daughter than they did for her during her illness. Lena was a member of Mr. Moon's Sunday school class at the Warren chapel, and her funeral will be held from Warren chapel, on Tuesday afternoon, December 3d.

Mrs. Robinson Pound insisted that the remains be removed from the hospital to her home where her sister lives, and they were taken there last evening.

An autopsy was held on her body at the hospital yesterday afternoon by the hospital staff, when it was found that death ensued from a perforated ulcer of the stomach, allowing the contents of the stomach to escape and causing peritonitis. This is an unusual ailment. Dr. Adams was present at the autopsy by courtesy of the hospital staff.

Another illustration of the benefits of life insurance is evidenced in Lena's case. She took out a ten-cent a-week policy in the Prudential Company when she was eighteen years old, which will pay $200 insurance, with which a lot has been purchased for the two orphans at Hillside, pay the funeral expenses of Lena and leave a small balance for her sister.

GERMAN CHURCH ENTERTAINMENT.

A Large Attendance and a Delightful Programme Make It Successful.

The Sunday-School room in the German Reformed church was packed last evening with those who came to attend the entertainment which was given there under the auspices of the Ladies Aid Society. The programme was a very enjoyable one and was as follows: Instrumental quartette, Overture from "Eulenberg," P. Ludwig Conde, Charles G. Davis, Clarence Mills, and William MacKillop. Mr. Menzeli, accompanist, encore, "Weigeelied" by Schubert; German recitation, Mrs. France; vocal solo, Miss Agnes Ecke; English recitation, Miss Lillian Haberle; German baritone solo, Charles Dresselt; German comic song, Otto Keller; English dialogue, "A Bated at Last," Mrs. Fred Bach, A. Wolfe, Fred Bach, and Theodore Martin; English recitation, Miss Annie Doerringer; vocal solo, Miss Bertha Hoffman; English recitation, Miss Lillian Haberle; vocal solo, Miss Agnes Ecke; instrumental quartette, "Choral" of Sebastian Bach, encore, "Chorus der Euryanthe" by Weber, Conde and pupils; German dialogue, "Nechtigel Niehte," August Wolfe, Miss Ida Feller, P. Postler, Otto Keller; instrumental quartette, "Prayer on Freischutz," by Weber, encore "Minuet" from E flat symphony by Mozart, Conde and pupils. The accompanists were Miss Lillian Zeisz and Mrs. Hauser.

The entertainment was arranged by the following committee: Mrs. Menteneech, Mrs. Philip Bach and Mrs. Doerringer, which deserves great credit for the excellent one they provided. August Wolff had charge of the programme.

PRETTY

AND ATTRACTIVE WOMEN.

Their Good Looks Not a Secret.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

No matter to what country she belongs, or whether she be black or white, as a woman she desires to look well.

Women know the influence of beauty on men; men rarely admire a beautiful invalid, but they do admire a woman in whom is blended good features and perfect health.

There is no secret about a woman's beauty; it all lies in the care she devotes to herself, to removing from her system all poisonous impurities, and keeping at bay those fearful female diseases.

The flashing eye, elastic step, and brilliant complexion are never companions of a womb trouble; only the distressed expression and aches, pains, blues, faintness, dizziness, bearing-down feeling, etc., keep it company.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound removes female troubles promptly, and cleanses, invigorates, and consequently beautifies, the form of woman. Women, the world over, pay homage to it, and praise its discoverer. Your druggist sells more of it than all other female medicines.

Second of Mrs. Miller's At Homes.

The second of Mrs. Isaac L. Miller's delightful at homes was held Saturday afternoon and was attended by a large number of her friends. She and her daughter were assisted in receiving by Mrs. J. Evarts Tracy, Mrs. George H. Goddard, Miss Agnes Opdyke, Miss Florence Waring, Miss Mary Whiton, and Miss Martha Tracy. The parlors were artistically decorated with chrysanthemums and roses while on the table, pink roses and smilax formed the principal decorations.

Important Facts.

If you have dull and heavy pain across forehead and about the eyes; if the nostrils are frequently stopped up and followed by a disagreeable discharge; if soreness in the nose and bleeding from the nostrils is often experienced; if you are very sensitive to cold in the head accompanied with headache; then you may be sure you have catarrh, and should immediately resort to Ely's Cream Balm for a cure. The remedy will give instant relief.

WILL IT REMAIN A BOROUGH?

FANWOOD PEOPLE EXERCISED OVER THE SUPREME COURT DECISION.

It is Thought That the Opponents of the Borough Government Will Contest Its Legality in the Courts.

In connection with the recent adverse decision rendered by the Supreme Court in regard to boroughs formed under an act of the legislature of 1891, the following may be interesting as regards the borough of Fanwood:

The borough of Fanwood was formed under the law of 1891 by ten citizens of Fanwood, an election was held and the borough was carried. Application was made to Judge McCormick and he with difficulty found three freeholders in the proposed borough. However, W. R. Stanbery as clerk, Sheriff Kyte and W. L. Force as inspectors were appointed. W. R. Stanbery was authorized by the court to make arrangements to carry on a legal election. He thereupon proceeded to get the paraphernalia ready so as to have the election held at the proper time and in the proper place. It was decided by a majority of the people that a borough should be instituted. After the election was held it was a matter to be decided who was responsible for the debts incurred before the decision was arrived at as to whether it was or was not to be a borough. Mr. Stanbery, as clerk of the court, applied to Judge McCormick for authority. He was referred to Nicholas English, the attorney for the Committee of Ten, and at a meeting of this committee stated to them that Mr. English had told Mr. Force and himself that he had this same position as the clerk of a township, and that he had the latter behind him as a guarantee, and that he, Mr. Stanbery, should go to the Committee of Ten and get a guarantee from them that all bills contracted by him should be paid. This was done by Mr. Stanbery, accompanied by Mr. Force, and those present said that they would guarantee that such bills should be paid. The election was held and the borough carried. Mr. Stanbery as clerk first offered the bills to the Committee of Ten, and they advised that the same should be presented to the Council, composed of Thomas Young, Mayor, and Councilmen George Kyte, Mr. Beeken, Mr. McGowan, Mr. Christianson, and Harry Hall as clerk. This was done and they offered a motion which was carried, that all bills prior to October 3d, which was the time that Mr. Stanbery, as clerk of the court, delivered the returns of October 1st to the county clerk at Elizabeth, would not be paid by the borough. Mr. Stanbery then presented the bills to the Committee of Ten and they acted upon the same.

A Daily Press reporter had a great deal of trouble in ascertaining the facts of the case. Mr. Stanbery was merely willing to show the action taken in the matter, was as follows, signed by L. G. Ellis as secretary of the Committee of Ten:

"That they saw no reason why they should pay Messrs. Kyte and Force as inspectors and Mr. Stanbery as clerk of the court, but other bills presented by Mr. Stanbery as clerk of the court were considered as favorable and would be paid."

Later on a communication was received by Mr. Stanbery from Mr. Ellis stating that the committee of the whole had decided that they saw no reason why they should pay Mr. Stanbery, Sheriff Kyte and Mr. Force as an election board. However, they admitted that they had paid all other bills contracted by Mr. Stanbery as clerk of the court.

Mr. Stanbery was interviewed in the matter and stated that neither he nor Mr. Kyte are very much in need of $5 25 for services according to law, but are merely waiting to see whether the legality of the borough will be contested. Mr. Stanbery seems to be surprised that there should be so much difficulty in getting $15.75 for the services of three men.

The outcome of the whole matter is being watched with no little interest.

The Ridgefield Park case was taken to the Supreme Court in mandamus proceedings and was argued before Judges Dixon, Reed and Garrison, who decided that the power of deciding the questions of public policy which relate to the organization and extent of municipal corporations is one belonging, under the Constitution, to the legislative department of the Government, and could not be exercised by any person or persons belonging to or constituting either the executive or the judicial department. It would thus seem that the Court had long ago held that the power of incorporating municipalties was confined strictly to the legislative department, and could not be delegated.

"FIT FOR A KING."

The Royal Blue Line, a Railroad That Eclipses Regality Itself.

"A royal train, believe me," Shakespeare makes one of his characters exclaim in King Henry VIII. And to one who looks for the first time upon the sumptuous glories of a Royal Blue Line train the idea of regality must instinctively suggest itself. Indeed, it may well be questioned whether any of the potentates of the Old World enjoy such superb facilities of travel as those which are at the service of the uncrowned kings of unmonarchial America, whose citizen is a sovereign.

As an example of the pitch of perfection to which the science of transportation has attained in this country, take the famous route of travel between New York, Philadelphia and Washington, known as the Royal Blue Line. It has been termed the highest type of the de luxe railroad. But it is more—it reaches a decade or two into the possibilities of the next century, a prophecy, so to speak, turned into an actuality, and a courier that moves far in advance of the main body of railway progress.

To particularize, the Royal Blue Line connects Philadelphia with New York and New England to the eastward, and with Baltimore and Washington to the southward, with connections reaching Florida, New Orleans, and all the great empire of the Southwest. It is composed of portions of the Central R. R. of New Jersey, the Philadelphia & Reading and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroads. As the Reading Railroad was the first to establish two-hour trains between New York and Philadelphia, so was this "triple alliance" the pioneer in giving the public five hour trains between the Metropolis and the National Capitol. The trains are notable for their unique construction, and celebrated for their sumptuous elegance and comfort. The fast time made on the Royal Blue Line is a matter of wide notoriety, and it continues to hold the only properly authentic record for the highest speed ever attained by any railway train in the world.

The trains from Philadelphia to New York and to Washington comprise a schedule ample in extent and admirably adjusted as to time of departure, most of them connecting closely with trains coming in over the various lines of the Reading System from the eastern and central portions of Pennsylvania. All of these connections are made beneath the roof of the magnificent Reading Terminal, the most beautiful, as well as one of the most extensive railway stations in the world. For the further convenience of travelers, through tickets and baggage checks to all important points reached by or via the Royal Blue Line are supplied at most of the Reading Railroad stations throughout Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

UNCLE SAM'S MEN CHANGE ABOUT.

Transfer of Carriers in the Local Postal Service.

Several changes have been made in the postoffice, of this city, in the carriers department. Carrier William Demarest has been transferred from his Netherwood district to the Fourth ward district in place of James T. Mullen, resigned. Substitute P. J. Revelle has been assigned to the Netherwood district. Carrier E. T. Dunn resumed his duties yesterday, after a two weeks illness with muscular rheumatism. During Mr. Dunn's illness his district was carefully covered by Carrier William B. Sharp. Substitute Daniel Shea, who has been delivering mail for the past two weeks in the Park, will be substitute for Carrier E. E. Hann, who has three days leave of absence.

THE SULTAN A PREVARICATOR

REV. MR. SCHENCK CHARACTERIZES THE EASTERN POTENTATE A LIAR.

He Says That the United States Should Arouse European Powers From the Apathy Evinced Towards the Armenians.

Rev. Cornelius Schenck preached a very interesting sermon at the Trinity Reformed church last Sunday on the subject "Armenia's Bitter Cry: Our Response," and took for his text the first seven verses of the ninety-fourth Psalm.

"The reports that come to us daily from Armenia," he said, "sound like chapters in the history of the early Christian church."

He then spoke of Armenia as a very interesting country, partly on account of its history and partly on account of its people and their surroundings. He gave the reasons for their cry. The Sultan of Turkey had taken away their inalienable rights. He had failed to keep his oft-made promises. Speaking of the Sultan, Rev. Mr. Schenck said:

"Of all the consummate liars in this world, the Sultan is the biggest. I tell you friends that you and I would not stand for a minute the oppressions that the Armenians suffer. Those that are not murdered are dying of starvation. The country has been devastated, and the missionaries are asking for help. They have petitioned the Sultan to stay his bloody hand in his relentless terms, but repeated outrages only follow. He would, however, stop all the terrible atrocities if the people would recant and become Mohammedans, but they will not.

In reply to this cry Rev. Mr. Schenck said that we should assure them of our sympathy, our prayers and material assistance.

"The Christian world, he exclaimed, should protest against these outrages and place the responsibility put by upon the Sultan and partly on the European nations. For while they are haggling over the way in which Turkey shall be divided, the slaughters goes on unhindered. There are times when principal must assert itself."

He also said that it was his opinion that the United States should do everything in its power to stir up the other countries from their apathy. In closing he said:

"Whatever is done by the powers will be a temporary expedient. That which is going to cure this awful evil is the Gospel of Jesus Christ and we must send our money and missionaries to assist in the accomplishment.

BLENDED IN SWEET HARMONY.

Successful Rendition of the Harvest Cantata Last Evening.

The high standard of excellence so often shown in the choir of the First Baptist church was fully sustained last Sunday when they rendered the "Harvest Cantata" by George Garrett, M. A. The work is a beautiful one in every respect and its rendition was listened to with pleasure by an audience that filled the church. Interspersing the cantata, hymns were sung by the congregation. Solo parts were finely rendered by Miss F. May Grant and Mr. Smith.

In the latter portion of the cantata a noticeable feature was the part taken by the sopranos and altos. The well trained voices blended in the sweetest harmony, and brought out the many fine points in the selection. The last selections contained a basso solo, which was taken by Wm. Holmes, together with the basses and tenors, and ending in a grand chorus by the entire choir.

An appropriate discourse by Dr. Yerkes, taken from the ninety-fifth Psalm was thoroughly enjoyed. During the offertory Miss F. May Grant sang "These are They" from "Holy City" by Gaul. The offering was in behalf of the Citizen's Organized Aid Association. After the usual closing exercises a hymn was sung by the congregation with a response by the choir.

The concluding number was "March of the Israelites"—"Elit" by Costa, which was very well rendered by E. J. Fitzhugh. To whom great credit is due for his work in training the choir. Also C. W. McCutchen as leader of the choir.

The following compose the choir: Sopranos, Miss F. May Grant, Miss Swain, Miss Bessie Blair, Miss Spear, Mrs. Harold Serrell; altos, Miss Nancy Randolph, Miss Alice Needham, Miss Bertha Needham, Miss Florence Serrell; tenors, C. W. McCutchen, Mr. Smith, L. B. Ryder; Basses, R. T. Barrick, Wm. Holmes, Stacy Reynolds, George Shedicker.

A very appropriate symbol of the service, two large sheaves of wheat, gracefully adorned the pulpit platform while a choice bunch of chrysanthemums added not a little to the pleasant scene.

EMULATING THE FIRE LADDIES.

Such a Drill Will Be One of the Chief Attractions at the Fair.

Probably the most novel attraction of all the numerous competitions which will be introduced at the firemen's fair is the firemen's drill and dance, conceived and composed by Madame Menzeli Bartlett, which is now under rehearsal. The novel feature of this unique drill and manœuvering is the use of appliances employed by firemen when in active service. It is assured by Madame Bartlett that nothing of the kind has ever been presented either here or elsewhere. She has labored to make this her chief attraction in honor of the firemen.

Any doctor will tell you that Professor Hare, of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, is one of the highest authorities in the world on the action of drugs. In his last work, speaking of the treatment of scrofula, he says:

"It is hardly necessary to state that cod-liver oil is the best remedy of all. The oil should be given in emulsion, or prepared so as to be palatable."

He also says that the hypophosphites should be combined with the oil.

Pineola Cough Balsam

is excellent for all throat inflammations and for asthma. Consumptives will invariably derive benefit from its use, as it quickly abates the cough, renders expectoration easy, assisting nature in restoring wasted tissues. There is a large percentage of those who suppose their cases to be consumption who are only suffering from a chronic cold or deep seated cough, often aggravated by catarrh. For catarrh use Ely's Cream Balm. Both remedies are pleasant to use. Cream Balm 50c per bottle; Pineola Balsam 25c. at druggists. In quantities of $2.50 will deliver on receipt of amount. THE SABBATH BREAKER

By I. ZANGWILL.

[Copyright, 1895, by the Author.]

The moment came near for the Polish centenarian grandmother to die. From the doctor's statement it appeared she had only a bad quarter of an hour to live. Her attack had been sudden, and the grandchildren she loved to scold could not be present.

She had already battled through the great wave of pain and was drifting beyond the boundaries of her earthly refuge. The nurses, forgetting the trouble her querulousness and overweening dietary scruples had cost them, hung over the bed in which the shriveled entity lay. They did not know that she was living again through the one great episode of her life.

Nearly 40 years back, when, though already hard upon 70, and a widow, a Polish village was all her horizon; she received a letter. It arrived on the eve of Sabbath, on a day of rainy summer. It was from her little boy—her only boy —who kept a country inn 37 miles away and had a family. She opened the letter with feverish anxiety. It was somber laddish—was the apple of her eye. The grandmother eagerly perused the Hebrew script, from right to left. Then weakness overcame her, and she nearly fell.

Embedded casually enough in the four pages was a passage that stood out for her in letters of blood: "I am not feeling very well lately. The weather is so oppressive, and the nights are misty. But it is nothing serious. My digestion is a little out of order, that's all." There were rubles for her in the letter, but she let them fall to the floor unheeded. Panic, fear, traveling quicker than the tardy post of those days, had brought rumor of the murderous outbreak of cholera in her son's district. Already alarm for her boy had surged about her heart all day. The letter confirmed her worst apprehensions. Even if the first touch of the cholera fiend was not actually on him when he wrote, still he was, by his own confession, in that condition in which the disease takes easiest grip. By this time he was on a bed of sickness—nay, perhaps on his deathbed, if not dead. Even in those days the little grandmother had lived beyond the common span. She had seen many people die, and knew that the angel of death does not go about his work leisurely. In an epidemic his hands are too full to enable him to devote much attention to each case. Maternal instinct tugged at her heartstrings, drawing her toward her boy. The end of the letter seemed impregnated with special omen: "Come and see me soon, dear little mother. I shall be unable to get up for some time." Yes, she must go at once. Who knew but that it would be the last time she would look upon his face?

But then came a terrible thought to give her pause. The Sabbath was just "in" a moment ago. Driving, riding, or any manner of journeying was prohibited during the next 24 hours. Fratically she reviewed the situation. Religion permeated the violation of the Sabbath on one condition—if life was to be saved. By no stretch of logic could she delude herself into the belief that her son's recovery hinged upon her presence. Nay, analyzing the case with the cruel unscrupulousness of a morbid conscience, she saw his very illness was only a plausible hypothesis. No. To go to him now were beyond question to profane the Sabbath.

And yet, beneath all the reasoning, her conviction that he was sick unto death, her resolve to set out at once never wavered. After an agonizing struggle she compromised. She could not go by cart. That would be to make others work into the bargain, and would, moreover, involve a financial transaction. She must walk! Sinful as it was to transgress the limit of 2,000 yards beyond her village, the distance fired by rabbinical law, there was no help for it. And of all the forms of traveling walking might the mist blotted out the stars. But the little grandmother knew the road ran straight. All night she walked through the forest, fearless as Una, meeting neither man nor beast, though the wolf and the bear haunted its recesses and snakes lurked in the bushes. But only the innocent squirrels darted across her path. The morning found her spent and almost fainting. She would not rest. Almost half the journey was yet to do.

She had nothing with her to eat. Food, too, was an illegal burden, nor could she buy any on the holy day. She said her Sabbath morning prayer walking, holding her head forgiven the divine respect. The recital gave her partial oblivion of her pains. As she passed through a village the dreadful rumor of cholera was confirmed. It gave wings to her feet for ten minutes. Then bodily weakness was stronger than everything else, and she had to lean against the bushes on the outskirts of the village. It was nearly noon. A passing beggar gave her a piece of bread. Fortunately it was unbuttered, else she could not eat it. With only minor qualms, lest it had touched any unclean thing. She resumed her journey, but the rest had only made her feet move painfully and reluctantly. She would have liked to bathe them in a brook, but that, too, was forbidden. She took the letter from her bosom and reperused it and whipped up her flagging strength with a cry of, "Courage, my lamb; the little mother is on the way." Then the leaden clouds melted into sharp lines of pain, which beat into her face, refreshing her for the first few minutes, but soon wetting her to the skin, making her sopped garments a heavier burden, and reducing the pathway to mud that clogged still further the feeble footsteps. To the teeth of the wind and the driving shower she limped on. A fresh anxiety consumed her now—would she have strength to hold out? Every moment her pace lessened. She was moving like a snail. And the thought grew more vivid grew her prescience of what awaited her at the journey's end. Would she even hear his dying word? Perhaps — terrible thought—she would only be in time to look upon his dead face! Perhaps that was her God would punish her for her desecration of the holy day. "Take heart, my lamb," she wailed. "Do not die yet. The little mother comes."

The rain stopped. The sun came out hot and fierce and dried her hands and face, then made them stream again with perspiration. Every inch won was torture now, but the brave feet toiled on. Bruised and swollen and crippled, they toiled on. There was a dying voice—very far off—that called to her, and as she dragged herself along she cried: "I am coming, my lamb. Take heart! The little mother is on the way. Courage! I shall look upon thy face. I shall find thee alive!"

Once or twice she observed her plight and offered her a lift, but she shook her head steadfastly. The endless afternoon wore on. She crawled along the forest way, stumbling every now and then from sheer fatigue and tearing her hands and face in the brambles of the roadside. At last the cruel sun waned, and reeking mists rose from the forest pools. And still she plodded on, torpid with physical misery, consciously not taking each step only because she had taken the preceding. From time to time her lips mumbled, "Take heart, my lamb; I am coming." The Sabbath was "out"; her feet, broken and bleeding, and all but unrecognizable as little grandmother crawled up to her son's inn, on the border of the forest. Her heart was cold with fatal forebodings. There was none of the usual Saturday night litter of Polish peasantry about the door. The sound of many voices, weirdly intonating a Hebrew hymn, floated out into the night. A man in a caftan opened the door and mysteriously raised his forefinger to bid her enter without noise. She tottered through the portal into the room behind. Her daughter-in-law and her grandchildren were seated on the floor—the seat of mourners.

"Blessed be the true Judge," she said, and rent the skirt of her dress. "When did he die?"

"Yesterday. We had to bury him hastily ere the Sabbath came in."

The little grandmother lifted up her quavering voice and joined the hymn: "I will sing a new song unto thee, O God! Upon a harp of ten strings will I sing praises unto thee."

* * * * * * *

The nurses could not understand what sudden inflow of strength and impulse raised the mummified figure into a sitting posture. The little grandmother thrust a shriveled claw into her peaked, shrunken bosom and drew out a paper, crumpled and yellow as herself, covered with strange, crabbed hieroglyphics, whose true hand long since faded. She held it close to her bleared eyes. A beautiful light came into them and illumined the million puckered face. The lips moved faintly. "I am coming, my lamb," she mumbled. "Courage! The little mother is on the way. I shall look on thy face. I shall find thee alive."

THE END.

"The little mother is on the way."

'Mamma Is Here Now,"

It was in the Pennsylvania station the other morning. In one of the waiting room seats there sat a tired, worn looking man with a little boy of perhaps 3 in his arms. The little fellow's face was pinched and tattooed, his hair was awkwardly combed, and his stockings were awry. At the man's side sat two little girls of perhaps 5 and 7. Their frocks were buttoned crooked, but the younger had her hair combed in a pitiful attempt at curls. The man kept glancing at the clock. By and by the elder little girl spoke.

"Is mamma here yet?" she asked.

"Let me see," the man said.

The forlorn looking quartet rose and straggled out to the platform. There some men were just lifting a long pine box from a wagon. The man looked at it a moment.

"Come," he said, "let's go back. Mamma is here now."—Washington Post. St. Louis Republic.

ODD ORIGIN OF WORDS

SOME THAT ARE NOW FAMILIAR DUB TO ACCIDENT.

The Superstition of a Skipper Gave Us "Schooner"—Where "Silhouette" Came From—How "Quiz" Was Made.—"Lallybroth" Originated With Arabian Mothers.

There are words all frequently use whose histories and derivations are quaint and peculiar. The schooner is comparatively a modern craft and is a product of Yankee ingenuity. A bluff old New England skipper, Captain Andrew Robinson, who probably brought more slaves to the colonies than molasses and other common importations, one day came to the conclusion that he could rig a boat that would be an improvement on the craft then in use for coastwise shipping. Being superstitious, as most seafaring people are, he determined to let chance name his new boat. There were many spectators at the launching, some shaking their heads dubiously, others idiculing and then others believing in the inventions of the old captain. As the boat left the ways she plunged her bows into the water, came up again like a cork and skimmed over the water like a bird. As the craft shot like a meteor from the crowd, and one of the onlookers exclaimed, "See how she scoons!" Captain Robinson reverently taking the cue said, "Schooner she is, sure enough, schooner she has been ever since, with the exception of the letter "h," which generally manages somehow to get into words where it is not needed.

Another curious word, which has a significant and historical origin, is silhouette. Although this word is somewhat un-English, still it is in common and appropriation which the English speaking people made of everything that would serve them. One Silhouette was minister of state of France in 1759, a critical period with that country financially, which came near culminating in national bankruptcy. Silhouette is represented as being a very wise and sagacious man, and in politics he would now be termed a "reformer."

Silhouette and his doctrines became the butt of all the wits of Paris, and many a jest was perpetrated on the minister of state under the very nose of Silhouette. Some of these jests were: Fining elderly persons wore short coats without sleeves, and many other extravagances of a like nature were committed, among which was that of wearing of a rope and pulley. The cause of great deal of merriment at the time—in fact, so much so that it has been handed down to us together with the name of the great statesman—being the climax of the pranks of the Parisian wits. All of the portraits were made in black to represent in a profile the face and bust similar to a shadow cast upon a wall, or by the aid of a strong light, thus economizing colored paints and other expensive materials. Hence the word, present Silhouettist and all that is left of him.

The youth speaks of going to his "habersdasher." This word is among that class of words in which the letter "r" is a very common of sources—viz: corruption. The small shopkeepers of Germany had a custom in past ages of standing in the doors of their shops and calling out the question of their wares. Their common salutation to every passer-by who had the appearance of being in the least susceptible was: "Habt ihr etwas zu kaufen?" and "earing" after which was, one may readily imagine, corrupted into "haberdasher" by rapid and constant repetition.

Another word, "exchequer," has a peculiar derivation. In the time of the old Normans there was established a court of equity, which primarily consisted to settle the claims of the king upon the people, the claims of the people upon the king and the claims of the people upon the people. Before this court there was placed in one of the court was a table, upon which was a checkered cloth similar to a chessboard, which was used as an assistant in counting, and to observers gave the impression that it had the appearance of a game of checkers, and so by common usage it became the court of exchequer, and the checkered cloth word as it is most commonly used now, meaning principally a treasury.

The word "quiz" is purely an accident, or, more properly speaking, the result of an Irishman's joke, and in reality has no meaning. A wager was made between some students of an old university that they could coin a word in a single night which in 24 hours would be the talk of all Dublin. There was much laughter at the expense of the would be coiner of the new word, but next morning upon rising the new word was at the expense of the scoffers, for the letters q u i z were posted on every wall and available space in Dublin, and thus the word became the talk of the town and has since remained exactly what it was when it was invented—a riddle.

There is a word in our language which, correctly speaking, means nothing, what ever, although its relative meaning is familiar and dear to all. Who is there in whom the word "lullaby" does not stir some of the tenderest and dearest recollections? This word "lullaby" comes to us in exact accordance with a myth from the starry plains of Arabia, polished and rounded by the toil of the eternal ages. As a consequence of Lilith, Adam's son, forming an alliance with the evil spirit, and thus falling from grace in the course of time the name Lilith became a dreaded name, for fearful deeds were attributed to her, so much so the Arabian mother never dare leave her slumbering child without commanding Lilith to be gone and to do the little one no harm. The Arabic phrase invariably used and the sound of "Lilith a by." As time progressed this was rattled up and made the burden of the sweet, soothing lullabies of a mother singing her baby to sleep and has finally come down to us as the sweet, soft "lullaby."—New York Herald.

His Notes.

It was said of Vice Chancellor Bacon that he never troubled to take a note of the proceedings before him, for his memory was so wonderful that without assistance it could retain all the material facts of a case. Sometimes he might be seen quietly put pen to paper, and then it was supposed that he was making rough sketches of counsel or the witnesses. One amusing story about him was to the effect that, on the hearing of an appeal from one of his judgments, the lords' justices sent for his notes. These proved to consist of a single sheet of paper, on which was drawn a caricature portrait of the appellant, with the words "This man is a liar!" written under it.—London standard.

SECOND OF THE STAR COURSE.

Jere M. Cobb Delights an Audience in the Y. M. C. A. Hall.

The second entertainment in the Star course at the Y. M. C. A., hall was held last evening before an appreciative audience. The hall was comfortably filled. The entertainment consisted of selections by Miss Margaret E. Meredith, soprano, whose sweet and clear voice enraptured her hearers, Jere M. Cobb, elecutionist, whose humorous selections sent his hearers into paroxysms of laughters, while his rendition of Wallace's "Chariot Race" held them spell-bound. C. Maynrd Evans also gave several of his most enjoyable whistling solos. P. Ludwig Condé was the violinist, and Miss Elfleda E. Whiting the excellent accompanist.

SHOT IN THE FOOT.

A Careless Youngster With a Flobert Rifle Suffers an Accident.

Edward Klinsman, the fourteen-year old son of Herbert Klinsman, the Westfront street baker, shot himself in the foot yesterday while out hunting near the mountain. He was running after a bird with his Flobert rifle pointed at the ground when the trigger caught and the bullet passed through the fleshy part of the foot. The boy was carried to his grandmother's by his companions and then to Dr. D. C. Adams, where the wound was dressed. He was then taken home.

The Dray Smashed.

A disastrous accident occurred Wednesday afternoon in the alley adjoining Ulrich & Blatz's meat market on West Front street. Expressman Al Donavan had driven in the alley to get a large case of clothing from the establishment on the top floor of the building. The cases are lowered by means of a rope and pulley. The case was fastened with a rope and swung from the opening, but before it could be lowered the rope slipped and the case fell the entire distance landing heavily on the wagon. A rear wheel was dished and the body of the wagon was wrecked. The horse never moved from his position. The clothing was carried back to the top floor and put into another case in the meantime another wagon was secured.

The Twilight's Merry Dance.

The eighth annual ball given by the Twilight Social Club in the Columbia Cycles Academy, Wednesday evening, was a pleasant affair. A large crowd was in attendance, and 'at 11 o'clock the grand march was led by Mr. and Mrs. Fred S. Moore, assisted by Louis Feiring and Miss Kate Mulhearn. After the grand march dancing to the sweet music by Prof. Nickel's full orchestra, of Newark, was kept up until the early morn. During the dance the best of order was maintained, and the committee, which consisted of F. S. Moore, E. C. Searing, L. Feiring and J. Loughlin, deserve mention for the manner in which they handled the affair. Their next ball will be held New Year's Eve.

Thankful for Better Times.

Rev. Dr. Jocelyn Johnstone, rector of the Church of the Redeemer preached an excellent sermon to his congregation on the morning of Thanksgiving day. He gave among other reasons for an American citizen's thankfulness, the great prosperity of the laboring classes in America. This is, perhaps, a special value, coming from a close observer like Dr. Johnstone, who has lived in other lands.

Plainfield Prisoners Arraigned.

In the Court of Special Sessions held at Elizabeth, Wednesday, James Donovan, for attempted burglary at Plainfield, pleaded not guilty. Fred Willisield, of Plainfield, accused of grand larceny, was also arraigned and pleaded not guilty, as did John Maguires, of Plainfield, accused of criminal assault. Their trials were set down for next week. Two youths, John and Tom Sands, pleaded guilty to breaking, entering and stealing.

Sailor Boys Are These.

The "Sailors Chorus," will be sung at the Firemen's fair by thirty boys. The airs with its appropriate gestures as taught by Madame Menzelli Bartlett is very catching and will no doubt receive the approval of the audience as well as the other productions under the charge of Madame Bartlett. The boys feel great pride in this achievement.

Public School Festivities.

Special Thanksgiving day exercises were held in the classroom of the sixth grade in the High School building on Wednesday morning. All the class took part. The programme consisted of readings and the blackboards were decorated with appropriate drawings.

SENTIMENTS OF GRATITUDE.

SOME OF THE THINGS THAT WE ARE TO BE THANKFUL FOR.

Observations of Rev. Herbert Randolph at the Thanksgiving Service Meeting in the Seventh Day Baptist Church.

The Thanksgiving prayer meeting held under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor and Epworth League Societies yesterday morning at 9 o'clock in the Sunday-school room of the Trinity Reformed church, was especially helpful and interesting. E. E. Anthony was in charge and Miss Lottie Aldridge presided at the piano. The room was filled with both old and young of all denominations and not a moment was lost, as someone was on their feet all the time taking part in the service. Rev. Charles Scudder dismissed them with the benediction.

At the close they all adjourned to the church proper where the regular service was held. The choir having charge of the music consisted of F. S. Cutter, S. J. Moore, Mrs. F. S. Cutter, Miss Lizzie Dunn, Miss Bessie Blair, Mrs. J. C. Van Dyke, J. C. Van Dyke, L. A. Hummer, and W. Simmons, while Arthur Titsworth presided at the organ.

The responsive reading of the 100th Psalm was conducted by Rev. Cornelius Schenck, and the Scripture selections Philiplians 4:1, 9, after which Dr. Barnes offered prayer. An anthem by the choir during the offertory was rendered, which was followed by a hymn.

Rev. Herbert F. Randolph then announced his text Acts 28th chapter and a portion of the fifteenth verse: "He thanked God and took courage." In substance he spoke as follows:

Wall street is a centre of struggles for many classes and the sole ambition of not a few is to get there. In fact with a large number its Wall street and not Washington for the financier, but with the politician Washington is his objective point. The artist goes to Paris, the scholar to Germany and the antiquarian to Assyria or Egypt. Would you study great orators, you go to Athens, or soldiers, to Rome. Paul's great desire was to go to Rome. It was a long severe task to reach it, for he tells us he was persecuted, shipwrecked, imprisoned, etc. But when he reached there he thanked God and took courage.

There are no two greater sentiments than gratitude for past preservation and hope for the future. Without them man cannot be called a son of God, and no man is fitted for this life unless he is ruled by the spirit of God, he cannot live sublime without the two sentiments.

The power of memory should be consecrated. God rules the universe and regulates the affairs of men. A year ago we thought the good old ship was going to the bow, to be lost, but thank God there were thousands on board to protect her. The ship lost something, but perhaps she is better for it. Let us lift up our hearts in praise for preservation. We thank God today that there is one faith, one hope and one baptism and that all can repeat the Apostle's creed.

The duty of hopefulness is great. If I see no God in the past there is none in the future. We should combine the two sentiments into a strenuous effort for duty present, and have undaunted courage and belief in God. We want strength of soul and a Gospel of strenuous effort.

Dr. Yerkes closed the service with prayer after which Rev. C. E. Herring pronounce d the benediction after the singing of "America." On the pulpit platform and in front of it was an arrangement of choice fruits and vegetables, *while near by was a large dis*play of beautiful chryanthemums of various colors. The fruits and flowers were selected and arranged by Mrs. J. C. VanDyke.

The offerings will be given to the Belief Associations according to the usual custom.

The Union Thanksgiving Day service of the Crescent Avenue, Park Avenue Congregational and Seventh-Day Baptist churches was held yesterday morning in the Seventh-Day Baptist church.

The opening services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Lewis, after which Rev. Dr. Richards read the Scripture selection and offered the first prayer, and Rev. J. W. Richardson offered the closing prayer and pronounced the benediction.

The Thanksgiving sermon was preached by Bev. C. L. Goodrich, from the text. James 1:17: "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." National prosperity, he said, is not, after all the greatest reason for thanksgiving, but that our God is what he is. He is the sovereign of all the universe; no storm that sweeps on in its destructive course can escape from His control; the winds and the waves must obey His will. But He is not the sovereign alone—He is the loving Father, who had a loving plan in our creation. "In Him is no variableness."

He will always care for us in true love, and will give to each object of His care just as much good as it is able and willing to receive. Need we fear to leave the future of our nation, or of ourselves, in the hands of such a God?

The choir for this service was one selected from the choirs of the various churches. The organist was Miss Jessie Utter.

THE WHITE STARS.

Young Men of the Church of Heavenly Rest Organize.

A new organization was formed in the parish house of the Church of the Heavenly Rest on Monday evening, November 25th. It is composed entirely of young men and they adopted the name of the White Star Club.

Charles Brinkerhoff was elected President; James Halfard, Secretary; and Arthur Sherman, Treasurer. Music is to be one of the features of the club and they have a good deal of talent in it. They will give their first entertainment on Thursday, December 19th, the proceeds of which they kindly give to the children's Christmas tree. New members will all have to be voted in.

A Finished Performance.

The production of "The Capitol" in Music Hall Wednesday night was the most finished performance that has been given in this city in many seasons. The piece is a story of Washington social and political life, cleverly and naturally constructed, and impersonated by a cast everyone of whom is an artist in their character. The company should have been greeted with a packed house, and though this was far from the condition of things, the acting and the fine same quality which characterized its production in New York and won for it the unqualified praise of the dramatic critics of the metropolis. Manager Daly is to be congratulated on having secured the company, though it is to be regretted that he was not afforded a more liberal patronage.

Discussed the Tramp Nuisance.

The Somerset Board of Freeholders held a special meeting at the Court House last Wednesday. Most of the time was occupied in trying to formulate a scheme to take care of tramps. Most of the members thought a fixed sum should be paid the Sheriff, but that gentleman said this would be unfair to him. It was decided to let the matter remain as it now is, for the present, at least. Sheriff Wyckoff has promised to see that the tramps do not make the Court House a permanent home.

A Masquerade Surprise.

A pleasant masquerade party was given at the home of Edith and Walter Darby at Alton Wednesday evening, which was arranged by their young friends. The surprise was complete and a most enjoyable evening was spent. At midnight a bountiful supper was served. Music for dancing was furnished by Isaac Lambert, of Westfield. Among those present from Plainfield were Miss Raybert, Miss Schuck, and Messrs. Woodland, Ross, Force and William Dunn.

North Plainfield Jurors.

The following North Plainfielders have been drawn to serve at the December term of court in Somerset county: Fred N. Brown, George N. Collins, Isaiah Corlell and Israel W. Stout.

THE SOCIAL SEASON OPENED.

FIGURES BOTH GROTESQUE AND PRETTY AT THE GERMAN.

The Event Attended by a Number of Leading Society People—Description of Some of the Most Novel Figures.

The social season of Plainfield opened auspiciously last evening at the Casino with a subscription German, which was largely attended. The affair was a complete success, from first to last, and devolved much credit on the leaders, Louis G. Tompson and Fred. W. Walz, who originated the novel but very pleasing figures, and who managed the entire affair so well. The music was furnished by Blum and Fleischer. In one of the side rooms, refreshments were served by Steward Peterson, of the Union County Club.

The figures were all entirely new and very pretty, most of them being appropriate to Thanksgiving. The pumpkin figure was something on a new line. The lights in the hall were all turned out and the gentleman entered with large lighted jack lanterns, made of pumpkins in front of their faces. Then the ladies choose partners from among the grotesque faces and danced with the one who was behind the jacks' lantern.

Another Thanksgiving figure was the wishbone, in which four men grasped each side of a gigantic wooden wish bone. There was a joint in some unknown place in it and those getting the long end took the four ladies who awaited there while the other four went back to their seats.

The football figure was a lively one as the name suggested and was the cause of much amusement. A certain number of ladies were grouped at one end of the hall and twice that number of gentlemen gathered at the other end. One of the ladies kicked a football down the hall and the gentleman that secured it had the privilege of dancing with her. There was plenty of fun when the slippery football went bounding along and the gentlemen indulged in genuine football practice in attempting to capture it. Tumbles were many.

The trilby figure was one of the most novel and, as might be expected, the gentlemen chose their partners by their feet which were visible beneath a sheet that hid their owners. A pair of stuffed feet and shoes were placed in position and several of the men chose this inanimate figure.

The Billiard figure was another very pretty one and was especially graceful. There were a number of figures and it was not until almost two o'clock that the gathering broke up and the last figure had been danced. The handsome favors were given out by Mrs. J. T. Reinhart, Mrs. O. T. Waring and Mrs. L. E. Walz.

There were about forty couple who took part in the German, among whom were the Misses Shepard, Waring, Florence Waring, Lockwood, Reinhart, Van Boskerck, Dumont, May Holly, Margaret Holly, Cooley, Abbott, Baker, Whitton, Sprague and Frost. Mrs. L. G. Tompson, Mrs. Marion Ackerman, Mrs. Evarts Tracy, Mrs. Edward Van Buren and Messrs. Beebe, Lowe, O. G. Waring, L. E. Waring, Finch, Huntington, Irving West, Harry West, Edward Van Buren, Laurens Van Buren, Van Boskerck, Shepard, Foster, of New York, Tyler, Frost, Opdyke, Murphy and Reinhart.

The next large social event will be the first assembly on December 16th.

INSPECTED THE CORPS.

After the Inspection Social Intercourse Reigned.

Inspecting Officer Mrs. Hill, accompanied by Past Department President Mrs. Jennie B. Atwood and Mrs. Fitzpatrick, of Trenton, visited the Woman's Relief Corps, No. 10, in this city last evening, when Mrs. Hill inspected the Corps.

After the transaction of business the women adjourned to the banquet room where they met members of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., and John Hand Camp, No. 18, S. of V., as their guests. All sat down to the table and partook of an excellent supper prepared by the women.

Speeches were made by Mrs. Hill, Mrs. Atwood and Mrs. Fitzpatrick, of Trenton, Mrs. Angleman, of Bayonne, Mrs. M. J. Dobbins, Mrs. Corwin, Mrs. W. C. Smith, A. W. Nash, W. W. Coriell, Joseph Bogert, E. P. T. Smith, H. C. McVoy, Charles Stephens, M. C. Dobbins, Robert Walker, and recitations by W. B. Mattox and H. S. Thatcher. The affair was a most pleasant one and will long be remembered. In conclusion "America" was sung by all present.

—The Mayhew Association gave a benefit dance to Mr. Mayhew in T. A. B. Hall, Wednesday evening. The attendance was very large and the receipts gratifying. The music was furnished by O'Reilley.

—People say that Edward Love not only has a fine large assortment of wall papers, but also employs men that excel in the art of decorating. Why not have him paper a room as a Christmas present for your friend?

LARGELY ATTENDED FUNERAL.

Many Young Friends of Wm. Winckler Attend His Obsequies.

The funeral services of the late William C. Winckler, son of Mr. and Mrs. Augustus J. Winckler, were held from his parents' home, 331 Park place yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock, and were particularly impressive. The desolate home was filled with relatives and friends of the decedent, which bore rich testimony to his estimable qualities and the esteem in which he was held, while outside were 76 members of Franklin Council, No. 41, J. O. U. M., of which the departed was a member.

A touching selection, "Jesus Saviour Pilot Me," was rendered by Miss Whiting, soprano; Mrs. C. La-Boyteaux, alto; E. E. Runyon, tenor; and Horace J. Martin, bass. Rev. Mr. Goodrich then took charge of the service and read the scripture selection after which he spoke in part as follows:

There are times when we can do nothing but look to God. He is our refuge and strength, as thousands of afflicted ones can testify. He is a present help. There is no long journey to be traveled in reaching him, for he is very near us, especially in trouble, when death is in our minds so painfully as it is today. Our times are in God's hands, not in man's, satin's or chance.

This death is not an untimely cutting off, but a removal to a better sphere. We ought to know God better and then we would know his plans better. He gives his children life eternal and no accident can pluck it out of the Father's hands, and death cannot. We must look away from this sad event to Jesus Christ. Today we are reminded of the brevity of life, and may God teach us to so number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.

Rev. J. W. Richardson, pastor of the Park Avenue Baptist church and a member of the J. O. U. A. M., then offered a deeply spiritual prayer that spoke for each heart present.

The quartette sang tenderly "Somewhere We'll Understand," after which Rev. Mr. Goodrich pronounced the benediction.

It was an occasion of regret that the circumstances would not permit the opening of the casket.

The floral tributes were beautiful and consisted of three large pillows of roses, ferns and calla lillies, one from Franklin Council, No. 41, J. O. U. A. M., bearing the inscription "Our Brother in F. L. and U.," another from the deceased's employer and shopmates and another from the sisters and brother of the departed, bearing the word "Brother." An affecting tribute was an exquisite bunch of white chrysanthemums from the bereaved parents. Another was a wreath of roses, ferns and calla lillies from former employers, Neuman Brothers. The rest consisted of bouquets of cut roses tied with satin ribbon. They all were sent to the residence upon the casket, upon which was spread the American flag and the regalia of the order.

L. M. Dunavan, W. C. Force, John V. Beekman, Theodore A. Kurzhals, Jr., J. W. Poole and F. Merton Lunger, members of Franklin Council, No. 41, J. O. U. A. M., as bearers, then escorted the remains to the hearse, while the brothers stood facing each other with uncovered heads.

At Hillside cemetery Rev. Mr. Goodrich read a short Scripture selection after which Past Councilor David Bodine took charge and conducted the service of the order. At the conclusion "Farewell Dear Brother" was sung by the members and Rev. J. W. Richardson pronounced the benediction.

A Big Purchase.

Edward White received on Wednesday forty cases of fine china, consisting of cups and saucers, vases, bread and cake plates, pickle dishes, sugar and creamers, fancy plates, nut and fruit dishes, celery trays, etc. These goods were sold at auction by order of George Borgfeldt & Co., one of the largest importing houses in New York, and were imported by them for a prominent house in New York, but not delivered on account of financial embarassment. These goods are very fine and well worth seeing as the prices are less than half of their real value.

Died at the Hospital.

Adam Utzinger, of McDowell street, died at the Muhlenberg hospital this morning at 10:30 o'clock from the effects of a fall received three weeks ago. He leaves a wife and three children. His funeral will be held Monday afternoon at two o'clock at the house and at three o'clock at the German Reformed church.

THE BANANA TREE.

Its Many Uses in the World of Commerce and Manufactures.

In the West Indies the dried leaves and prepared portions of the stem of the banana tree are used as packing materials. Fresh leaves are used to shade young coffee or cacao seedlings in nursery beds and to cover cacao beans during fermentation. The young unopened leaves are so smooth and soft that they are used as "court plaster" for blisters. In India the dried stalk of the plantain leaf is used as a rough kind of twine, and the larger parts are made into small boxes for holding snuff, drugs, etc.

In the Malay peninsula the ash of the leaf and leaf stalk is used instead of soap to clear a ranch in washing clothes, and a solution of the ash is often used as salt in cooking. In the Dutch Indies the skin of the plantain is used for blackening shoes. The juice which flows from all cut parts of the banana is rich in tannin and of so bracketing a nature that it may be used with incidental advantage in tan. In Java the leaves of the "wax banana" are covered on the underside with a white powder which yields a valuable wax, clear, hard and odorless, which is a valuable article of trade. The ashes of the leaves, stem and fruit rind are employed in Bengal in many dyeing processes. The thin cigarette wrapper is made from the leaves.

Fiber is got from the stems of many kinds of bananas. The most valuable is the "manilla" or "Abaca" banana, which holds the chief place for making white ropes and cordage. Old ropes made of it form an excellent paper making material, and until 1870 it was the chief article of packing papers. The manilla hemp industry is a large one. About 50,000 tons of fiber, valued at £3,000,000, are annually exported from the Philippine islands. The manilla hemp plant is grown exclusively in the southeastern part of the Philippines, and all attempts to grow it elsewhere have failed. Many articles are made from manilla besap—mats, cords, hats, plaited work, lace handkerchiefs of the finest texture and beautiful whiteness. Senor Wohlan, in Switzerland, an industry has been started for making lace and materials for leather from the fiber. By a simple process it is made into straw exactly resembling the finest wheat straw for plaiting.—London Spectator.

A LITTLE LECTURE ON WOMEN.

One of Bret Harte's Characters Describes the Cussedness of the Sex.

In a previous chronicle which dealt with the exploits of Chu Chu, a Californian minstrel, I gave a brief sketch of the accomplishments of Enriquez Saltillo, who assisted me in training her, and who was also brother to Consuelo Saltillo, the young lady who "rode the mustang" on the back of the mustang and my youthful affections. I consider it a proof of the superiority of masculine friendship that neither the subject of this description nor the accomplished young lady ever made the slightest difference to Enriquez or me in our exalted amity. "Of the two," Chu Chu said to me, "I never could possibly have seen in his sister to admire he joined a tolerant skepticism of the whole sex. This he was wont to do with a delicate irony and a quaint use of Spanish precision and Californian slang for which he was justly famous.

"As to these women and their little games," he would say to me, "you see me, my friend, your old Uncle 'Enry is not in it. No; he will ever take a back seat when fole his dear boy Chu Chu is around. Is here! If she is a horse, you shall say, 'She will buck jump,' 'She will cas-shy,' 'She will not arrive,' 'She will arrive too quick.' I shall say, 'She is a lady, and how are you?' For when you shall say, 'She will cas-shy,' look you, she will walk straight; or she will remain tranquil when you think she look jump, or she will not arrive, and, look you, you will not. You shall get left. It is ever so. My father gone to the war, and I was left with my mother make court to my mother when she was but a senorita. My father think she have fole his brother more. So he say to her: 'It is me-fol', or it is the divorce.' I will go. I will efface myself. Adios! Shake hands. Is that so long! See you again in the fall.' And what make my mother? Regard me! She marry my father the next instant! Of thees women, believe me, Pancho, you shall know nothing. Not even if they hate you for the sake of your father or his nephew."—From "The Devotion of Enriquez," by Bret Harte, in Century.

An Original Cigar Cutter.

Then our guide called our attention to the fact that upon the ground was neatly quisitely perfect miniature reduction of the guillotine it is possible to imagine. It is in highly polished dark red wood and was received by the glitter of the bright steel knife, crescent shaped and properly weighted, like the knife of its big and murderous sister, the real guillotine, but only an inch and a half long. It is a delectable cover this pretty albeit rather sinister toy and found on touching the curious upright to fall into place, the aperture for the head of the victim closed duly and the wee knife fell with a proper thud.

"I had the use of this small marvel, when the guide smiled, and taking from his pocket a cigar with the rapidity born of long practice laid it on the plank, where it was held in position by a spring touched the various knobs, and in a twinkling the tip of the cigar was sliced off by the knife, which fell with a proper thud. It is natural to infer that the men of our party snipped off the ends of all their cigars before we left the premises, as well as that the guide received a gift from the executioner in a harmless manner with this dainty little guillotine.—Paris Letter.

Much Worse.

Mr. Gibbs went to an entertainment, and by mistake he took another gentleman's hat, reducing it to a shapeless mass. The owner of the hat was naturally highly indignant, and breathed threats of vengeance.

"Sir," he said, "this hat is quite new. I am very sorry, and must admit that I was awkward. But," he added complacently, "it might have been worse."

"I don't see how it could have been," roared the victim.

"Oh, yes, it could!" said Gibbs. "I might have sat down on my own hat."—Tit-Bits.

From the French.

Toto (in tears)—Boo-oo-oo!

Papa—What's the matter with that boy now?

Papa—You little wretch! And I can't even give you a thrashing for fear of exploding the cartridge.—London Globe.

AN EXTRAORDINARY DIVORCE.

Both Parties In Interest Swore They Had Never Met Before.

"The annals of the divorce courts contain many curious histories," said an old lawyer, "but to me the most remarkable case I ever heard of was tried in Kings county, N. Y., a dozen years ago. Both parties were prominent in society, and for some time the matter was kept a secret, but finally it became known and many of one child when, in 1862, her husband enlisted in the Union army. She heard from him at intervals for more than a year, and then for a long period all was silence. Next she received intelligence of his death. Mrs. Martin donned widow's weeds, and while mourning her husband's death her child died. She then took up her residence with friends, until 1873, when she received the attentions of a Mr. Hyde, a well known business man and a widower with seven children. The courtship extended over a period of 11 months, during which time Mr. Hyde was informed of Mrs. Martin's former marriage, and 11 years after Martin's reported death they were married. Nothing happened to disturb their happiness until about ten years later, when Mrs. Hyde informed her that Martin was living in the suburbs of Brooklyn with a wife and children. Investigation proved that the man did live in Brooklyn, as stated, and also that he had left the city in 1862 and entered the army.

"The case came up before the referee, and there Martin swore that he had never seen Mrs. Hyde; that he was a single man when he joined the army; that he married on his return from the war, and had since been a resident of Brooklyn and made no concealment of his marriage. Mrs. Hyde swore, she called upon God in the most solemn manner to witness that she had never seen Mr. Martin, and when the two were confronted with each other they swore in the strongest manner disconcerted and repeated their former denials of ever having met before.

"Former friends and acquaintances of both, however, swore that they had been married and were positive of their identity. After a careful investigation and long consideration the referee decided the preponderance of testimony to be against the defendant and passed an order, which was approved by the Brooklyn city court, annulling the marriage. Mrs. Hyde had no children by her second marriage. Friends volunteered assistance to enable her to carry her case to the superior court, but she complied to abide by the decision of the referee."—Washington Post.

GOT THINGS MIXED.

Dr. Holmes and the Woman Who Had Not Read a Novel.

"I remember once in my experience," remarked a literary young woman, "of taking several ladies to call on the late Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes when I was in Boston. One of them had known the Holmeses since childhood and went there pretty much as I pleased and often took friends of her own in the days of the good doctor. On this occasion one of the ladies was a young married woman who had never read any of Dr. Holmes' books, and had talked about him a bit, so that she would not make any mistakes. I told her several titles and dwelt especially upon the 'Autocrat of the Breakfast Table,' because that is my favorite. She was an intelligent person and was a rapid learner, so that when we started out I felt perfectly confident of making no one creak. Well, everything went swimmingly along, and she wisely kept silent on the book question, except to second the compliments of the rest. We were conversant with the doctor's books—that is, swimmingly until just as we were leaving. Then she seemed to think she ought to say something, and she did. I was listening, as it happened, for I had grown a little careless and had thought she wasn't going to speak.

"'Oh, doctor,' she said in a little burst of enthusiasm, 'I want to tell you how much I have enjoyed your books, and particularly the "Autograph of the Breakfast Table."'

"Well, I thought I should drop right through the floor, and I kind of gasped and waited to see what the doctor would do, but my alarm was needless. He simply smiled into her face and in his kindliest manner said that he was glad that many people thought the 'Autograph' was the best thing he had ever done. Think of that," concluded the young woman. "He never said a word—he she had said it, and she never knew the difference until we got outside, and then if she didn't know enough to don't think I ever showed anybody there was any difference in anything."—Washington Star.

Oiled Brick and Sandstone.

Experiments made to ascertain the length of time that brick and sandstone are rendered waterproof or protected by oiling show some valuable results. The oils used were linseed oil, boiled linseed oil and the crude mineral oil known as "blue oil," and the exposure was on a roof fairly exposed to the prevailing winter storms, the bricks being good, sound, machine made. It is stated that the amount of oil and water taken up by the sandstone was very much greater than that taken up by the bricks, although the area of the sandstone cubes was much the greater. Equal amounts of the three oils were absorbed. The blue oil, however, was taken up in much greater quantity by both bricks and sandstone, but by the end of 12 months only the weight of the 13½ ounces of blue oil had apparently evaporated, and the bricks had returned to their original state, but those treated with raw and boiled oil had not returned to their original weight, but had perhaps as long a time to have lost the good effects of the oils, being practically impervious.—New York Sun.

Willing to Do Business.

In these energetic, go ahead days we are continually hearing of some new and curious way of making money, but the following method is perhaps as ingenious as any previously devised.

A little boy entered a surgery the other day, when the village doctor was in attendance, and approaching up to him whispered cautiously:

"Please, sir, mother sent me to say as how our Lizzie's got measles awful bad, and, please, mother wants to know how much you'll give her to spread it all over the village."—London Tit-Bits.

—Notes and Queries.

LIKE A THING OF LIFE.

The Perverse Conduct of a Hose Under Considerable Pressure of Water.

Queer things drift into a police station sometimes, and so it came to pass that the officers at the East St. Louis station had a funny experience one Saturday night. Things were very quiet. "Whisky shoots," the keen, hard to-be-satisfied fire fighting that remiss in their usual donation that only one lone negro was in the cells, and he came there to sleep. Lieutenant Wolbrasky thought it would be a good chance to give the quarters a thorough cleaning. Calling Night Clerk Dick Grady, they fastened the hose to the pipe going in the engine house, turned on a moderate supply of water, and began to wash out the cells.

They had just got things nicely started when some practical joker came in to the plug and turned the water on full head, with only about 50 feet of hose on. The lieutenant had the hose in his hand, when it gave a jump as though it were alive and wrenched itself loose, while a small stream began to do everything in sight.

The lieutenant is a pretty strong man, but he was not in it with the hose. Dick Grady rushed into a cell and then shut the door after him, and the hose whizzed up to the bars and Dick came near being drowned like a rat in a hole. Sergeant Mulvey and Officer Toomey came in just then, and the hose greeted them with a liberal shower. Both men said something and retreated. Then the hose, as if endowed with reason of life, got after the lieutenant. His handsome uniform and new hat looked like a sad memory of summer in a second. Like a great snake, the hose threw itself around and nothing could hold it. Finally it got out of the jail, and into the chief's office, where Secretary Lee was quietly trying to figure out what had broken loose. They stopped figuring and made a swift break for the inner office, but not until both had received soakings.

The chief's office was flooded in a second, and papers and everything loose went flying about the room. They had been loose started for the inner office, but some one outside just then turned the water off.

When a reporter drifted in a few minutes later he found Secretary Lee trying to dry his hats and the water was two inches deep on the floor. That hose just lay there and laughed, while Dick Grady, who looked like a drowned rat, was hanging himself up by the fire to get dry.—St. Louis Republic.

Lodgeroom Lighting.

It would hardly occur to one's innocent of the solemn rites of secret societies that there was any particular art in lighting a lodgeroom, but an expert on the subject says it is a unique branch of the lighting business. To begin with, there should, of course, be plenty of light, but a matter of still greater importance is the manner in which it is distributed, and the flexibility with which its various combinations can be changed to suit the occasion when so desired; at other times total darkness is called for, and all the gradations between darkness and maximum light must be easily available. A typical lodgeroom has a large central chandelier, with possibly 20 lights. At the platform at each end are two standard candelabra, with six lights each, or a chandelier hanging from the ceiling. At each side of the platform are ordinary portable desk lights and extra darkness from windows is contributed along the sides of the hall for the use of the officials who may be reading at the moment. All these lights and others are placed plugs which can be used for portable lights for scenic effects, or connected to fan motors or heating apparatus.

The electrician must be a judge of warm or cool, according to the season. The fact that lodgeroom switches for turning the current on and off are invariably the "dinkelspiel" "knife" pattern is thus explained by a lodgeroom wireman: "Knife switches work silently and up that prominent and well-known order to mean mighty pulsant royal chief has roasted a candidate for three-quarters of an hour and finally arises to pronounce a sentence, it breaks in a most unseemly if also emphatic to hear the 'whang' of a snap switch."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Philosophy of Age.

"My son," observed the good man, "the great lesson you should learn is self denial. Can you deny yourself? Can you say to me 'Can I do without it?' Economize! Skimp! Skimp!"

Youth—But, father, what shall I get out of life at this rate?

"Get! Do you suppose life is a mere playtime to pander to material and carnal appetites? Nay; your young and strong years are the years for toil, for drudgery, for saving."

"But, father, I would read, I would study, I would be enlightened, and as a concomitant must have exercise—recreation!—

"Recreation! Why, sir, the years of activity are your working years. Life is day. You must begin toiling in its early morning and toil far into its afternoon. Never mind the joyous years of youth, and a promise will do. Gather in the harvest. Toil! Skimp! Deny! And toil on until the darkness comes and the old limbs are flung!"

"But, father, what is the reward of all this suffering self denial?"

"Reward! Think of the supreme joy of sitting in life's gloaming and telling your children and grandchildren about it."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Siberian Locusts.

Mile after mile as you travel along there is no break in the monotony of this great frozen land. Everywhere the same, everywhere the vast white plains. In the perspective of distance the very ridges melt into the general level, and as you look around you see the same picture with the same great mantle of unbroken snow. The country lies before you as an earth that is dead, so still, so motionless, so white is the landscape. Life has fled before the icy winds that draw out of the north, and the land you traverse is surely the land of the dead. It is months since the sight of a single bird to break upon the ear in this untenanted wilderness; the very streams are motionless masses of ice. Land where is no sound, and everywhere east, west, north and south without landmark to see you sight. Day after day and week after week your dear eyes look along and find nothing, and if your compass or, if the gray clouds will lift for awhile, the stars in the heaven above will be your only guide.—"A Winter Journey."

The Elder.

One of the handsomest of all our native shrubs is the elder, flaunting candelabra, its glossy, pinnate leaves and great, flat cymes of creamy white, fragrant flowers, making it a very desirable addition to the list of trees that should be cultivated. A basket of elder flowers and roses is truly "a thing of beauty" that will be "a joy forever" in the memory.

Where to Go for Charity.

Col. Tyler, President of the Organized Aid Association, in his annual address said: "We do not mean that our annual expenses shall exceed six hundred dollars and our desire is that this amount shall be raised, as far as possible, by subscriptions of two dollars each from three hundred different persons. In this way no one is burdened. The amount that each gives to the active charities of the city is not interfered with." Only two dollars a year! This is all the Organized Aid Association asks from good citizens of Plainfield. Organized charity will drive frauds and impostors out of the city. If anyone begs at your door you should decline to act unless the Organized Aid Association has investigated the case. Send every beggar to the office of that association and send two dollars a year to Dr. H. P. Reynolds, the treasurer.

An Ancestor's Party.

A novel meeting is in preparation to be held at the Congregational church on Wednesday evening, December 11th. It will be called an "Ancestor's Party" and every one in the church, whose ancestors came over on the "Mayflower" or were in America at that time, will tell about them.

Harper's Magazine

IN 1896.

Briseis, a new novel by William Black, written with all the author's well-known charm of manner, will begin in the December Number, 1895, and continue until May. A new novel by George du Maurier, entitled The Martian, will also begin during the year. It is not too much to say that no novel has ever been awaited with such great expectation as the successor to Trilby. The Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc will continue and will relate the story of the failure and martyrdom of the Maid of Orleans. Other important fiction of the year will be a novelette by Mark Twain, under the title, Tom Sawyer, Detective; numerous three-part tale called Two Normans from Muddlety, by Langdon Elwyn Mitchell; and short stories by Octave Thanet, Richard Harding Davis, Mary E. Wilkins, Julian Ralph, Brander Matthews, Owen Wister, and other well-known writers.

Prof. Woodrow Wilson, will contribute six papers on George Washington and his times, with illustrations by Howard Pyle. Poultney Bigelow's history of the German Struggle for Liberty, illustrated by Caspar W. Wood ville, will be continued through the winter. Two papers on St. Clair a defeat and Mad Anthony Wayne's victory, by Theodore Roosevelt, with graphic illustrations will be printed during the year.

A noteworthy feature of the MAGAZINE during 1896 will be a series of articles by Caspar W. Whitney, describing his trip of 2,000 miles on snow shoes and with dog-sledge trains into the unexplored Barren Grounds of British North America in pursuit of wood-bison and musk-oxen. Mr. Whitney's series will have the added interest of being illustrated from photographs taken by himself.

The Volumes of the MAGAZINE begin with the Numbers for June and December of each year. When no time is mentioned, subscriptions will begin with the Number current at the time of receipt of order.

Remittances should be made by Post-office Money order or draft, to avoid chance or loss.

WANT A PLACE TO STORE WHEELS.

High School Students Want to Follow the Example of Orange.

The East Orange Board of Education has just completed a building especially designed for storing bicycles ridden by the pupils of the High School. It is a wooden structure, sixteen feet wide and sixty feet long, with racks on both sides and a passageway between for the wheels. Here the wheels are stored during school and when the session is at an end, the janitor unlocks the building and the pupils take their wheels and ride away. This is the first building of its kind ever erected for the storing of pupil's wheels.

A petition signed by all of the riders in the Plainfield High School, of whom there are a number, was sent to the Board of Education several years ago, asking for wheelracks in the cellar or a shed for their wheels, but no definite action was ever taken. During the spring and fall such a building would be very advantageous.

Words, Words, That Is All.

A public discussion of the currency question between A. W. Lightbourne, of The Mail and Express, and E. J. Whitehead, of the Union County Standard, will be held at Westfield December 20th. Mr. Lightbourne will argue for the gold standard and Mr. Whitehead from the Populist standpoint.

Informal Dance.

An informal dance will be given by the junior members of the Park Club, Wednesday evening, Dec. 4th.

Harper's Bazar

IN 1896.

The twenty-ninth year of HARPER'S BAZAR, beginning in January, 1896, finds it maintaining its deserved reputation both as a fashion journal and a weekly periodical for home reading.

Every week the BAZAR presents beautiful bolletnes for various occasions. Sandoz. Baude, and Chapuis illustrate and engrave the newest designs from the finest models in Paris and Berlin. New York Fashions epitomizes current styles in New York. A fortnightly pattern-sheet supplement with diagrams and directions enables women to cut and make their own gowns and is of great value to the professional modiste as well as to the amateur dressmaker. Children's Clothing receives constant attention. Fashions for Men are described in full detail by a man-about-town. Our Paris Letter, by Katharine de Forest, is a sprightly weekly recital of fashion, gossip and social doings in Paris, given by a clever woman in an entertaining way.

Both the serials for 1896 are the work of American women. Mrs. Gerald, by Maria Louise Pool, is a striking story of New England life. Mand E. Wilkins in Jerseys, a Poor Man, discusses the always interesting problems of the relations between labor and capital. Short stories will be written by the best authors.

Special Departments. Music, The Outdoor Woman, Personals, What We Are Doing, Women and Men, report and discuss themes of immediate interest.

American Agriculturist.

An Ideal Farm and Family WEEKLY.

To extend its usefulness and make it a practical necessity to every progressive farmer and his family, the American Agriculturist is now published weekly instead of monthly at

$1.00 A YEAR.

All the leading features that have made the monthly so popular are retained and many new features added; such as general and local market prices, crop reports in their season condensed farm news, and letters among the farmers.

Its Farm Features

Such as Live Stock, Dairying, Horticulture, Poultry, Market Gardening, and other topics, written by Practical and Successful farmers supplemented with illustrations by able artists, continue to make it invaluable to those who "farm it for a living."

The latest markets and commercial agriculture are leading features, in which the Agriculturist is not excelled.

Best is Cheapest.

Every one admits this theoretically, and yet many continue to use inferior articles because they think they save a few cents.

Allcock's Porous Plaster

is the ideal remedy, for lame back, sciatica, pleurisy, rheumatism, pneumonia and similar complaints.

Allcock's Corn Shields.
Allcock's Bunion Shields,
Have no equal as a relief and cure for corns and bunions.

Brandreth's Pills

by purifying the blood assist nature. They are purely vegetable.

Real Estate Prospects Good.

The increasing prosperity and popularity of the new real estate firm of Van Hermerken & Nichols, 153 North avenue, is evident. In conversation with them it was learned that the prospects for a lively market in real estate is very bright, and that a number of Brooklyn and New York people are likely to move here.

On Oyster Eating Championship.

On a wager Harrison Randolph, colored, devoured an oyster stew at Ross's restaurant, Saturday night, in one minute and fifteen seconds.

Harper's Weekly

IN 1896.

HARPER'S WEEKLY is a journal for the whole country. It deals with the events of the world that are important to all Americans.

In carrying out this policy, in 1895, Julian Ralph visited China and Japan and journeyed through the West; Richard Harding Davis took a trip through the Caribbean Sea; the evolutions of the new navy were described and illustrated by Rufus F. Zogbaum; Frederic Remington prepared studies of Army and Frontier life; Poultney Bigelow attended the opening of the Kiel Canal.

In 1896 like attention will be given to every notable happening. The chief events in art, literature and music and the drama will be artistically presented. W. D. Howells, in the new department, Life and Letters, will discuss in his interesting way books and the social questions of the time. E. S. Martin's sprightly gossip of the Busy World will be continued. The progress of the Transportation Commission around the World will be followed, and Caspar W. Whitney will conduct the department of Amateur Sport.

In 1896 will occur a Presidential election. In its editorials and through its political cartoons the WEEKLY will continue to be an independent advocate of good government and sound money.

In fiction the WEEKLY will be especially strong. It will publish the only novel of the year by W. D. Howells and a stirring serial of a Scotch feud by S. R. Crockett. The short stories selected are of unusual excellence and interest. In every respect HARPER'S WEEKLY will maintain its leading place in the illustrated journalism of the world.

The Volumes of the WEEKLY begin with the first Number for January of each year. When no time is mentioned, subscriptions will begin with the Number current at the time of receipt of order.

Proceedings of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union County.

[OFFICIAL.]

Regular meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union, held on Thursday, November 7th, 1895, at 2:30 o'clock p. m.

NEW BUSINESS.

By Freeholder Littell.

Resolved, That no more work be done upon the County bridges without the consent of this Board, and that during the balance of the fiscal year, only such repairs shall be made as are necessary for the preservation of the County property, and the safety of the public.

On motion of Freeholder Woodruff, the resolution was unanimously adopted.

By Freeholder Farrell.

Resolved That the sums appropriated for hospitals be appropriated and divided as follows:

To the Elizabeth General Hospital, $2,000; to the Muhlenberg Hospital, $1,250; to the Alexian Bros Hospital, $750 and that the County Collector be authorized and directed to pay the same immediately.

Freeholder Swain moved the adoption of the resolution, and on roll call it was adopted unanimously.

The communications from the Union Township Board of Health were taken up. Freeholder Littell moved the matter had therefore received consideration from the County Road Committee, he believed the Board of Freeholders would do their full duty in the matter, although he doubted whether the Board had jurisdiction; the said Board of Health had endeavored to have this Board indicted for maintaining the nuisance as alleged, but instead of so doing, the Grand Jury had made a presentment against the Board of Health in the matter.

Freeholder Roll then presented the following resolution:

Resolved, That the County Road Committee, together with Freeholder Woodruff, meet with the Board of Health, of Union Township, upon the ground in Aldene, where the obstruction exists to water flowing through the bridge across North auenue, and that the Clerk of this Board inform said Board of Health that this Committee will meet such Board on Monday, Nov. 11th, 1895 at 2 o'clock, p.m.

On motion of Freeholder Farrell, the resolution was unanimously adopted.

On motion of Freeholder Clark, it was ordered that when this Board adjourn it adjourn to meet on Wednesday, Nov. 13th, 1895 at 2:30 p. m.

On motion of Freeholder Roll it was ordered that the Board, as a Committee of the Whole, inspect the new County Road, leading from Springfield to the Essex County line on Friday, Nov. 8th, members to meet at Keron's stables at 1:30 p. m , on said day.

A Pleasant Evening of Euchre.

The Young People's Euchre Club, of Dunellen and North Plainfield, met Friday evening at the home of the Misses Barrett, of North Plainfield. The evening passed away very pleasantly and after the game was finished the young people danced and enjoyed the dainty refreshments that were served. The winners of the first prizes were Miss Sallie Gray and Charles Boice. Miss Emma Marlow and Thos. Barrett secured the second prizes. The consolation prizes were won by Miss Jessie Haynes and Mr. Martin.

Death of Mrs. Halligan.

Mrs. James Halligan, nee Laura Rosell, who formerly lived in Plainfield, died at her home in Brooklyn on Saturday evening. She leaves a husband, but no children.

Funeral services Tuesday evening, at eight o'clock, 674 De Graw street. Interment in Evergreen cemetery, this city, Wednesday.

Thirty-eight white men have been lynched in the United States during the past seven months. Three have been murdered in Union county, but none of their assailants hung.

GROWS BETTER BY TIME.

THE FIREMEN'S FAIR PROVIDES AMUSEMENT FOR EVERY ONE.

It Is For a Worthy Set of Plainfield Servants and Should be Well Patronized—Some of the Side Attractions Described.

Another night of festivity was held at the Columbia Cycle Academy and another good sized audience gathered there to see the dances arranged for the Firemen's Fair. The programme was somewhat different from the previous night, and the popular Firemen's Drill was not given. One night on the stage seemed to have improved the other dancers though, and there was scarcely a noticeable mistake during the entire programme. The "Perle Andalusia," danced by Miss Lizzie Day, was especially good.

After the entertainment had come to an end, the different booths were visited, while a detail of firemen cleared the floor for dancing. There was also considerable interest shown over the contest for the most popular fireman. A handsome silver trumpet goes to the one receiving the most votes, so a lively contest may be looked for before the week is over. At the grocery booth there is an immense pumpkin which goes to the one making the closest guess as to the number of beans in a jar which stands by the pumpkin. A large and handsome doll also goes to the one guessing her name.

"Thorma" is well worth a visit and her tent was well patronized. There she sits in a swing, apparently cut off at the waist, talks and answers questions, while the exhibitor passes a cane around her to show that there is no body hidden there. The illusion is certainly a very good one. Another thing that is exhibited in this tent is a magic pillory which has a very uncanny way of releasing its prisoners without being unlocked. These two illusions were under the management of Wilbur Sherwood, one of Plainfield's firemen.

Orchestra was under the direction of Prof. Guttman, while Miss Katherine Quinn acted as pianist and Miss Quinn as solo violinist. The medium light effects were under the charge of Prof. S. H. Hawkridge, of Steven's Institute.

The grate to the large furnace came to grief yesterday and could not be replaced in time for last evening's performance, which accounted for the chilly condition of the hall. It will be all right for this evening, however, and the hall will be properly heated.

Although the attendance has been good at both performances, it is not what the firemen deserve and Plainfield people should make it a point to give their splendid fire department all their support.

Gruesome to Think Of.

A prominent borough woman, learning of the recent discovery of the skeletons on Stelle avenue, told a friend a few days ago that it brought to her mind what she believed was a correct story of the case in question. She said that when she was a small girl Priest Wooden, who was a prominent man in this vicinity at that time, told her that many years ago three men were arrested and convicted of some infamous crime. They were taken to the place on Stelle avenue and hung to the oak tree, after which they were buried near by where the skeletons were found a few day ago. She says the story was vividly brought to her mind and she has no doubt but what it is perfectly true.

Points for Advertisers.

A small audience assembled in the Y. M. C. A. hall last evening and enjoyed the novel entertainment, "Art in Advertising," which was certainly deserving of a much larger attendance. The stereopticon was under the charge of the Plainfield Camera Club and the pictures were very enjoyable. Quite a number attended the interesting exhibition of posters and bills in the afternoon, and before the entertainment began, the entire audience visited the exhibition.

I always recommend it, and have frequently administered it to my guests in the hotel, and in every case it has proven itself worthy of unqualified endorsement. DEFINITE PURPOSES AND AIMS.

Rev. Dr. Ryman Talks Practically to the Young People.

Dr. Ryman, of Elizabeth, gave a talk at the Monroe Avenue chapel last Tuesday on the subject "Men for the Times." Those who have heard this eminent speaker need not be told that the occasion was one of rare treat for all present. His talk was chiefly about the qualities that should constitute a man for the times. He said that a man should have a definite purpose and aim, and to illustrate the idea compared a bee and a butterfly. The former always made a dive for the first flower in sight, while the butterfly would ascend in the air and make numerous circles without knowing where it was going to. Some of the essential qualities spoken of were self-reliance, courage, seriousness and integrity.

There are some people who would have an injunction served on a singing bird if they could find a judge serious enough to serve it. We want to be serious, but not too much so.

Henry Clay once said that he would sooner be right than president, and that is the spirit we should all have. We want men possessing qualities that are going to make the world better instead of worse. In connection with a recent Democratic meeting a clergyman was called upon to open the exercises with prayer. He prayed that the Democrats might all hang together, with one accord, when a man in the audience exclaimed "Amen, any kind of a cord will do." Dr. Ryman closed by urging all to live in a way that would make useful men and women of each one.

Look Out for This Scamp.

Several of Plainfield's citizens have recently been victimized by a man who repairs carpet-sweepers and wringing machines. His plan is to call at houses, get the broken wring r or sweeper and repairs them in a very satisfactory manner, charging a reasonable amount for his services. In a few days after you have paid him he calls again and tells you that a small piece of the machine is either missing or needs further attention and asks permission to take the wringer or sweeper away for an hour or two. You grant his request, of course, and he takes the machine and you never see him again. P. P. Van-Arsdale, of 201 East Front street, is his latest victim and he asks The Press, the people's paper, to warn the public against this latest swindler. He wrote an exposure of the affair and asked The News to publish it, but they refused to publish his article.

John Mullins's Furniture Display.

The large stock of furniture now being displayed at the warerooms of John Mullins, of 218 and 220 Market street, Newark, N. J., is the handsomest ever offered by this well-known furniture establishment. Here one can purchase everything necessary for housekeeping, and homes can be furnished complete on the easiest terms of credit. Especial attention is called to this large and varied stock of parlor suits, chamber suits, carpets, rugs, dining-room furniture, plush chairs and rockers, fancy parlor tables, cabinets, bookcases, lamps, clocks, etc., suitable for holiday gifts; all useful as well as ornamental, and at prices that appeal to every economical buyer.

G. A. R. Officers Elected.

Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G.A.R., elected the following officers last evening to serve for the ensuing year: Commander, I. L. McVoy; senior vice-commander, F. M. Whitely; junior vice commander, W. R. Moore; quartermaster, Andrew Cox; surgeon, Wm. Hand; chaplain, J. A. Goodwin; officer of the day, W. C. Smith, Sr.; officer of the guard, S. C. Terry, Sr.; council of administration, J. E. Stewart, Wm. Hand, Charles Graves, W. C. Smith, Sr.; delegate to department encampment, Andrew Cox, J. N. Bogart; alternates, F. M. Whitely, Christopher Harden.

Masons Elect.

The annual election of officers of Anchor Lodge, No. 149, F. and A. M., was held last evening. Those elected were: C. C. Howard, W. M.; W. A. Coddington, S. W.; J. E. McClintock, J. W.; J. E. Turrill, treasurer; T. A. Rogers, secretary; trustees, W. A. Freeman, H. R. Knox, P. A. Emmons; Masonic Hall representative, J. A. Smith; alternate to Grand Lodge, L. Dennis.

Important Matter to be Considered.

Unity Lodge, 102, K. of P. at their meeting on Tuesday night, in the Babcock building, will confer the first and second ranks on two candidates. An important matter will be considered and members are requested to be present on that occasion.

UNCERTAINTIES OF THIS LIFE.

DR. YERKES DRAWS CONSOLING THOUGHTS FOR THE AFFLICTED.

His Remarks at the Funeral Services of George C. Godown Listened to By a Large Concourse of Relatives and Friends.

The funeral services of the late George C. Godown, which were held from the home of his parents, 402 Central avenue, Tuesday afternoon, were exceedingly impressive and largely attended by relatives and friends. The silent form of the departed was as though but asleep, while surrounding the casket were several tributes of beautiful flowers. One, a very large pillow of flowers, bore the inscription "At Rest, U. S. M. Service." It was given by the postoffice employes and was a tribute of loving remembrance to their friend.

Postmaster Hetfield, together with the letter-carrier and clerks, attended in a body.

The service was conducted by Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes who read several appropriate Scripture selections, after which he spoke in part as follows:

We live in this world as we always intended to. For the present world was to be our perpetual home we could scarcely be more intent on our possessions than now.

These days of ours are but few, for man's days are but as grass. When a child dies we are inclined to think that it is premature. How easily this friend of ours has left us, but then it is very easy for death to come. Life is the commonest thing we possess and yet we wouldn't try to prove it logically. The elements of death show themselves quickly. It is a war where there is no discharge. We must meet this last battle, but while these things are all so, there are so many uncertainties. We don't know what a day may bring forth. Tomorrow may be worse or better than we think. We are all living in a vain show, but we don't know how long we may live.

It may be a cold northwest wind after a warm southwest one that will take us off. How we live and what we are should concern us. If we are going to die the death of the righteous, we surely must the life of one, and we must be ready for the crucial moment. Little did we think our friend would die so soon. We are now looking on his cold face and speaking words of comfort.

I have known him many years. He entered life's battles under great difficulties. His head was stronger than his body, but he worked his way and had a purpose. He took his place and did his work well. He was a young man possessing strict conscientious principles and reliability, and had he been blessed with a strong body he no doubt would have been among the greatest thinkers of his time and would have stood high. He possessed sublime qualities, honesty of purpose, and his associates here present have something to remember him by. He was honored and worthy of honor. His qualities were rooted and grounded into a profound respect for God, righteousness and mercy.

May God speak to us all at this time. Speaking to the body of men present he said, one has dropped out of your ranks, and more will follow. May a Godly life engage your thoughts and teach you to seek first the Kingdom of God. The doctor closed with an affecting and consoling prayer for the bereaved parents and relatives.

The body was taken to Sandy Ridge this morning for burial. Those acting as pall-bearers in this city were A. W. Demarest, Edward Pope, John H. Tier, William Tier and the following were the bearers at Sandy Ridge: Caleb Dickinson, Judson Voorhees, Samuel Wallace and Foreman Godown.

Boys Eat and Drill.

There were thirty-two boys in attendance at the meeting of the Boys Brigade in the First Baptist church last evening. A supper was served at 6:30 and at 7:30 a short programme, consisting of whistling solos by C. M. Evans and vocal solos by L. H. Biglow, Jr., were enjoyed, after which Mr. Biglow put the boys through an exhibition drill.

HAVE NECESSARY EVIDENCE.

BOROUGH BOARD OF HEALTH READY TO STOP THE BROOK POLLUTION.

Evidence Secured by ex-Marshal William Pangborn in a Most Novel and Successful Manner—How He Accomplished It.

For the past two or three week ex-Marshal William Pangborn, of the borough, has been quietly gathering evidence for the borough Board of Health to prosecute such people as have connections with the North avenue sewer, which has caused so much trouble by polluting Green brook. One of the things which the board had to contend with in the endeavor to suppress the nuisance was to know positively who emptied sewage into the pipes.

Mr. Pangborn was employed to ferret out these facts, and has done it in a remarkably novel and successful manner. He visited every building along the line of the sewer where he knew or suspicioned had connections, and carried a bottle of alkaline, which he poured into the water closet. He then went to the outlet of the sewer and awaited until evidence of the liquid appeared.

He visited but one place at a time and never used the same colored liquid that he had operated with on the few preceding tests, thus obviating the possibility of getting two tests mixed. He has kept a record of the places he visited, the color of the alkaline that he used and the number of minutes it took to pass from the building to the outlet of the sewer.

This evidence will be placed in Borough Counsel Reed's possession and with it he will endeavor to procure injunctions against all property owners who have been found by the test to have connections with the sewer.

It is understood that they will be served next week.

WILLIAM D. HOWELLS A GUEST.

The Noted Man of Letters Attend a Reception at The Gables.

The coming and going yesterday of many guest-laden carriages before "The Gables," the spacious and beautiful home of Augustus D. Shepard at Fanwood, were the outside tokens of the second "At Home" of Mrs. A. D. Shephard and Miss Shephard, following the reception given November 2 th.

Within doors, the genial hostess and charming debutante welcomed a host of friends, who echoed many pleasant greetings supplementary to the reception. Mrs. Shephard and Miss Shephard were assisted in dispensing hospitalities by Miss Meade, a sister of Mrs. Shephard, Mrs. John Doull Miller, the elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Shepard, at the chocolate table, Mrs. J. Kirtland Myers, at the tea table, and Misses Edith Smalley, Anna Miller and Emma S hoonmaker. Masses of chrysanthemums were the decorations. Among the guests, the genial face of William Dean Howells the distinguished author, was pleasant to look upon, and his share in the chat was pleasant to hear.

FREEHILL'S HEAVY SENTENCE.

He Receives Ten Years and Must Pay a Fine of $1,000.

In court at Elizabeth Wednesday, Frank Freehill, who was convicted of manslaughter for murdering Officer Jewell, of Rahway, was sentenced to ten years imprisonment and to pay a fine of $1,000. This was the heaviest penalty that could be imposed. The court reviewed the case and stated that it was owing to the great efforts of counsel for the prisoner that he was saved from the death penalty. The court declared that the counsel had added laurels to their fame.

J. C. Whiting Receives a Call.

Assistant Secretary John C. Whiting, of the Y. M. C. A., has received a call to the general secretaryship of the Westfield Young Men's Christian Association. For about a year the Westfield association has been in existence, but without a general secretary. Reorganization is now in progress, and the work of the secretary will be a responsible one. The call has been accepted, and Mr. Whiting will begin his work at Westfield in a few days.

When most needed it is not unusual for your family physician to be away from home. Such was the experience of Mr. J. Y. Schenck, editor of the Caddo, Ind. Ter., Banner, when his little girl, two years of age was threatened with a severe attack of croup. He says: "My wife insisted that I go for the doctor, but as our family physician was out of town I purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, which relieved her immediately. I will not be without it in the future." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Reynolds' Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

TALKING FOR MISSIONS.

Enthusiastic Meeting of Workers in the Borough Yesterday.

A special meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Church of the Redeemer was held in the latter church Tuesday afternoon at three o'clock and was quite largely attended.

Among the speakers were Miss Emery, of New York, who spoke of the Woman's Auxiliary as a whole, and the need of every woman as a member of the church considering herself, therefore, a missionary. She urged a united offering, and stated that $56 000 was reported at the last triennial meeting held at Boston as having been raised during the past year.

Mrs. White, of Elizabeth, gave a very interesting talk on Japan and the self-sacrifice of the people in that country. She illustrated her remarks by giving incidents of the self-sacrifice among the girls of the school in Tokio.

Mrs. Williamson, of Elizabeth, spoke of the need of work among the Freedmen and of the necessity of helping them to be self-supporting. She placed the needs of the New Jersey Missionary before the members in very impressive manner, urging them to give more liberally to the cause of Christ. She said they could easily do it by not going to New York quite so often, paying a little less for a bonnet or dress, or attending the opera less frequent.

The remarks of the three speakers were highly instructive and attentively listened to.

At the close, Rev. Jocelyn Johnstone, who presided, made an earnest plea for a large collection with the result of securing $1.35.

The women served tea in the Sunday school room at the close of the meeting, and the rest of the time was enjoyed in social intercourse.

THE BALANCE OF POWER.

It Comes From a Jealousy of the Eastern Nations.

Dr. James F. Riggs' third lecture of the University Extension course on the Eastern Question, was delivered last night in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church, before a large and deeply interested audience.

The subject of the lecture was "The Balance of Power in the Orient," and Dr. Riggs said in part as follows: The question of the balance of power comes from the jealousy of the nations; it is the quarreling of the nations that makes the whole Eastern Question.

In the west, there were three barriers to be broken through before modern civilization could be secured: The Holy Roman Empire, the power of the Popes, and the power of the Barbon kings. In the east there were two only, viz., the power of the Turks and the power of the Isar. Europe combined her forces against the Turks in 1571, and there was a like coalition against Russia in 1853. Russia grew both by expansion and conquest. In 1708 the country was invaded by Charles XII, of Sweden, who had hitherto been successful in war against Russia. But he was disastrously defeated by Peter the Great at Poltowa, and after this time Russia steadily progressed.

In 1762 Catherine II entered St. Petersburg in solemn state as Empress. She was a remarkable woman, though utterly devoid of conscience. During her administration came the dismemberment of Poland. Imperial instinct now sought Constantinople. The way was clear for encroachments on the Ottoman Empire. Sweden and Poland had been disposed of, and the whole weight of the empire could now be hurled upon the Turks. Catherine died suddenly in 1796, so that the struggle was postponed half a century, the Crimean War occurring in 1853-56.

HOLY CROSS CHURCH OBJECTED.

They Protest Against the Church of the Redeemer Building Near Them.

The rector, wardens and vestrymen of the Church of the Redeemer a month ago applied to Bishop Scarborough and the standing committee of the diocese of New Jersey, for permission to erect a church at the junction of Willow and Myrtle avenues in North Plainfield, as no Episcopal church building can be legally erected without their consent. The petition was considered at the regular quarterly meeting on Monday and refused, for the reason that the location is too near the Church of the Holy Cross.

John Saunders, brother of Policeman Saunders, died last evening after a lingering illness from typhoid fever, at his home on Berckman street. Funeral services will be held Friday from the house at 2 o'clock, and the Mt. Olive church at 2:30.

MEN LEAD IN SOCIAL IMPURITY

CAUSTIC OBSERVATIONS OF REV. A. H. LEWIS ON SOCIAL EVILS.

The Man Furnishes the Money Which Puts a Commercial Value on Evil—Ideal Fatherhood Begun in Physical Life.

The following is an abstract from the address of Rev. A. H. Lewis, of this city, on Tuesday before the Social Purity Congress at Boston on "The Sacredness of Fatherhood."

Men lead in social impurity. They furnish the money which creates the commercial power of this evil. Enough will be offered upon the altar of lust in this city tonight to build many churches and relieve thousands who are in distress. The fires of lust turn the forces which belong to pure fatherhood, to bitterness and ashes. Because of these things this theme is pertinent to the occasion, and I must speak with such plainness and earnestness as the time demands.

The world puts great price on fatherhood. In horses, cattle, dogs and chickens. Many men seem to care more for such fatherhood than they do for their own divinely-ordained powers and mission. And yet these men will demand the highest standard of womanly purity when they seek a wife.

We have "fallen men" and "fallen women." There are at least three "fallen men" to every fallen woman, and they should be classed as "prostitutes" along with the women. Many times in the institution of "The Sacredness of Fatherhood" cries out against such shame and stain on manhood.

It is a Divine gift by which each man may become a subordinate creator, under God; a creator, not of animals for today, but of immortals for all time. Man and woman are united to perpetuate the work which he alone could begin. Man's creatorship involves body and soul; all being and all destiny. No one generation stands alone.

Ideal fatherhood, such as the dawn of the twentieth century ought to see, begins with perfected physical life. To be valuable for fatherhood, a horse must be a "magnificent animal." So must a man. This is especially true as to everything which touches that form of life we call "nervous force." Whatever impairs this under-life defiles fatherhood. Hence the shame and sin of bestial lust. Hence the crime of men against themselves and their children, in the use of alcohol, tobacco, and all like poisons; the wickedness of placing the pleasures of an animal indulgence over against the demands of fatherhood. Men have you ever thought how those who sell morals must abound in indecent pictures; why the cigarette which is corrupting the fountains of fatherhood in our boys sets a commercial value on lust-provoking pictures? Think of it.

Judged by the highest law, the lust-indulging man has no right to become a father. He has no right to usher another soul into life, when no sooner before he begins to put on the crown of manhood, and to take part with God the Everlasting in the work of creation; then the angel who records the sins of the men of the universe places his name among those who have entered the sacred temple of "Fatherhood."

PROGRESSIVE WOMEN.

They Listen to an Address by a Leading Brooklyn Woman.

The regular meeting of the Study Class, carried on by the Alliance of Unitarian and Other Liberal Women, was held in the lecture room of All Souls church yesterday afternoon. A business session was held first. A report of the last meeting was read and then Miss Reynolds gave an account of the postal mission which she conducts. E. R. Leonard then read the religious news report.

Mrs. Charles T. Cattin, a prominent member of the Brooklyn Women's Club, was then introduced and read a paper on "Self Culture and Self Sacrifice," as typically represented by Margaret Fuller and Sister Dora. She took Margaret Fuller as an example of self culture and spoke of her as the finest example of a literary woman in America. Her history was briefly and interesting told, and her wonderful literary powers described. Sister Dora was next discussed, and the difference between her and Margaret Fuller compared to the difference between their homes, Old England and New England. Sister Dora's wonderful career was also described and described with feeling, and her dominating influence and its effects spoken of. A general informal discussion followed.

A Cold Ducking.

While skating on a little pond near Rockview avenue Saturday, Miss May Parmalee, of Plainfield avenue, broke through the ice into the water up to her waist. Her companion, Miss Katherine Dwight, of Rockview avenue, escaped with a slight wetting.

The wife of Mr. D. Robinson, a prominent lumberman of Hartwick, N. Y., was sick with rheumatism for five months. In speaking of it, Mr. Robinson says: "Chamberlain's Pain Balm is the only thing that gave her any rest from pain. For the relief of pain it cannot be beat." Many very bad cases of rheumatism have been cured by it. For sale at 50 cents per bottle by Reynolds' Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

YAP'S DUCK DINNER.

HOW A HOSPITABLE CHINAMAN ENTERTAINED FRIENDS.

A Queer Building With Dingy Placarded Walls—A Host Who Condemns His Own Table—The Chinese Method of Cooking a Duck Explained.

"Did you ever eat boiled duck cooked a la Chinois with noodles and string beans?" asked Mr. B. P. Tasker, the rectifier, of a seeker for information. "I have been invited to dine with Yap Wing, at 217 South Eighth street, to go there and partake, and you ought to try it." Colonel Wing's restaurant is inside a dingy brick sarcophagus that reminds one of those brick graves they build for aristocrats at the cemeteries for $50 each. One reaches it up a paley stricken stairway, and as one walks at the door he cannot help but be confronted with a number of placards with Chinese characters in black on a red ground. Translated they mean as follows:

"The house of the eight benevolences will tonight provide inferior duck badly boiled and seasoned with unworthy curry, together with such willed and cheap bought vegetables as may be required by those who honor its unworthiness with their presence. The extravagant price of this inferior repast will be 35 cents in American money."

Beside it was another:

"The negro woman Matta in the alley behind the singing place is a thief. Now she has stolen $8 from Fong Plung. The sagacious will avoid this black woman."

Some of the placards are wholly unprintable and dingily libelous. Some were of a light and frivolous character. Some were advertisements, pure and simple. Some were humorously written love moments and exposed that all might see.

There are also some galling allusions to the police and Celestial critiques on the municipal government. Before the interpreter could work through the lot Yap Wing had the little party under his hospitable wing and was marshaling it into the restaurant.

"No gooda reada Chinaman write," he said. "Chinaman write when he got mad. You come eat duck. 'F's vera bad duck tonight. Not fit to eat. Wife 'S's vera bad curry. S's evything rotten, but you try him, and then you damn Yap Wing, and you sellY you ever see him chetch!"

"This means," Mr. Tasker whispered, "that Yap has an especially good duck for us and that all other things are out of sight. It is the Chinese way. It is politeness."

The eating room is a little below the level of Hop alley. It is scrupulously clean and tastefully bare. At the table where the present party was to sit were grouped a number of chairs. A spotless linen cloth covered it, and quaint china dishes and cups and others in the rear factory were eating off delft and tin, and they sat on benches. The "high place in the corner" had two lamps, the other tables shared one.

When the guests were seated, a cooly came in with a large tray that he set before Yap Wing and uncovered. It held the duck on it, and to Caucasian eyes that duck did not look like it had ever been cooked at all. The skin had the fresh appearance of the market place. The other dishes came on quickly. There was some kind of a ragout. There were string beans, tomatoes and what one would take to be a stew, although it was really a cabbage omelet.

The host stuck his fork into the breast of the duck and began the carving as we do, he began slicing right through the fowl, turning off flake after flake as though it had been so much sausage.

"Why, you don't eat a duck like that?" queried a startled guest, who had never seen a bird cut crossways before.

"Him vera bad duck," Wing stated. "You try him." The portion that looked like a chicken croquette bound in skin was put on the plate, with a spoonful of noodles and a dash of sauce. The other vegetables were added, and the guest, clumsily adjusting his chopsticks, began to work. The beauty about chopsticks is that you can use them as a fork once you get a piece of meat cornered where it cannot elude you. Until then you have exercise and all the pleasures of the chase. But the duck once won was worth winning. It was heavy with curry and red peppers, so that it was a shade too hot for an unaccustomed palate, but it melted in the mouth, ducklin and the rice and the noodles seemed to fit it exactly.

"Explain the way you do it, Mr. Wing," one asked. "What has become of the bones?"

"Sis ver poor duck," said Mr. Wing complacently, "but I tell you. When Chinaman buy duck, he buy him alive, so he can kill right. He hang duck in cellar and cut he throat, so he bleed plenty. Then he scald duck, so him feathels come off. Then he skin duck and save skin, so he one piece. Then he take duck and cut him into little bits of pieces and he no cut bones, but put them in pot for boil. When he choppee, choppee duck so he small little bits of meat, Chinaman take rice and take curry and take noodle and put 'em all in pot for boil—see you. Then he take duck skin and piece of duck's gut and needle and he sew up that skin where he have cut him, only leave one big hole for stuff him. Then the meat is boil, he take it and cram and cram that duck skin till blimeby that skin he chock full of duck and rice and noodle and curry. Then he sew up that big hole what he stuff him by and put him in pot for boil a minute more, and when he not bad duck like this him vera good. He look like duck what get bones in him, but he just boil duck."

"But you can't get all the duck back into the skin, can you?"

"Oh, no, Chinaman not try. That rest of that duck we boil in other pot with bones and more rice, and we sell him 10 cents a bucket. Plenty people buy."

And this was true. While the little supper was being eaten at least half a dozen people came in, bought a bucketful of the mess—and it was nice mess—and went on their way rejoicing.

The other comestibles were much like the American preparations except the cabbage omelet, which was indescribable and also inedible. The tea was served in transparent porcelain without sugar or cream, but with a few drops of what tasted like brandy in it. This was also unusual to the United States palate—the combination, that is. Finally came a great tray of fruit, consisting of candied ginger, melon ripd, some queer looking pears and some more ten—this time without the brandy—and the meal was finished.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

HUNTING IN NEPAUL.

CH ELEPHANTS MOUNTED, SPORTSMEN BEAT FOR TIGERS.

Other Game, Some Large, Some Small, Is Taken Before the Main Object of the Hunt Is Found—How a Tiger Acts When Wounded—A Frightened Elephant.

By 10 o'clock our howdah elephants are marshaled before the tents, and we mount and stow away our paraphernalia of guns, rifles, ammunition, waterskin, tea bottle, a book perhaps, a gigantic double lined umbrella to be held over us by the attendant in the back seat and a native blanket, folded as a cushion now, but to be unfolded and thrown around us should the wild ones attack. That is the simple kit of him who cares not for luxuries. Half a mile from our camp we enter a stretch of grass in which it would be hopeless to look for tigers, and our 40 elephants are ranged in line in order to beat for game of a less ambitious kind. The order to advance is given, and I sound on a dog whistle the signal of "general shooting." The mahouts, thoroughly alive to the fact that tigers are not likely to present themselves, keep their beasts in rank so regular that the likely game for our shall be passed unbeaten, and we are off.

Now from one howdah, now from another, anon from two or three howdahs simultaneously, guns and rifles are fired as birds and beasts rise or break before us. Now falls a black partridge, now a peacock comes to earth in the harsh panply of gorgeous plumage, now a hog deer or a cheetul dies, and so our death dealing line moves on, broken only when, for a few minutes, we halt perhaps to put a stop to a pig or other game too heavy to be lifted by the elephant's trunk, and handed—or thunked—to the mahout for safe keeping in a bag. Other things fall in this improvised battue—swamp partridges (incorrectly styled chikore), hares, and, raised out of a bit of marshy ground, a snipe. This latter is considered by the native official for our commissariat, and especially for the standing steward, an insignificant by comparison with a splendidly horned antelope. That gives a thrill to our bag that outshines all else. The killing of that noble stag is a fortunate accident as a rule, not a merit, for, unlike marily the sambhur only exhibits himself when the shikari, being directed to reserve his fire for tiger, may not shoot him.

We have hardly fairly well in that strip of grass and now proceed to beat the dry course of a forest stream, in some parts of which there is cover of grass below a shade forest overhanging trees. Here we may, with luck and proper strategy, rouse a tiger; consequently more careful tactics have to be adopted. Three of our finest guns are left to "stop" to any transgress up the nullah, whitherward they make their way by forest routes; one remains at the mouth of the nullah bed, he being flanked on either hand by beating elephants that shall keep such line as circumstances and the mahouts' sense of "proper distance apart"—may permit. Upon all is laid the injunction that there shall be no shot fired save at tiger, panther or bear.

So for some three furlongs the main line wends its way up and along either bank of the nullah, while the stops move forward to beat the driven quarry. Some of the smaller denizens of the woodland pices or runs unassailed by him who holds the pass. Still for many minutes is the silence unbroken save by the report of a gun or other sound, save those which the heavy footed elephants evolve. Suddenly Motimohul, the howdah bearing behemoth on the right, dashes her trunk against the ground with resounding noise and forth from out of a dense grass patch a tiger dashes, is seen in time and sorely wounded in the nullah's bank.

Untouched by bullet, that tiger might have disappeared in the leagues of forests that harbored him, but on three sides of being hit, in turns in its course and springs upon the elephant in the nullah bed some feet below it, reaches the pad and clings there.

Now, if that elephant would but stand for a matter of ten seconds the tiger would receive its coup de grace from him who dwells in the howdah. But the intelligence of Motimohul does not grasp the situation. It only rises to the occasion sufficiently to move her to do that which, under the circumstances, is the worst thing to be done. She curls her trunk up to set that out of she way of a tiger that is nowhere within reach of it and bolts blindly. The tiger stops to the ground, shaken and doubtless puzzled, and the curtain drops on act 1.

Fortunately a tiger badly hit is generally a tiger bagged, and this one is in that case. Motimohul is pulled up in something within a quarter of a mile, after several ineffectual efforts to smash her howdah against the trees. The line of elephants, which has broken up in disorder, is rallied, the stops come in from the front, and we, with such orderly arrangement that no other tiger can break out the cover of the nullah and its banks with scrupulous attention to every thicket that may hold that tiger. By dint of much forcible language in the vernacular of a country that has a peculiar potency of vocabulary, by dint of lavish promise of backsheesh as well, our mahouts do their duty to some extent—and with success. The tiger rises from out of its grassy refuge, roars and charges—to fall, pierced by half a dozen bullets, dead. For a second time it had come home to one of our elephants.

Hurrah! We do not shout thus wise, for we are Englishmen and not emotional. Moreover, we have done our day for ejaculation, but we are glad at heart that this splendid creature has been given into our hands, and cheerily we settle down to an early tiffin while the tiger is being pad ded.—Saturday Review.

The Oldest Herbarium.

The oldest herbarium in the world is that in the Museum Egyptologie at Cairo. It consists of an inconspicuous collection of dried plants and vegetables, taken from wreaths and garlands found buried with mummies. These flowers and plants were doubtless placed in the tombs of the dead by loving friends and relatives. THE MULES WERE FRACTIOUS

WILLIAM DALTON, THEIR DRIVER, DRAGGED FOR THIRTY YARDS.

He Pluckily Held On, But Suffered a Rupture of His Leg as a Consequence—Taken to Dr. Clawson's Office.

Wm. Dalton, an employe of W. O. Baldwin, of West Front street, met with a painful accident last evening while returning from Newark with a team of mules and an empty hay wagon. Dalton was under the influence of liquor and had considerable trouble in driving. When near Scotch Plains the reins in some way became tangled, and the mules in consequence were frightened and started to run away. Dalton was thrown out, but still kept hold of the reins. After having been dragged about ninety feet he succeeded in bringing the mules to a standstill. When he got in the wagon he felt very sore and was not able to ascertain the extent of his injuries till he reached Plainfield. He was met by Fred Bowden, of the Daily Press office, who assisted him to Dr. Clawson's office on East Front street. The latter made an examination and learned that beside suffering from a hip disease the left leg had been ruptured. The doctor bandaged the leg and administered the proper treatment. In the meantime the mules and wagon were found by Officer Frederickson, but he did not know where the driver was. He recognized the rig as belonging to Mr. Baldwin, and meeting a young man named Grannatt sent him to Baldwin's house to notify him of the affair. In a little while Dalton appeared with Mr. Baldwin and the latter assisted him in getting into the wagon, and then drove him part way home, when Mr. Baldwin met them and took charge.

FAIR AT MT. OLIVE CHURCH.

Raising Money for the Charitable Side of the Church.

The Sewing Circle of the Mt. Olive Baptist church gave a concert in the church last evening which was successfully rendered before a good-sized audience. The programme was as follows: Song, "When Other Hearts," Miss Georgia Hamilton; Song, Miss Ethel Johnson; Song, "Pretty Girl," Miss Cornelia Jenkins; Recitation, "Parting My Love," Miss Virgie Smith; Song, "Maggie Mooney," Misses Booker and Cohen; Recitation, "Uncle John;" Miss Julia Burton; Vocal solo by Rev. P. S. Gibson; Dialogue by Miss Hamilton, Miss Sattler, Miss Johnson, C. Henry and J. Miller; Vocal duet, Charles Henry and Alfred White; Solo and chorus, "Sunshine of Paradise," Miss Jenkins and company.

After the entertainment a fair was held in the basement and was largely attended. The principal things on on sale were fancy articles and refreshments

The following are those who had charge of the affair: Miss L. Reed, Miss M. Bolden, Mrs. F. Scott, Mrs. P. H. Brown, Mrs. L. M. Field, Mrs. M. Johnson, Miss K. Jackson, Mrs. L. Jones, Miss H. Randolph, Mrs. P. Jackson and Mrs. L. Jefferson.

The fair will be continued this and tomorrow evenings.

OFFICERS OF THE CLASS OF '96.

High School Students Elect Their Safety Officers.

The Class of '96 of the High School held its regular monthly business meeting in the school building yesterday afternoon. The meeting was called to order by Miss Grace E. Overton, the Vice-President of the class last year. The first business brought before the class was the election of officers. Charles Noble and Charles M. Dolliver were appointed judge and teller of the election.

The following officers were elected: President, Wilbur F. Cornwell; vice-president, Miss Grace E. Overton; secretary and treasurer, Charles Noble; historian, Miss Bessie Cahoone; orator, Henry Eggerding; poet, Charles M. Dolliver; prophet, Miss Sallie Swayze; artist, Miss Hattie King.

It was decided to hold the class spread on Thursday evening, December 19th.

The following committees were appointed: Committee on arangements, Miss Bessie Cahoone, chairman, Miss Hattie King and Miss Carl; committee to arrange the toasts, dinner cards, etc. Charles Noble, chairman, Miss Grace E. Overton, Henry Eggerding. Miss Bowman and Herbert L. Richardson; finance committee. Volney F. Green, chairman, Miss Mildred Titsworth and Miss Clyde Burnett; decorating committee, Miss Mamie Steiner, chairman, Miss Julia Bourgeois, Miss Mary Hull, Messrs. Wilbur F. Cornwell, Henry Eggerding, Fred Squires, Charles Squires, Raymond Carroll, Charles Dolliver, V. F. Green, Fred C. Haskill, Charles Noble, Herbert L. Richardson, J. H. Craig, F. Layat and Alden Wagner.

BOTH MEN FREED.

Willibald and Donovan Discharged in Court of Common Pleas.

Two cases came up in the Union County Court of Common Pleas at Elizabeth this morning and in both the prisoners were men from Plainfield. Judge Rice presided.

The first was that of Fred Willibald, who was arrested several weeks ago on the charge of grand larceny. The facts of the case were told in The Daily Press at the time, how Michael O'Keefe went into Goff's saloon and got a drink of beer and then went home to find out later that the two $50 bills he had had in his pocket were gone. The same night Willibald flourished two $50 bills about. The witnesses for the prosecution were Michael O'Keefe, Thomas O'Keefe, John Newman, Chief-of-Police Grant and Chief-of-Detectives Keron. The only witness for the defense was the defendant himself. Willibald's story was that he found two $50 bills near an electric light in front of Goff's saloon while he was cleaning a cuspidor.

The testimony was denied by Newman and T. O'Keefe who said that Willibald had shown them the money and told them that he found it in the saloon. After being cross-examined they finally acknowledged that Willibald said he found it out of doors.

Willibald was represented in the case by Judge W. A. Coddington, whose cross-examination was very searching. After the testimony had all been given, Judge Coddington claimed that there was no evidence that Willibald did not find the bills and that the State had failed to make its case as it hadn't proved the identity of the two $50 bills.

The Court agreed with Judge Coddington and discharged the prisoner. There was quite a scene when Willibald's mother, who was present, heard the verdict. Her thankfulness to Judge Coddington was quite pathetic.

Frank T. Dunn, deputy prosecutor, represented the State and was assisted by Judge-elect George W. DeMeza.

The other case on the State against James Dunavan. Judge W. A. Coddington was assigned to the defence by the State and George W. DeMeza was retained by Dunavan. About two weeks ago Officer Cooney heard glass breaking on Madison avenue and saw a man trying to climb into the little tailor shop of A. Wolf. Cooney fired at him as he ran and and fired again when he jumped over the fence. At the trial Cooney testified very positively that the man who escaped was Dunavan. A report of the shots was found on the spot, but it was too big for Dunavan and a pocket knife was also found, but it could not be proved to be the property of Dunavan.

Judge Coddington proved an alibi for the prisoner, as John McCann testified that he saw Dunavan go to his home on West Third street, and his mother went into his room during the night, about the time of the attempted robbery at two o'clock, and found him fast asleep. Officer Bockenfluhr heard the shots, and told the Court that when he saw Cooney that officer told him he did not know who the man was.

Cooney was very positive, however. The Court did not agree with him and Dunavan was declared not guilty and discharged. Deputy Prosecutor Dunn was the attorney for the State.

THE FAIR WORKERS.

Those Who Will Have Charge of the Firemen's Booths.

The ladies' auxiliary committee of the Firemen's fair met at the home of Asher Bartlett, Jr., of Westervelt avenue, last evening, and the committees in charge of the different booths were appointed by the president, Mrs. A. J. Saltzman. They were as follows:

HUMAN SKULLS UNEARTHED.

PLOWED UP IN THE OPENING OF STELLE AVENUE.

Supposed to be the Remains of Indians Who Were Buried a Century Ago at That Point—They Are Poorly Preserved.

"A skull!" exclaimed one of the men employed by Contractor Michael Uhdal in opening up Stelle avenue yesterday as the plow turned over the soil. The plow moved a little further on and the bones of the body were unveiled. Visions of Blue Beard and the fate of his wives and other stories of a similar strain ran through the minds of the laborers. "Indians" was the verdict of Contractor Uhdal, how ever, and a few minutes later three other skeletons were uncovered, each beneath the other. None of them were perfect, however, as the bones had rotted so that many of them were crushed by the plow. One of the skulls was smashed in this way. The remains of the braves, or whomever they were, were collected and deposited in a place of safety. Then Mr. Uhdal notified Randolph M. Stelle, who is the owner of the land on which the remains were discovered.

For sometime Contractor Uhdal and his men have been at work opening Stelle avenue, which runs from Central avenue towards Ceder brook, beyond West Ninth street. The little one-story, two room house, belonging to A. J. Clarkson was in the way and some time ago, Mr. Clarkson gave the permission to Randolph M. Stelle, who owns the land there, and is having the avenue opened up, and the house was torn down. The house stands on a sort of knoll or mound and about ten feet behind it is the place where the bones were found. Several weeks before Mr. Stelle had told Mr. Uhdal that an Indian burial ground was supposed to be located somewhere in that vicinity.

When a Daily Press reporter went to see Mr. Stelle this afternoon, he was told that the farm had been purchased by R. M. Stell's father, Manning Stelle, in 1826.

"He often said that he thought that Indians were buried there" said Mr. Stelle, "but we never found any traces of them, although, years ago, I often picked up arrow heads in that field."

The bones have not yet been examined by any expert in that line, but it is thought, partly on account of their great age and partly because another burial ground has been discovered about a mile from there, that the remains are those of some long laid-at-rest Indian braves who went to war and fought and danced as well as their comrades. One of the skulls was remarkably large while the other three were somewhat smaller.

Contractor Uhdal is quite disgusted that the teeth which had been in the large head were stolen last evening. He left them on a stone and this morning they were gone.

Through the kindness of Mr. Stelle, The Daily Press reporter was allowed to take possession of one of the skulls which will be placed on exhibition in the window of The Daily Press office.

ART IN ADVERTISING.

Suggestions That Every Progressive Merchant Will Appreciate.

The use of the pictorial in advertising has greatly increased of late years, and doubtless has been largely stimulated by the progress made in photography and the so-called "process" system of illustration. A most interesting and novel example of the high development of art in connection with advertising will soon be offered to the public in the exhibition which is to be given in Y. M. C. A. Hall on the afternoon and evening of December 10th, when there is to be an exhibition of lantern slides prepared expressly for this event. The name of the Young Men's Christian Association is a guarantee of the dignified character of the entertainment, and its high artistic merit may be inferred from the names of such well known houses as Messrs. Tiffany & Co., Dr. C. Klackner, Messrs. William Knabe & Co., the New York Central R. R Co., the Great Northern Railway Co., Messrs. Proctor & Gamble, and the managers of the Ponce de Leon Hotel, St. Augustine, Florida, and others. Fine stereopticon views prepared in New York and Cincinnati will be exhibited, besides a careful selection of superior specimens from the best work of the Orange Camera Club. A verbal description of each subject will be given during the progress of the exhibition. From three to six o'clock, a fine display of bills and posters will be made in the small hall, and a large collection of striking and artistic specimens has been secured, including one of the finest collections in this part of the country, illustrating foreign and American art in this line.

Plainfield must be a desirable place to live in. Yesterday it went overwhelmingly Republican, and now not a single Democrat holds a city office there. That is what may be called a plain field for Republicans.—Elizabeth Journal.

FOR THE MISSION.

Entertainment Given in Warren Chapel Last Evening.

An excellent entertainment was given in Warren chapel last evening under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society and was largely attended. The proceeds will be devoted to missionary purposes. The following programme was rendered: Piano duett, Misses Lillian Zeisz and Lida Pangborn; Recitation, Miss Bertha Clum; Tableaux, "Mute Choir"; piano solo, Miss Alice Squires; Dialogue, "Inhuman Monster"; Recitation, W. R. Mattox; Song, Miss Lillian Zeisz, Tableaux, "The Right"; Recitation, Miss Try Mattox; Dialogue, "Rich and Poor"; Dialogue, "The Country Aunt's First Visit to the City."

Those who arranged the entertainment are as follows: Misses Sadie Searing, Minnie Bolsterli, Lizzie Dunham and Messrs. Henry Seader and William Mullon.

An Active Worker.

Miss Alice B. Spangenberg, superintendent of the missionary department of the State Christian Endeavor Union, sends out to the superintendents of the various unions monthly bulletins. The one following the State convention was especially interesting. Here is an extract: "It was thought best to try in every way to prepare the societies and unions for a great missionary awakening the year following the evangelistic work, that they may be ready to apply for the missionary course of lectures which we hope to arrange. During the entering of the evangelistic campaign are urged to plan for themselves a missionary course of lectures this winter. Franklin Cooper, of Jersey City, chairman of the missionary committee of the Hudson County Union, has made some excellent plans for a course of missionary lectures in that county. No doubt he would be willing to give information, upon application, in regard to them."

Injured on the Card.

A young man about thirty years of age, giving the name of David Jones, had his left forearm badly lacerated this morning while riding on a coal train at Bound Brook. The arm was caught between the bumpers. He was brought to the Grant Avenue station on the working car and from there was taken to the hospital in the ambulance for treatment. It is not thought that it will result in a permanent injury.

Suing for Board.

A suit has been brought in the Union County Court against James J. Day, of Plainfield, administrator of the estate of the late John T. Day, to recover $314.37 for board and care of the latter at the State Hospital for Morris Plains. The suit is brought by the managers of the institution, who declare they have made demands for the payment of the claim, but they were refused. Day was in the institution from January 1st, 1894, to March 1st, 1895.

A Fine Display.

Edsall's holiday exhibition of rich and beautiful goods this year is said to surpass all his former efforts. The prices are very much lower than last year.

It's Coming.

On the top of one of the cars of a fast freight train that passed through here this morning, going east, there was a layer of six inches of snow.

PARK CLUB GAIETY STARTS.

THE OPENING JUNIOR BALL HELD LAST EVENING.

Club Assembly Hall Made the Scene of a Gay Party of Dancers—Carried Off With the Usual Dash of Completeness.

The balls thundered down the alleys, the billiard and pool balls clicked and flew about over the green covered tables, and all was enjoyment in the basement of the Park Club house while in the assembly hall the Juniors were entertaining their friends with an informal dance, the first of the season. Here all was life and gaiety and the charming gowns of the city and borough ladies flashed about the room intermingling with the more conventional dress suits of their companions in the dance, forming an ever-changing but ever-beautiful scene. With short intervals between each dance, the music continued from early in the evening until after 12 o'clock had struck. And then it was very hard to leave the brilliantly lighted room, with its smooth waxed floor, for the outer darkness.

The attendance was very good, as is always the case with any Park Club affair, and the rule regarding invitation cards was strictly adhered to. When the young men tired of dancing, the basement, with all its attractions, awaited them, and many took advantage of it.

The committee of the Juniors who arranged the dance consisted of Edward Rushmore and Charles S. Cook, and one glance at the assembly hall showed how successful had been their efforts. Rogers furnished the music.

The capacity of the hall was limited and the side rooms and gallery were filled during the entire evening with those who did not care to dance or who, after a waltz or a two-step cared to wander to some secluded corner for a friendly chat.

Among those who were present during the evening were: Mr. and Mrs. Wm. E. MacClymont, Mrs E. S. Brown and the Misses Mabel Van Deventer, Halla Van Deventer, Eleanor T. Van Deventer, Florence Pond, Genevieve Daniel, Ada Smock, Sarah Douglass, Grace Barlow, Alice Barlow, Adelaide Margaret Elsberg, Sarah Long, Laura Long, Miss Underwood, Nellie Underwood, Miss Ingersoll, Miss Thiers, Sallye Swayzee, Miss Clark, Mabel Clark, Bertha Clark, Miss Hasbrouck, Ethel Green, Alice Thompson, Hattie Shreve, Martha T. Henderson, Anna Miller, Marie Dydell, Anna Dydell, Grace Brown, and Messrs Edmund Rushmore, Charles S. Cook, Robert Bruce Douglass, Walter Douglass, Wm. R. Thiers, Charles Dupee, Fred. P. Taylor, Percy Long, Elston French, Louis E. Waring, William N. Runyon, Clarence Peck, Albert E. Woltmann, Harry C. Van Emburg, Charles E. Faber, Charles Stillman, Harry Patton, John Brower, W. S. Pierce, Geo. F. Schoonmaker, Volney V. Green, Henry C. Wells, Albert Sprowl, Tempiston Johnson, Allen Lang, Alfred Willis West, Alfred Holmes, H. Oscar Nightengale, Howard Turrill, John C. Kirkner, Charles H. Kyte, William L. McClure, Mr. Ingals, Mr. Paddock, Samuel Prescott Hall, Mr. Franklin, Roger Erickson, Blanchard Randolph, M. W. Daboll, Peter Matthews, Leslie Daniel, Meredith Dryden, Laurens H. Van Buren, Jules Erickson, Ernest Swayzee, Carl Brown, Arthur Freeman and Arthur Wheeler.

The chaperones of the evening were Mrs. Charles A. Reed and Mrs. Charles R. Thiers.

MONEY AND MAN GONE.

Butcher Warneck Sends His Man to Pay a Bill and He Disappears.

Carl Frecht came to Plainfield from New York about two months ago and secured a position with Richard Warneck, the East Front street butcher. He was apparently very steady in his habits and trustworthy. Yesterday morning Mr. Warneck sent Frecht to the Swift Beef Co. house to pay a bill of $14, and that is the last time he was seen by his employer. He did not pay the bill and Mr. Warneck thinks the men has left town with his money. No effort has as yet been made to find Frecht.

Enthusiastic Salvationists.

There was a very large attendance at the Salvation Army hall last night when the National Staff Band of New York, under the leadership of Adjutant Trundell, was present.

The latter took charge of the meeting. Testimonies, short interesting talks and prayers were given by the band, also several excellent musical selections. The meeting was one of the best ever held in the hall and was productive of much good.

Everything Almost Ready.

The time is drawing near for the firemen's fair, and the drills and dances are nearing their completion. Madame Menzeli has worked hard and faithful to make them beautiful and attractive. The final touches are being put on, and the firemen's dance is to be rehearsed for the last time tonight.

GOOD OLD STYLE OF EATABLES.

The very mention of supper and the Ladies Aid Society of the First M. E. church, together, suggests something good, and the old-fashioned supper which they gave last evening was quite up to the expectations. As so many entertainments were held during the evening the attendance was not as large as it otherwise might have been, but the congregation dropped in from the time that the supper was ready until it was time to close, and thoroughly enjoyed the delicious meal that was set before them. If "old-fashioned" meant a bountiful supply, the the supper last evening was very old-fashioned.

The supper was arranged by the following committee: Mrs Noah W. Pike, chairman, Mrs. Daniel E. Davis, Mrs. George M. Rittenhouse, Mrs. Garret Q. Packer, Mrs. O. L. Jenkins, Mrs. Charles B. Barnes, Mrs. C. H. Bugg, Mrs. John Cory, Mrs. Charles E. Horne, Mrs. J. P. Humble, Mrs. Edward C. Mulford, Miss Alexander, Mrs. J. H. King and Miss Susie Jackson. The cake table was under the supervision of Mrs. Henry A. McGee, chairman. Mrs. C. C. Cokefair, Miss Penny and Mrs. J. C. Peck. The pie table was looked after by Mrs. J. P. Homan, chairman, Mrs. Corlies Pond and Miss Mary Brown. The table, where the delicious home-made candies were for sale, was under the charge of Mrs. N. Y. Hull, chairman, and the Misses L. M. Mulford, Elsie Horne, Sarah Douglass, Elizabeth Cornwell, Jessie Barnes, Margaretta Barnes, Ethel Simmonds and Smith. The ice cream was dealt out by Miss Minnie Sharp.

The supper was served by the following waitresses: Misses Lucie P. Davis, C. Florence Barnes, Alice Jenkins, Eva Jenkins, Cora Shepard, Mattie Humble, Elizabeth Stackhouse, Etta Raybert, Miss Van Middlesworth, Edna Harris, Lizzie Stafford and Lulu Packer.

BUILDING ORDINANCE AMENDED.

The New Office of Building Inspector About to be Created.

All the members of the city council were present at last night's meeting, except councilmen Stockton and Frost. Most of the last meeting's minutes were read and approved and upon recommendation of Mr. Moore the application of J. A. Karet for an auctioneer's license was granted. Mr. Moore stated that the application of residents for an electric light on West Second street had been investigated and the committee did not recommend its erection. The report of the committee was concurred in.

Mr. Erickson then called up the building ordinance, also the ordinance creating the office of building inspector. They were placed on second reading and Mr. Erickson offered several amendments which were adopted. It was then ordered engrossed and advertised. Mr. Dumont said he supposed the same had been agreed to by the Board of Trade. Mr. Erickson stated that it had and was perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. Westphal voted no on the ordinance creating a building inspector.

Mr. Fisk stated that Honan & Sons should make certain repairs about the city and the street commissioner desired insruction as to how it should be done. It was decided that the street commissioner should do the work and have the same deducted from bills due if possible, if not, to be taken from the 1½ per cent, and that the street commissioner report the cost to the council.

The application was taken in the case of John Siddall who has refused to fix Park avenue.

On Mr. Ginna's motion the council adjourned to meet Thursday evening, December 12th, when the street railway matter will come up.

Methodist Supper to Continue.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Methodist Church call the attention of their friends to the following notice: Owing to the abundant supply of good things furnished for the Supper last evening, they have decided to continue it this evening. A good, hearty meal will be served from 6 p. m. on, for 25 cents. There will be no admission fee. A large supply of excellent home-made candies at moderate prices.

A Machinist in Town.

The large gun from the Watervliet Arsenal, West Troy, arrived at the Pond Machine Tool Works this morning. It is thirty-five feet long with a ten-inch rifle bore and weighs between 5,000 and 7,000 pounds. The gun will be mounted on the disappearing gun-carriage which is now in course of construction. It will be fully two months before the carriage will be ready as only the preliminary work is now being done.

Award of Damages.

David P. Hall, of this city, has just recovered for Stephen Hurst an award of damages against the New York Elevated roads of nearly $4,000 for a single lot on Ninth avenue, corner of Forty-first street, New York city.

RODE IN A WHEELBARROW.

LUDICROUS ELECTION BET PAID OFF LAST EVENING.

Preceded By the Colored Fife and Drum Corps and Followed By a Howling Mob the Journey Was Taken.

The rattle of the drum and the squeak of the fife startled the residents in the vicinity of Park avenue and Second street last evening at about half-past seven, and to those who did look out to see what was the matter a strange sight was presented. First came the colored fife and drum corps, the dusky fifers and drummers marching along with smiling countenances and playing for all that was in them. Then came a wheelbarrow all bedecked with flags and similar decorations. Seated on it was a man and when the first surprise was over the spectator could not fail to recognize the familiar form and features of Mike McCarthy, the expressman. In the rear, trundling his burden with apparent ease, was "Gentle Willie" Murphy, who seemed to enjoy this kind of a home run as much as the bassoid kind.

There was another of these primitive vehicles, also decorated, in which John H. Slover, Justice of the Peace-elect, reclined with as much ease as he will in the judicial chair. 'Bob Wood, the old driver on the Hook and Ladder truck, acted as tillerman to the wheelbarrow.

The cause of this rather remarkable parade was a bet on Tuesday's charter election and the Citizens had to wheel the Republicans about the block bounded by East Second street, Watchung, North and Park avenues. A crowd of friends of both parties brought up the rear and encouraged the losers to greater efforts while the drum corps played enlivening music.

MUST FIGHT TOGETHER

Woman Must Have the Assistance of Man Before She Can Vote.

A parlor lecture on "Fashionable Thinking" was given yesterday afternoon by Miss Elizabeth Yates, of Maine, at the beautiful home of Mrs. Charles Potter, of West Seventh street, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. A large number of Plainfield women were present, and the afternoon was enjoyed by all.

Two songs were charmingly sung by Miss Mabel Coard; Mrs. Cooley presided, and introduced the speaker.

Miss Yates began by telling how thinking had its changing fashions, like everything else. Very different ideas are held now, on most subjects, from those that were in vogue in past years. She dwelt specially on the changed ideas with regard to women. Once they were regarded either as angels or as dolls or toys; now they find nearly all avocations open to them, in some states they have been given the ballot, and more and more every year they are coming to have equal rights with men. In speaking of the temperance work, Miss Yates said that in order to succeed, it would be necessary for men and women to go in the fight hand in hand.

At the close of the lecture bullion was served by members of the Y. W. C. T. U., and a very pleasant social hour was enjoyed by the guests.

VOORHEES DISAPPOINTED AGAIN.

The Union County Senator Can Not Climb Any Higher.

Senator Foster M. Voorhees is not to be President of the Senate, through circumstances that are in some respects peculiar. His candidacy was not cordially received by the Republican leaders, generally, for the same reasons that have operated against him in the past. He is also confronted with a very formidable opponent in Senator Thompson, who has been a candidate several times and retired to the advantage of some other Senator, and the feeling prevails that Thompson's generosity to his friends, as well as his constant devotion to the party, entitles him to some consideration, in consequence, the sentiment that operates to the favor of the Senator from Somerset is not against the Senator from Union. Senator Rogers has joined forces with Senator Thompson and hopes to be made chairman of the caucus, and leader on the floor in return for the votes that he secured for Thompson.

It was stated that Senator Samuel D. Hoffman would probably be a candidate for the leader of the majority, but when asked the direct question a few days ago, he said that he was not.—Newark News.

No More Borough Licenses.

Judge Bartine of the Somerset county courts states that no new license for the sale of liquor will be granted in the borough of North Plainfield while the court is constituted as it is at present.

SOCIABILITY AMONG THE FRIENDS.

Young People's Association Organized for That Purpose.

The third regular meeting of the Young People's Association of the Friends Society on Watchung avenue was held last evening with President E. M. Vail in the chair.

Mrs. Eckel and Mrs. Adams, delegates from the association to the annual conference held at Trenton in November, presented interesting reports. It was stated that in all there are three associations and each is doing excellent work. Following this a portion of "Janney's History of Friends" was read by Mrs. Charles E. Vail and a paper on the New York Association on the "Possibilities of Young Friends Associations" was read by Adelbert Vail. A general discussion of the paper followed.

The Association is organized for social and literary purposes and in a measure serves the same purpose as the Christian Endeavor Society. The Plainfield Association now has eighteen members.

Kirmess Resolution.

The result of the late Kirmess has been so overwhelming, so far beyond anything that was expected, that with hearts full of sincere gratitude the Woman's Auxiliary Board at their regular meeting held November 29th, have passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That a vote of thanks be extended to all who before and during the progress of the Kirmess have rendered valuable assistance, either by donating time and labor or in any way lending a helping hand, by sending beautiful articles for sale, or otherwise exerting themselves to secure the magnificent success that has been achieved.

Resolved, Further to publish a list of the names of those who so generously have contributed, and if anyone through mistake or being undiscovered should be omitted, we wish to express our gratefulness to them as well. First of all we desire to thank the gentlemen of the press who from beginning to end have advocated and furthered our undertaking in the kindest and most earnest manner, and by their assistance in this direction have largely assisted in drawing the immense crowds of visitors; also for the liberal discounts in our advertising and other matters. We further beg to express our gratitude to the gentlemen of the Plainfield Bicycle Club for allowing the use of their hall for the dance rehearsals.

To A. B. Thiers for generously repairing furniture, supplying pipe, etc., and to Messrs. Rider, Runyon & Co., as well as to DeWitt Hyde for the use of tents, and each to host the Bicycle Club hall. We are also indebted to the following friends of our institution:

To Mr. Marshall, Messrs. Woolston & Buckle and Messrs. Ayres & Sons for furnishing Stationery, Venetian, French and German booths.

To John Abbott, Charles E. Doane, Charles Wilson, Mr. Thatcher, Mrs. Emmons, Pierson & Gavis, for furnishing lumber and erecting the Flower, Spanish, Venetian, French, German, Gypsy, and Candy booths.

To Messrs. Griffen, Scully Edsall, VanEmburgh, and Waite, for their donations of tin and hardware, baskets, fancy articles, toys; also decorating booths and tables.

To George O. Stevens for one ton of coal and to G. W. Rockfellow for preserves and canned vegetables for German booth.

To F. Wallace, Jr., Mr. Rockfellow, Mr. Rockfellow, Neuman Bros., J. A. Smith & Bro., and R. G. Howell, for liberal donations to Woman's Exchange booth and to restaurant.

To Mr. Gaskill, for the loan of tables, chairs, sideboard, etc.; also to B. T. Barnes for tables.

To Messrs. Staats and Bongland for carting of furniture.

To Mr. Garrett for his donation of fancy jars for plants, and the loan of all the dishes used in the restaurant.

To Mr. Codrington for his generous supply of ice; to Mr. Galvin for the donation of ten quarts of milk every day; and to Mr. Randolph for the donation of Potomac water.

To Messrs. Peterson, Carson and Miles for cut flowers. Also to Mr. Schmidt, of Fanwood for his generous contribution of flowers.

Mr. Jas. Dunham, of Dunham & Co., New York, also sent in a quantity of choice cut flowers, bunches of violets and for large baskets of flowers.

A. C. Band was extremely generous in loaning all the small flags and Japanese lanterns used in the decorations of the hall. Messrs. VanEmburgh & Co. also furnished many other decorations for the same purpose.

The Stationery booth received donations from several circles of King's Daughters and Sons, and from Messrs. Brown & Bros., of New York, viz, Stern Brothers, Dempsey, Carroll and others for liberal donations.

The ladies in charge of the Venetian booth feel especially indebted to Mrs. Thomas for designing and personally directing the building and painting of their booth with the assistance of Mr. Benson and Wm. Gilbert. The booth proved a success, except as regards receipts thanks for his donation of the very artistic design on our programmes.

The services of our friends have been invaluable throughout and we wish to thank them particularly for all their assistance.

And now, how can we ever say enough in praise of the ladies and gentlemen, as well as of the little tots, who so willingly devoted time and comfort to take part in and carry out the beautiful dances, and to the ladies and gentlemen who so kindly presided at various booths, in the refreshment rooms and other places. The never-ending applause of the delighted audience, the liberal purchases at all the booths have fully proved the high appreciation of the public, and we can only say thanks to you all; a thousand thanks.

E. Squires,
Corresponding Secretary of Woman's Auxiliary Board of Muhlenberg Hospital.

Cycling Experiences.

The Crescent Wheelman will give an entertainment in the Y. M. C. A. hall on Thursday, December 17th, which promises to be a very interesting one. Spencer Crane, a former Plainfield cyclist, will tell something of his experiences in a wheeling trip through Norway and Sweeden. The lecture, or rather talk, will be illustrated with stereopticon views. Those who have heard his letters from abroad telling of parts of the trip will know what a treat there is in store for those who go.

ALWAYS CRIMINAL.

BLACK RECORD FOR CENTURIES OF A ROMAN VILLAGE.

Artena Infamous in the Crimes of Its Inhabitants for Centuries Ago and Outlawed by a Pope—Crime Hereditary In Some of the Families.

"A Country of Born Criminals" is what Professor Sighele of the University of Pisa entitles his article on Artena, an Italian village, in a recent issue of Archives d'Anthropologie. The province of Rome has long been famous for crime, and Artena, a Roman village of about 3,000 inhabitants, is the most strongly criminal community in the province. That has been its reputation since the middle of the twelfth century.

Artena, or Montefortino, as it was anciently called, stands on a hill 400 feet above sea level and is on the edge of a mountain range. The inhabitants are mostly farmers, and they till a rich soil, so that there is no deep poverty in the region. The comfort of their surroundings are such as to encourage the rugged virtues. The place has, from a military point of view, an almost impregnable site, and in earlier times commanded this fact. Perhaps the earliest mention of the place in Italian history occurs in 1155, when the frequency of crime is noted. Pope Paul IV included Montefortino in the place in 1557, describing its inhabitants as of notoriously evil life. He ordered that the castle, the seat of robbery, be destroyed, and that all the male inhabitants be banished, and decreed that any man who met them might kill them. The edict was, in fact, one of extermination for the male population. His holiness named among the crimes of Montefortino not only robbery, but also murder and assaults upon the papal soldiery.

The pope's tremendous edict did not depopulate the place or greatly change the character of its inhabitants. It was only repealed, for the crimes of Montefortino appear and reappear in Italian history from that day to this. Professor Sichele sketches the criminal history of Montefortino for the last half century. During that period the vendetta has reigned there unchecked. From 1851 to 1868 the courts were powerless to deal with the people, because it was impossible to obtain evidence to convict. An official report in 1872 described the place as a stronghold of murderers, assassins, robbers and incendiaries, in active night and day. It was declared that the criminals of that day were the children and grandchildren of those killed in the galleys or on the scaffold, and that they had organized a monopoly of the profitable industry of crime. It was about this time that Artena began to forget its name of the past, changed its name to Artena. But crime has since increased rather than diminished, and the criminals of today bear the same names as the hereditary criminals of more than 20 years ago. The assizes of 1879, 1881 and 1883 were fruitless, as no one would testify to acts of crime, though there were many indictments. Between 1879 and 1886 Artena had four mayors, and the life of each was contemplated. Two were successfully assassinated, and the other three were wounded. One was shot in broad daylight in the market place, but the would be assassin was not punished.

Between 1853 and 1872 there were 42 murders and assassinations at Artena. During that time the annual rate of was 52.5 per 100,000. The rate throughout Italy has varied in recent years from 7.75 to 16.80 per 100,000, and the mean annual rate throughout Italy is 11.27 per 100,000. The number of murders and assassinations at Artena between 1873 and 1888 was 87, at the annual rate of 211.5 per 100,000. The mean annual number of such crimes per 100,000 throughout the whole province of Rome is 25.40. In other words, the rate of murders and assassinations at Artena is more than double that of the province. The rate for various European countries is 0.94 to 12.67.

Artena is equally notorious for lighter crimes. Between 1853 and 1872 there were 164 assaults with attendant wounds. This averages 82 per year, or 2,733 per 100,000. In the same period there were 56 highway robberies, or at the annual rate of 85 per 100,000. The annual rate for assaults throughout Italy is 1,000 per 100,000, and for highway robbery 3.67 per 100,000. Artena had between 1853 and 1872 116 thefts, or at the rate of 173 annually per 100,000 and between 1873 and 1888 127, at the rate of 211.5 per 100,000. The rate for all Italy between 1879 and 1887 was 47.36 per 100,000.

At the recent assizes at Artena 32 persons were accused of crime. There were 8 charges of highway robbery, 3 of murder and 2 of assassination. There were more than 40 persons strongly suspected of crime, but the number of accusations was reduced in order that persons in high authority might be interested against the administration of justice. The old names again appeared among the accused. In some families the tendency is constantly to comparatively few families. One of these families is the Pompoli. They have been famous for generations. The father has served a long term in jail; four sons have imprisoned for 30 years; three of the sons have been sentenced to long terms, and the fourth, a lad of 17, is already a confirmed bravo of his youth. Pasquale Villani, a famous rogue, called himself the "mirror of the country," meaning that he was a model for all rogues. Pasquale, on being reminded from the bench by the presiding judge that he had sought to draw an acquaintance into a criminal affair, pompously replied:

"What need have I to ask aid in committing a crime? I am equal to pillaging a whole village single handed."

The prisoners had no shame in their career, and there was great competition as to which of them should have his picture made for an album sent to the Court of Rome.

The characteristic of these people under accusation is usually an absolute silence. Witnesses are reticent and fearful. Those willing witnesses, however, let drop the incriminating word paranza. The usual meaning of paranza is a subgroup of the Italian criminal secret called camorra. This last has a great chief, while the paranza is a group under a small chief, with treasurer, secretary and other officers. It is supposed that the camorra does not exist as such at Artena, but that the paranza is a small, independent organization of local criminals. The law of the paranza at Artena, as of the camorra elsewhere, is silence, reciprocal false testimony in court, defense of the accused with the aid of a powerful band, and death to informers. Pasquale Villani was at once chief and treasurer of the Artena paranza. He furnished false witnesses, paid the attorneys and watched the trial with the utmost care.

Said a little 6-year-old, "Mamma, how does God make us without any seams showing?"

CHOPIN PLAYED.

Had Under the Circumstances It Was Music to Be Remembered.

Mrs. Anne Thackeray Ritchie tells a pretty story of a famous player and composer whom she calls "My Musician." She was living in Paris with her grandmother, and one day to her positive fright, was taken to drive by a Scotch lady, a spinster, tall and thin, one of three sisters, for all of whom the grandmother had a great regard. "She scares me, I believe," says Mrs. Ritchie, "but my heart was in my mouth. I hardly dared listen to what she said." The carriage stopped before a side street and presently stopped at a door.

Miss X. got out, carefully handling a fancy basket, and telling the little girl to follow, began climbing the shiny stairs. She rang a bell and the door was opened by a slight, delicate looking man with long hair, bright eyes and a thin, hooked nose.

Miss X. put down her basket, caught both his hands in hers, shook them gently, and began to scold him in a most affectionate reproving way for having come to the door. He laughed, said he had guessed who it was, and motioned the two to enter. In the room was a piano covered with an upright piano and a few straw chairs.

Miss X. inquired after his health. Had he slept? He shrugged his shoulders. Had he eaten? He shrugged his shoulders and pointed to the piano. He had been composing something; would Miss X. like to hear it?

She would, certainly, but it would tire him. It could not be good for him.

He smiled again, shook back the long hair and sat down. And then the music began, and the room was filled with contagious sound, he looking over his shoulder now and then to see if his hearers were liking it.

"The lady sat absorbed," says Mrs. Ritchie, "and as I looked at her I saw tears in her eyes—great, clear tears rolling down her cheeks, while the music poured on and on.

"I, also, recall that music! I would give anything to remember it now, but the truth is, I was so interested in the people that I scarcely listened. When he stopped at last and looked round the lady started up.

"'You mustn't play any more,' she said. 'No more, no more, it's too beautiful'—and then, in French, but not low, she added, almost in a whisper, with a humble, apologetic look:

"'I have brought you some of that jelly, and my sister sent some of the wine that you fancied the other day. Pray, pray try to take a little.'

"He shook his head, seeming more vexed than pleased, but she went on, more softly, closed the door upon him and the offending basket and hastened away. As we were coming down stairs she wiped her eyes again.

"'By this time I had got to understand the plain, tall, grim, warm hearted woman. All our terrors were gone. She looked hard at me as we drove away.

"'Never forget that you have heard Chopin play,' she said, with emotion, 'for soon no one will hear him play any more.'"

CURIOUS FISH.

Keep Their Eggs in Their Mouths—Their Habits and Parents.

In the sea of Galilee—or Lake Tiberias, as it is also called—there is a strange fish named the Chromis simonis, which is more careful of its progeny than any heavenly are. The male takes the eggs in his mouth and keeps them in his natural side pockets, where they are regularly hatched and remain under the care of the parent fish. By this ingenious arrangement the brood is comparatively guarded against its natural enemies. It is carefully fed, too, but it is rarely how the little ones escape being eaten alive. A month ago, says a traveler writing to a religious contemporary, I found in my net a number of these fish without eyes.

Others of the species, when I lifted them up, dropped a number of little fishes out of their mouths, which swam away hastily. The natives explained the phenomenon. The blind chromis is the victim of net fishing. When the net has been drawn ashore full, they begin to look out for tidbits. After catching a fish they hit its forehead with their sharp beak, knocking out the middle part, in which their eyes are set. The bony structure is dropped into the water, but the eyes are eaten by the birds with great relish. Strangely enough, the fish survive this rough treatment. The wound heals up quickly in water, and they continue to ply the lake for food as if nothing had happened.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Pianos.

Somebody has aroused to the fact that pianos, of all furniture, remain the same dreary, stiff, coffin finished pieces they have always been. The upright has a few possible changes, but not many, as we shall have, but the grand is still hopeless. Why piano makers, exclaims this apostle of reform, continue to use the same old case style mystery, when a graceful case of polished light wood, with sloping legs arranged in clusters, and plain panels, would find eager buyers. Such a piano in wood to match the furnishings of the room, oak, maple, cherry, would be inconspicuous and inconspicuous. It could be treated more elaborately with really graceful carvings or inlays or other touches. And if an upright, the back could be made beautiful by a carved wood latticework.—New York Times.

Pointed.

It is said there is a voter living near Hagerstown who knows all the facts. He does not decide who to vote for until he has met the representatives of each candidate and had a conference. A local Hurst politician met this fellow not long ago and said: "Well, Uncle Zeb, who are you going to vote for?" "I dunno, I dunno," the old man replied. "I had a double barreled shotgun, you might say, and I'm also to do a lot of hunting this winter. I dunno who I'll vote for."—Baltimore News.

A Successful Run.

"I understand that you had a great run in Plunkville," said the actor's friend.

"My dear, I was simply stuffy here. It was 14 blocks, on me troth, from the theater to the station, and two constables and a landlord were after us every step of the way."—Washington Star.

The Sultan is quite a politician.

The Great Iam has evolved into th Little Oft.

Seven cities want the National Republican convention of 1896.

Speaker Reed stopped receiving calls yesterday long enough to call on President Cleveland himself.

Editor Runyon wonders where the intoxicating drinks came from on Tuesday. The cider joints flourished.

There is talk of changing the name of New Brunswick to Brunswick. Quite proper to drop the new. It is a misnomer.

The air of injured innocence which Editor Runyon assumes would make a horse laugh—if such a thing were possible.

John Kean has been in Washington and from his point of view as an outsider thinks that Senator Smith's seat is a pretty nice place to occupy.

Now is the time when the venturesome youngster goes forth with a pair of skates and comes back from an experience which the newspapers term as a "narrow experience from drowning."

Nebraska farmers have discovered that sugar beets make good whiskey, and internal-revenue agents are finding illicit stills. It is cheaper, though, to run cider joints in Plainfield, and not half so risky.

Senator Voorhees is quoted as saying that a resolution would probably be introduced during the session of the Legislature for an expert examination of the books of the office of Secretary of State Kelsey.

Attorney-General Stockton says that he would not accept the vice-chancellorship should it be offered him. This means that he will continue in his present office until the expiration of the term, April 8th, 1897.

Mrs. Etta Morse Hudders has been grappling with the servant question and her conclusions are not of a rosy hue for the present generation. She says the domestic problem can only be solved by education of the future servant-class. And education is so slow.

Among all the New Jersey editions of New York papers there is none that is conducted with greater enterprise and ability than that of The Press. Its manner of covering many events with briefness and terseness is a feature possessed by no other Jersey edition.

The curtains are drawn on the cider joints today, but tomorrow they will be up, the fiery fluid will gozzle from the inebriating incubators, and old topers and topers not so old will jostle and leer at respectable people passing along the public thoroughfares. The cider joints ought to be closed up.

What a mecca the gay old town New Brunswick is for real bad people. Now the story comes from there that two of the feminine population have been hypnotized by a wandering gypsy, whose seductive Svengalli ways made one woman voluntarily give up $75 in real money and another one open her wardrobe and allow the nomad to take some of her best clothes.

Thirty-two men have held the office of Speaker of the House of Representatives, and more than twenty of them have been candidates for nomination for the office of President. Several of them were nominated, the number including Henry Clay, John Bell and James G. Blaine, but James K. Polk was the only man who held the office of Speaker who was afterward elected President. Polk was the thirteenth Speaker of the House, and his nomination for President was an accident, the result of a deadlock.

It will be found by reference to the plumbing ordinance in another part of this paper that a severe penalty will be imposed upon any person who makes any additions or changes of any character or who makes any connections with the sewer until a plan clearly showing the whole plumbing system has been filed with and approved by the Board of Health at their office, Room No. 4, No. 109 Park avenue. The sewer pipes must be carefully ventilated and the work must not be covered until examined, tested and approved.

"Reed at the White House," says a newspaper report of the movements of the Speaker yesterday. It is not among the impossibilities that it will eventually be Reed in the White House.

Nellie Bly has reappeared in metropolitan journalism. Her journey along the walks of matrimony have been filled with the vicissitudes of a suspecting husband and shadowing detectives.

The Republican papers are now engaged in their annual partisan duty of showing what a good English subject Grover Cleveland is. The argument is as threadbare of common sense as the bloody shirt.

On and on towards Harlem goes the movement of the trade section of the metropolis. Consternation has spread among the exclusive set of upper Fifth avenue over the purchase of a lot on that thoroughfare on which a big department store is to be established.

Now that the attention of the nation is attracted towards Washington it might not be amiss to remind people that Adlai E. Stevenson is Vice president of the United States. His name figures so little in public affairs that in the busy hurry of life people are liable to forget the fact.

Herman Ahlwardt has come all the way from Germany to drive the Hebrews out of the United States. Before starting out on his tour of extermination he needs to study the features of the men in Wall street, the business firms on Broadway, the list of bank officials, city officials and other important personages of New York and the rest of the country. If he possesses the faculty of distinguishing a man's nationality by his cognomen he will give his up mission as the biggest piece of foolish business he ever engaged in.

It will be the mission of this paper to point out to them such errors as may be committed by them; and to reflect as far as possible, the judgment of the people regarding their public acts, whether they are received with favor or disfavor.—News.

Thus writes Editor Runyon in the hour of his defeat and disappointment. It is a mingled wail of anguish and defiance—a despairing product of an inconsistent party career. He says that it will be his mission to reflect the judgment of the people on the official acts of the newly elected men, whether they are received with favor or disfavor. Ever since he was turned down for the position of City Clerk because of his arrogant and swell headed style of acting towards persons who had official relations with him, he has been "reflecting" the judgment of disfavor, as conceived from his standpoint of prejudice. How far his reflections of the past influenced the voters of Tuesday is shown in the defeat of the candidates whom he espoused by pluralities ranging from 500 to 1,100. He would do well to reflect on his own reflections.

The City Improvement Society of New Brunswick, will distribute receptacles for scrap paper and other things about the city next week, in spite of the refusal of the Board of Education to allow the society to locate cans in front of the school buildings. The members of the society were displeased at the manner in which the Board of Education treated their movement, and made a caustic reply in the local newspapers. The society is increasing in membership, and has drawn up plans for numerous improvements about the city. The iron barrels, which are to bear the name of the society, have arrived. The principal objection of the Board of Education to the society's plan was to have the school children pick up dirty papers from the streets, especially on their way to school. The school children are in sympathy with the movement, and many have signed pledges to assist in beautifying the city.

If N. O. Nelson, the millionaire manufacturer, profit-sharer, single-tax advocate, and all-round philanthropist of St. Louis, doesn't lose confidence in human nature, it will be because he has that faith which is the evidence of things not experienced as well as of things not seen, says the Evening Post. Mr. Nelson began to experiment in profit-sharing ten years ago. In order that his employes could not object, he did not reduce a single person's wages. Then at the end of the year he cast up his accounts, and, taking all the profits above a certain per cent, on his capital, etc., divided it among his employes. He did the same thing the next year, at no time reducing wages a cent. The men who shared this profit began to think, or at least two or three began to think for the rest, as is usually the case. The more they thought, the more firmly they became convinced that they had a grievance against Mr. Nelson. "He was holding back," according to their reasoning, "a part of their wages till the end of the year." This trouble was gotten over somehow, but it has broken out from time to time. Mr. Nelson has clung to his theories, however, and his St. Louis business is still being conducted on the profit-sharing plan. Mr. Nelson determined a few weeks ago to go still further; with characteristic liberality, he proposed to take all the risk of failure. His factory is located across the river at Le Claire, Ill. He determined to sell this factory outright to his employees, letting them pay for it, not out of their wages, but out of the profits of the concern. The result was a strike. The men did not propose to have a factory given to them against their will. If Mr. Nelson wished to give them anything it must be in the shape of wages, and paid every Saturday night. Any other plan interfered with their ideas of independence and American manhood. Meantime they would be content to continue work at the old scale.

REFORM IN CIDER JOINTS.

Curtains Drawn on Three Places for the First Time Yesterday.

Reform is beginning to creep into the cider joints. For the first time in their existence these inebriating incubators in the business section of the city had shades drawn on their windows Sunday, which obstructed the view of how they conduct their nefarious business. On the interior, too, signs were posted with the inscription of "No loitering allowed." Heretofore these places have been filled almost to overflowing with a motley gang of men who were drinking the "temperance drinks" to go forth with befuddled brains and unsteady gait to leer at and lurch against respectable people on the public thoroughfares. It was observed that there was less of this conduct yesterday than on any recent Sunday, which gives evidence that the cider joints are selling with more discretion than was the case before The Press called attention to this municipal disgrace. The curtains on the cider joints not only need to be drawn, but the doors barred and the faucets of the cider barrels plugged on Sundays.

Still a Candidate.

Senator Foster M. Voorhees is still a candidate for the presidency of the Senate. He claims that he has six Senators with him, and should he receive the support of the three Democratic Senators, which support they have voluntarily offered, he will have an excellent chance. He will not seek the aid of the Democrats, but there is no law to prevent them casting their votes for him.

Senator Voorhees states that he is not a candidate for any office that is to be vacated during the term of Governor Griggs. At the end of his Senate term he is going to practice law for all that it is worth.—Newark Advertiser.

Flynn Becomes Insane.

Peter Flynn, an ex-police officer, of Elizabeth, and a veteran of the late war, was last night removed from the Alexian Brothers' to the Union county jail. He has become violently insane. He was employed as a gatetender on the Long Branch Division of the Jersey Central, but suddenly attacked Martin Healy, another gateman, with a club two weeks ago. For this assault Flynn was discharged. This is believed to have been the beginning of his mental derangement. He is fifty-two years old and has a family.

STUDENTS VOLUNTEER SERVICE.

A Novel Service to Help the Physically and Spiritually Helpless.

A very interesting and helpful meeting was held at the Congregational church last evening. The meeting was called a "Student Volunteer Service."

C. W. Wisner, Jr., '76, of Princeton, who is greatly interested in the student volunteer movement, made a very earnest address on the work to be done among the physical and spiritual helpless and poor people. He told something of the amount of work to be done all over the world and spoke especially of the everyday work to be done.

John C. Whiting, '98, of Amherst, also spoke very helpfully. He told of the value of the Bible and the necessity of searching its pages. He suggested many lines of thought and asked a number of searching questions which he left for his hearers to answer to themselves.

A collection was then taken up while an instrumental quartette, composed of Charles Davis, Gilbert Lovell, Lindley Hillman, violins, and Walter Serrell, flute, rendered the "Choral" by Bach, in a very enjoyable manner.

The meeting was led by John V. Beekman, Jr., President of the Christian Endeavor Society, under whose auspices the meeting was given.

Off for California.

Mrs. L. A. Dunn and son, Master Harry Louis, who have been visiting relatives and friends in Plainfield and vicinity since September 30th, leave for their home, Pasadena, Cal., on Saturday evening next, via the Royal Blue Line, leaving New York at 12:15 midnight. Mrs. E. J. Higgins, of Flemington, and Miss Lillian A. Force, of 82 Duer street, the Borough, will accompany Mrs. Dunn. The former will spend the winter with a sister who lives in Pasadena and Miss Force will enjoy the balmy air of Southern California at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dunn during the winter, spending a portion of the time at the summit of Echo Mountain with her cousin, F. S. Dunn, who formerly resided in Plainfield but who is now in the employ of Prof. Lowe, projector and builder of the great Mt. Lowe cable railroad, one of the grandest pieces of mountain railroad engineering in America.

The Common Chalice.

Rev. Jocelyn Johnstone, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, contributes an article in the December number of The Advance on "The Common Chalice," in which he attacks the stand taken by the physicians on the individual communion cups agitation. The article will be reproduced in a later issue of The Daily Press.

Almost Lost His Fingers.

A. E. Bushnell, of East Second street, who is spending the winter in New York, had a narrow escape last Saturday from losing several fingers. He was working on a leather splitting machine and caught his little finger, almost severing it from the hand. He went to the hospital and had it dressed and is now getting along very well.

DOESN'T MISS HIS WIFE.

THE MARITAL BLISS OF MR. AND MRS. JOHN MORECRAFT SEVERED.

Owing to the Lack of Work the Husband Was Unable to Provide Necessary Support—His Wife Goes to Other Friends

After a year and a half of married life Mr. and Mrs. John Morecraft, of East Front street, have separated and no longer live under the same roof. Mr. Morecraft is a carpenter by trade and has been supporting his wife on the wages he received. Of late, however, he has been working less than usual and his income has been accordingly decreased. His wife has been feeling the reduction and claims that she was not furnished with even the bare necessities of life.

Saturday, matters came to a climax, and Mrs. Morecraft made another appeal for food, clothing and fuel, but her husband informed her that if she didn't like it there she might go somewhere else and so she decided to go.

She packed up her trunk with her belongings, but fearing her husband's anger, she went to see Chief of Police Grant and asked for protection. Officer Frederickson was detailed to give the desired protection. When she returned to her home she found that her husband was not there so she and her trunk were carried to the home of her sister in North Plainfield, where she will remain, while her husband is left to shift for himself. When Mr. Morecraft discovered that his wife had left he took the matter coolly and he made no attempt to persuade or force her to return.

INTERESTING AND INSTRUCTIVE.

Various Fields of Missions Talked Of By Christian Endeavorers.

A missionery meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Trinity Reformed church was held last evening in the lecture room of the church, which proved very helpful to all who attended. The meeting was in charge of Mrs. F. Adams. The first paper, on India, by Miss Lizzie Dunn, was well written, after which Mrs. J. M. Tier spoke on India, and was followed by Miss Gertrude Tier, who gave interesting and carefully prepared information regarding the missionery work in China. Japan was next heard from through Miss Martha Anthony, who read an interesting paper on the subject, and also by a few well-chosen remarks from H. J. Martin. The medical missionery work in Japan was excellently treated by Master David Wyckoff. Arabia was then clearly and forcibly held up to the young people by the pastor, Rev. Cornelius Schenck, and the pressing needs of sending more Gospel light into South America was clearly shown by E. E. Anthony. During the evening the Misses Laura Wyckoff and Minnie Wyman sang a duet with Miss Nettie Krietling as accompanist.

Joseph Brown Now Under Treatment in Muhlenberg Hospital.

Joseph Brown, foreman over the lathes at the Potter Press Works, who received a serious injury to his left eye about six weeks ago, and who underwent several operations at a New York hospital for the removal of the piece of steel which was embedded in the sight of the eye, returned to Plainfield a week ago, and is now under the care of Dr. F. C. Ard at the Muhlenberg Hospital. Mr. Brown is progressing towards recovery as well as can be expected, but it is feared the sight will be gone. As soon as it is prudent for him to be around he will resume his former position at the works.

Strike on School House Work.

The masons employed on Public School No. 1 at Elizabethport, went on strike yesterday afternoon over the employment of non-union men by Alexander Kerr, a boss mason, who had a sub contract to lay brick work in the basement of the school in connection with the putting in of the heating apparatus. The masons erecting the building are employed by Robert Wilson. The carpenters threaten to go out today. The strike will likely be settled this morning.

Where Credit is Due.

That North Plainfield has excellent roads no one can deny, and the fact is due in no small degree to the earnest efforts of Councilmen Smith, Lounsbury and Schutt, of the street committee. Every dollar that is expended on the street shows value received.

WHAT IS IT?

Dr. Hedges Pronounced It to be the Skull of a White Person.

The skull which has adorned the window of The Daily Press office for the last few days has been the object of considerable speculation. The original theory that it belonged to an Indian was supported by some. Others thought it was the skull of a Negro, while still others were positive that it had been the head of a white person.

On Saturday evening a Daily Press reporter took the skull to Dr. E. W. Hedges who was of the opinion that it belonged to a white man or woman, as it was not shaped like those of either an Indian or a Negro. This makes the theory that the family graveyard of some old settler had been unearthed seem the most plausible. The manner in which they were buried, one above the other, does not appear to follow out that chain of reasoning, though.

The Benefit Concert.

The programme for the grand concert at Y. M. C. A. Hall next Thursday, for the benefit of the German Lutheran church, has been completed. Prof. Janke will not be able to take part, and his place on the programme will be filled by Miss Annie Hardenbergh, contralto in the Crescent Avenue church choir. The entire programme will be published on Wednesday.

Chemical Engine Company.

E. N. Erickson, chairman of the fire and building committee, received a letter from the Holloway Chemical Engine company, of Baltimore, a few days ago which states that the chemical engine for Plainfield was nearing completion, and would be one of the best in the market. The engine is expected here about January 1st.

SACREDNESS OF SACRAMENT

REV. JOCELYN JOHNSTONE ON THE INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION CUP.

He Declares That the Sacrament Should Not be Administered From a Multitudinously Laden Tray—Annihilates Sanctity.

Rev. Jocelyn Johnstone has the following in this month's Advance on "The Common Chalice:"

The readers of The Advance have been shocked during the last month by an oblique attack made on the most sacred of our Christian ceremonies. The assault has been made by a public layman, assisted by the physicians of Plainfield. I yield to all of these gentlemen the credit of being influenced solely by a sense of their duties to scientific truth. But I desire on behalf of the Episcopalians of this city, to protest against an agitation which suggests an undemonstrated terror to those who partake of the common chalice in the celebration of Holy Communion. At a period in our scientific history when destructive bacilli are multiplying and running riot in the minds of all who profess and call themselves scientists, it becomes the duty of everyone who is not an alarmist to raise his voice in protest against the attack made upon the common chalice. We can say unaffectedly, in spite of our Episcopalian superstitions! that we render homage to modern empirical science. But we do so at times with many misgivings. We have been enlightened during the last decade with so many revelations of the dangers by which we are beset in our perilous warfare with the ubiquitous disease germ that we can no longer eat nor drink nor sleep with any high degree of comfort. The physicians and lecturers of Plainfield have set themselves to the task of creating an impalpable monster more terrorizing than that of Frankenstein. In a few years, if science accumulates its warnings, we shall be reduced almost to the point of starvation: for if the modern germ theory be added to the physiological studies of the public schools, the rising generation will be afraid to eat any food except that which is sterilized in vacuo.

The unscientific public, of whom the writer is a humble representative, has, however, one strong consolation left it in the fact that the germs "that are for us are more than those that are against us," and we shall probably continue to eat and drink after the manner of our rude ancestors without any qualms of the scientific conscience.

The use of the common chalice in the service of Holy Communion fulfills a purpose, the realization of which is so dear to the religious life of Christian men and women that it will never be abolished—at least in the Episcopal church. Without entering on any theological controversy we can safely say that it stands today, as it has done for nearly two thousand years, as the divinely appointed object lesson of the common brotherhood of man. Those who kneel before the altar and partake of the communion cup know that their act represents the bond of unity which knits together those who are made one in the mystical body of Christ, which is the company of all faithful people. The sacredness of the Sacrament and its sanctioned fraternity would be annihilated if the members of a Christian congregation were to partake of the Sacramental wine either from a multitudinously laden tray, or through a private portable tube. The very thought of such a revolution of the simple service handed down through the centuries, simply overwhelms the imagination.

The writer of this article is a humble searcher after scientific truth, and is anxious to receive from the apostles of the germ theory an explanation of the following facts: In England there are about twenty thousand priests of the Anglo-Catholic church. He takes England as an example because he is familiar with its statistics. The clergy of the Church of England celebrate Holy Communion—some of them hundreds of times in the year.

Those who are familiar with the rubrical constitution of the Episcopal church are aware that the officiating priest is commanded not only to communicate himself, but also to consume reverently all that remains in the chalice. He does so by pouring water into the cup and then drinking its contents. If, then, the alarmist theory of the Plainfield physicians and lecturers be scientifically true, the clergy of the Church of England must be so thoroughly germ-cankered and diseased that they go down to death in tottering decay. But English statistics, drawn from the books of the insurance companies, have demonstrated the fact that the clergy of the Church of England have a higher average of life than any other class in the community. How, we ask, is this reconcilable with the warnings of the Plainfield physicians and lecturers who urge all modern Christians to ignore the plain command of the Catholic Church: "As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show forth the Lord's death till He come."

THE BEAUTIFUL SNOW IS HERE.

It Comes as the First Taste of Winter and Many Rejoice.

Tiny particles of the beautiful frozen flakes of congealed water, transparent in the moonlight, drifted lazily towards old Mother Earth last night at 9 o'clock and this morning the vision of humanity was greeted with an immaculate expanse of snow, covering all places save those swept by wintry blasts. It was the first real snow storm of the season. It brought joy to the mind of the ambitious youth in the expectancy of enjoying winter sports, and to the lverryman and coal dealer it was a forerunner to a regular harvest of Uncle Sam's golden coins; to the man about the house it brought visions of shovels and great banks of snow to be shoveled away to open an avenue of egress from fireside to business; to the merchant a brisk increase in trade is one of the necessary adjuncts; to the plumber it is the means of transforming him for the time being into an autocrat and a miniature mint; to humanity at large it comes as the first taste of winter, and we are all glad of it.

Three Years' Experience With Painless Dentistry.

Three years ago Dr. Charles R. Thiers' painless dentistry first became known in Plainfield. With the administration of a new anaesthetic which he at that time introduced, and which he has since greatly improved, his patients are enabled to undergo various dental operations without pain. Three years of experience has not shown one single case where the anaesthetic produced an unfavorable result. The extraction of teeth is no longer a thing to be dreaded at Dr. Thiers' office, No. 13 Grove street.

Dr. M. B. Long, ex-President of the Union County Medical Board, says of it in a letter:

Dr. Charles R. Thiers, My Dear Doctor: Having twice submitted to your method of painless extraction of teeth, I do not hesitate to announce that it was entirely successful.

Christian Endeavor Officers.

The following officers have been chosen by the Christian Endeavor society of the First Church of Christ for the ensuing year: President, Charles H. Lewis; Vice president, Miss Mabel Wilson; Corresponding secretary, Mrs. Ella Hand; Recording secretary, Miss Lillian Sutton; Treasurer, Mrs. Lou Wilson; Organist, Miss Mabel Benner; Assistant organist, Mrs. B. W. Hand; Chorister, H. VanMiddlesworth. The society has thirty-three active members, five associate and seven honorary.

How Small When You Think of It.

Two dollars per year is only about four cents per week. This is all that the organized Aid Association asks, and you can justly say to everyone who begs of you that if they will go to the office of the association and leave their name they will surely be cared for if they are worthy. Send subscriptions to Reynolds' drug store and ask for printed copies of the annual reports of the committees, and of Col. Tyler's valuable contribution to the literature of organized charities.

E. W. Hicks for Adrain's Place.

Petitions to ask Governor-elect John W. Griggs to appoint Edward W. Hicks Prosecutor of the Pleas for Middlesex county are in circulation in Middlesex. Mr. Hicks represented Middlesex in Trenton last session and was re elected this year with an increased majority. Mr. Hicks is a staunch Republican.

Wears a Veteran Jewel.

C. H. Rugg, of East Second street, is the only Odd Fellow in Plainfield who wears a "Veteran's Jewel," having been a member for twenty-five years, which is the qualification.

A Growing City.

The Plainfield contractors and builders say that the past year has been a most excellent one as there has been a great deal of building going on in this city.

GEORGE C. GODOWN DEAD.

THE RAVAGES OF A BRIEF ILLNESS TAKES HIM FROM THIS WORLD.

A Favorite Among All His Acquaintances and a Faithful Man at His Duties in the Postoffice—Sketch of His Life.

There is scarcely a person in this vicinity who was not deeply grieved when the news of the sudden death of Assistant Postmaster George C. Godown was received last evening.

One week ago last Friday he was taken with a bilious attack and was obliged to go home, and from that time his strength seemed to grow less. On the Wednesday following he felt slightly better and thought he would go to the office, which he did in a carriage. He remained but a short time, however, and returned again to his home when he rapidly grew worse until he passed away last evening about 5 o'clock. He was conscious up to within an hour of his death.

Mr. Godown was well known and a universal favorite. He was faithful to all, and his genial way was a marked feature in his life and character.

He was born at Limeport, Bucks county, Pa., in June, 1860, and was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Godown. When three years old he with his parents moved to Sandy Ridge, Hunterdon county.

He lived there seven years, during which time he attended school. In 1870 he came to Plainfield, where he remained for some time attending school at intervals. In 1880 he secured a position as clerk in the C. O. Dobbins in his cigar store, at that time at the corner of Park avenue and Second street. When E. R. Pope was appointed postmaster by President Arthur in March, 1882, he secured a position as stamp clerk. The office was then located on West Front street where Fuller's grocery is at present. During the term in 1884 Mr. and Mrs. Godown moved to Minnesota, remaining there two years. On their return George was engaged as a clerk in the Windsor Hotel at Trenton. From there he went to Point Pleasant and took a similar position, after which he returned to the Windsor Hotel for a time. He then came back to Plainfield, and when the late William L. Force was appointed postmaster by President Cleveland in September, 1887, he returned to the post office as money order clerk, and has been in the office ever since. E. R. Pope's second term and J. M. Hetfield's present administration. Upon the latter's appointment he was made assistant postmaster, which position he has filled with perfect satisfaction to his employer and with credit to himself.

His happy and bright disposition won him many friends while in his business he was an expert and perfectly trustworthy.

This morning Postmaster Hetfield draped the general delivery window with crepe while at the top was placed an excellent photograph of deceased.

In the home his place can never be filled, so closely knitted were the home ties, and at the postoffice he will be greatly missed by all. He was exceedingly popular with everyone, for whom he always had a good word.

Royal Arcanum Officers.

The following officers were elected at the meeting of Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, last evening: Regent, Henry C. Adams; Vice regent, M. L. Bullock; Orator, Murray Burtis; Past regent, Adrian M. Dey; Secretary, F. J. Pope; Collector, Elliott Burr; Treasurer, D. W. Littell; Chaplain, Edward C. Pease; Guide, J. E. Townsend; Warden, Charles Roberts; Sentry, James K. Arnold; Trustees, A. W. Rand, F. S. Green, A. W. Kleinecke; Medical Examiner, Geo. W. Endicott, M. D.; Representative to Grand Council, Adrian M. Dey; Alternate, P. A. Emmons.

Well-Known Man Dead.

Henry A. Ostermoor, a well known resident of Netherwood, died at his home on Belvidere avenue this morning after a ten-days illness of Bright's disease. Mr. Ostermoor was in the upholstering business in New York, and made a specialty of furnishing large halls, churches, etc. He was very well liked by all who knew him and has a large circle of friends. A wife, two sons and a daughter survive him.

Cheap for Cash.

A raffle was held in North Plainfield, Saturday evening, for a valuable horse. Jedediah M. Smalley was the lucky man and held the number that was drawn. The horse, which was a very good one, cost Mr. Smalley thirty-seven cents.

Mrs. Millers "At Home."

The last and most successful of the pleasant "at homes" of Mrs. Isaac L. Miller, of Watchung avenue, was held Saturday afternoon and evening. There was a very large attendance. The parlors were charmingly decorated with immense chrysanthemums and potted plants. The dining table presented a pleasing appearance with its decorations of smilax and pink roses. Mrs. Miller and Miss Miller were assisted in receiving by Mrs. Howard Fleming, Mrs. John Gray Foster, and the Misses Daisy Shephard, Gertrude Baker, Annie K. Miller and Marion Bowen.

An Important Change.

Since Wednesday the reading room of the Free Public Library will be open every week day evening from 7 until 10 o'clock, in addition to the day hours. On Saturday evenings the circulating hours will be from 7 until 10, instead of from 7:30 until 9 as heretofore.

your child

You note the difference in children. Some have nearly every ailment, even with the best of care. Others far more exposed pass through unharmed. Weak children will have continuous colds in winter, poor digestion in summer. They are without power to resist disease, they have no reserve strength. Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil, with hypophosphites, is cod-liver oil partly digested and adapted to the weaker digestions of children.

PRUSSIAN HORSES.

The Famous Stud Farm That Supplies the German Army With Animals.

In the easternmost corner of Prussia, near the village of Trakehnen, is a famous horse breeding establishment which was started by the father of Frederick the Great. This great stud farm is still carried on with characteristic energy, and not only provides the German army with the hundred thousand horses which it requires in times of peace, but does much toward keeping up a high general standard among the horses of the country. Nearly every farm in east Prussia is devoted to this one occupation, and the German army gets many more horses from this little corner than from anywhere else in the kingdom. The author of "The Borderland of Czar and Kaiser" gives an admirable picture of the gentleness and docility of the Trakehnen thoroughbreds:

We pulled up in a field where were 100 2-year-old stallions running free, and watched by two herders, each bearing a long whip, which he cracked now and then as a warning that some one of the herd was straying.

The herd appeared very quiet, and paid little attention to our carriage as it drove up close to them on the grass. The manager said they were as gentle as sheep and not half as shy, and at his invitation I jumped from my seat and walked up to them, into the very midst of them, strolling in and out among them, patting them on the nose or flank, wherever I happened to be nearest them.

To secure this result a prize is offered to those herders whose horses show the most confiding disposition at the approach of man.

One evening we went to see the horses called home from the pasture. They came in troops of hundreds, and gathered in large bodies before the stables. Each main body divided itself according to color, the blacks going to one corner, the browns to another, the bays to a third; a fourth was for the grays and whites.

Here and there would be one that had mistaken his corner, or was seeking for hidden company out of mischief. The keeper had no difficulty in detecting him by his right senses, however, by simply calling his name and waving his hand in the direction of the corner to which he belonged. The colt then addressed himself hurriedly to the corner to which he was an intruder and galloped straight to the corner whose color matched his. This we saw done many times over, and it never failed.

The Two Matches.

One day there was a traveler in the woods in California in the dry season, when the trade winds were blowing strong. He had ridden a long way, and he was tired and hungry and dismounted from his horse to smoke a pipe. But when he felt in his pocket he found but two matches. He struck the first and it would not light.

"Here is a pretty state o' things," said the traveler. "Dying for a smoke. Only one match left to light it with, and no flint. Was there ever a creature so unfortunate? And yet," thought the traveler, "suppose I light this match and smoke my pipe and then drop the match here in the grass. The grass might catch on fire, for it is dry like tinder, and while I snatch out the flames in front they might evade me and ignite behind me, and upon the brush of poison oak. Before I could reach it that would have blazed up. Over the bank I see a pine tree hung with moss. That, too, would fly in fire upon the instant to its topmost bough, and the flame of that long torch, how would the trade wind take and branch it that through the inflammable forest! I hear the dull roar in a moment with the joint voice of wind and fire. I see myself gallop for my soul, and the flying flame outpaces and outflank me through the hills. I see the pleasant forest burn for days, and the cattle roasted, and the springs dried up, and the farmer ruined, and his children cast upon the world. What a world hangs upon this moment!"

With that he struck the match, and it saloed fire.

"Thank God," said the traveler, and he put his pipe in his pocket.—The Late R. L. Stevenson in Longman's Magazine.

Victoria's Coronation Ordeal.

Victoria's coronation ceremonies, according to The Woman at Home, lasted more than six hours, and throughout the queen played her part with wonderful composure. Care, says the same writer, had been taken to provide a crown suitable for the small head, but no one had thought about reducing the size of the orb which she was required to carry in her right hand. "What am I to do with this?" she asked in concern. "Carry it, your majesty," replied Lord John Thynne. "Must I? It is very heavy," the queen answered in a piteous appealing voice. However it was too late to protest, and she obeyed the exigencies of the situation. A worse mistake had been made with regard to the ruby encircled ring. The jeweler had made it to fit her majesty's little finger, whereas the archbishop declared that according to the rubric it must be put upon the larger finger, and accordingly he forced it into that position. The queen bore her painfully swelling finger with the same heroism that she carried the weighty orb. Afterward the finger was so much swollen that it had to be bathed in ice water before the ring could be drawn off.

Animal Superstitions.

In the east it is commonly said that ten animals were admitted to paradise: (1) The ant, which is supposed to be Solomon's sleeper of Ephesus; (2) Balaam's ass, which reproved the disobedient prophet; (3) Solomon's ant, which reproved the same sluggard; (4) Jonah's whale; (5) the ram of Ishmael, caught by the horns, and offered in sacrifice instead of Isaac; (7) the camel of Saleh; (8) the ox of Mohammed Dhabe; (9) that of Moses; (10) the animal called Al Borak, which conveyed Mohammed to heaven. The following are sometimes added or substituted: The ass on which our Saviour rode into Jerusalem; the ass on which the queen of Sheba rode when she visited Solomon.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Frank and Explicit.

A city visitor in a country town had a tea party given in her honor, where she says she watched the country folk spoil their pleasant customs by imitating city artificiality. One old maiden, however, believed unconsciously the boredom of the afternoon. "Will you have milk and sugar in your tea?" she was asked. "Sugar, if lump; if not, no. Milk, if cream; if not, no."—Boston Transcript.

Good manners is the art of making those people easy with whom we converse; whoever makes the fewest persons uneasy is the best bred man in company.—Swift.

The "Pilgrim's Progress" was first published on the 21st of August, 1678, and on the same day many years later its great author passed to his rest.

ALONG THE WAY OF LIFE.

When sorrows come at flood tide pace,
Where hope and joy lie sleeping,
Handmaids of grief and pain have place
And hold the soul in keeping.
When grim despair sits at the helm,
Amear the breakers roaring,
Where waves of trouble fain would whelm
Afar from haven or mooring.

When tears no more from a loving eye
Course down a cheek once ruddy,
And hearts alarmed at the warning cry
Respond with throbbings bloody,
Sad, sad the day and drear the hour
When hope sits faint and pleading.
When the eye hath lost its tearborn power,
And hearts fall prone, unheeding.

Then comes the time when life no more
Holds fast the maid of sorrow,
Which fain would seek an unknown shore,
And another life tomorrow.
Where tears and trouble unbidden start,
And life has brighter skies,
Where a contrite spirit and broken heart
Our God will not despise.

THE CELEBES VOLCANOES.

They Are Said to Be the Most Dangerous in the World.

"There are few people who know that the south Pacific volcanoes are the most destructive in the world," said the Rev. Dr. William E. Houston. "I have been a great student of those volcanoes, and have spent much time visiting them. The volcano districts of the Bay of Naples and Sicily are small as compared with those of the northern peninsula of the island of Celebes, just to the east of Borneo, in the south Pacific ocean. Vesuvius and Etna are insignificant as compared with the volcanic chain that forms this island region. One or the other of the volcanoes in this great chain is continually belching forth streams of lava and great stones, then fluid rivers of mud, like the stony Dead Donds, 9,000 feet high, and the Sapoetan, 9,000 feet, are the two greatest volcanoes of the district.

"Each of them has been in eruption several times during the last 100 years. Were it not a sparsely settled country the loss of life would be great. Klabat, or Two Summits, is the highest of the group. It is marked by a great lake in its crater, and not far away is Douwa Duedara. Two Sisters; still another is Soetoa, or Three Brothers. It says is inhabited by an evil spirit, and from which there came a terrible eruption about 500 years ago that devastated the entire district. All of the islands around the north end of Celebes are volcanic. The archipelago that leads to the Philippean islands, to the north, is dotted with active mouths of fire, important among which is the superb pyramidal volcano Aboe, which, translated, means ashes, and Gunova Aiva, which, in all probability, has been the most destructive volcano the world has ever known. These islands are owned by Holland. The people are Malays and Alfoorcos; the most civilized people of the group are those being Malays, the savage tribes of the interior, Alfoorcos. There are many tribes in Celebes, some of Papuan, others of Philippine origin. The headhunting tribes also dominates. During the present century thousands of the inhabitants of Celebes were buried beneath the ashes and lava from the volcanoes thrown up by volcanic eruption, utterly overwhelming them in molten sheets. All these islands are nevertheless a paradise of luxuriant vegetation, and their virgin forests have never felt the touch of an ax."—Kansas City Times.

She Was Cautious.

Here is an example of woman as a diplomatist. Mrs. A. had gone away from home for a day's visit. During her absence her fellow servant, Mrs. B., called. Mrs. B., after the pleasant, rural, self inviting fashion, that she would spend the night with Mrs. A. In spite of Mrs. A.'s absence she things were so accomplish, for was no hatchkeys of the two houses were alike. Mrs. B. therefore effected an entrance, and found the house deserted. "Oh, well, I'll just wait till Mrs. A. comes home," she said to herself. Night came. Still no Mrs. A. "I won't light a lamp," philosophized Mrs. B., "because seeing a light in the house might scare Mrs. A. clear out of her senses."

So the unexpected guest sat in the dark awaiting the arrival of her hostess. At last the rattle of a key was heard in the door latch. She entered the house and slowly made her way to the "sitting room," where unconscious Mrs. A. was. She was another human being within breathing range. "Don't be frightened, Mrs. A.," suddenly spoke a voice from the darkness. "It's only I, Mrs. B. I didn't light a lamp for fear you'd be scared, you know, and"— But the diplomatic Mrs. B. never finished her sentence, for just here Mrs. A. fell on the floor in a dead faint. "I'm glad queer she should have been so scared," said Mrs. B., afterward, "for I took every precaution not to frighten her."—New York Sun.

Just the Coat For Him.

A man, having a heavy overcoat on, was walking up a street and into the country, and having a good distance to go thought of leaving his coat at a cottage. Seeing one, unencumbering himself as he rides, and pulling off his heavy coat he glanced to it a piece of paper having the following words written upon it, "Don't touch this coat, for I have a loaded pistol." Then he placed the coat under a hedge and went on his way.

After having completed his journey he started back, returning to the place where he had left his coat, and to his astonishment the coat was gone, and only the piece of paper remained, with the inscription, "Thanks. Each pocket contains a pistol; I have got the smallpox," on the other side of the paper.—London Tit-Bits.

The Only Gold Toilet Set.

The only complete gold toilet service in the world belongs to the khedive of Egypt. It was made in London, and consists of 28 pieces. Each piece bears the monogram of the khedive in diamonds, the same being surrounded by a fillet in imitation of that of the Grand Turk. There are 2,000 diamonds and over 1,200 rubies were used in decorating these golden toilet articles. The body of each piece is of 18 carat gold, and all are inclosed in a fine Senegal incrusted ebony case.—St. Louis Republic.

No Excuse.

She (just kissed)—How dare you, sir?

He—I hope you will pardon me; I didn't think.

She—Think? Of course you didn't think. But your inability to think is no excuse for your conduct. I suppose you mean to tell me that if you had stopped to think, you would not have wanted to kiss me.—Indianapolis Journal.

ANNUAL DINNER OF THE PLAINFIELD YALE CLUB.

The Alumni Listen to Philosophical and Witty Remarks From Bright Men—All Sounded the Praises of Yale.

The happiest days in the life of a man are said to be his school days, but to one who has passed through college the time he spent there is the most enjoyable, and there are very few men who do not like to meet their old friends once more and talk over the days when he was a verdant freshman or a grave and reverend senior. And of all college men, the Yale graduates know how to enjoy themselves, as last evening showed. About fifty of them, with several invited guests, gathered in the Casino for the annual dinner of the Yale Club of Plainfield.

The tables were arranged in the shape of a giant U, at the head of which sat James R. Joy, president of the club, and toastmaster. At the place of honor on his right was the old and dignified president of Yale University, Dr. Timothy Dwight, while on his left was Dr. Austin, president of Rutgers College. The tables were lighted by silver candelabra while blue Yale ribbon and holly were arranged in pretty designs on the snowy-white covers. Several screens separated the tables from the stage. The well known Yale flags, which have so often waved at victorious contests, graced the walls and gallery while a handsome American flag hung *in artistic folds over the large fire*place. And here the Yale men, some old, some young, gathered for their alumni dinner and talked and laughed over stories of those good old days and then joined in the chorus of some well-remembered song that recalled thoughts of places and people now almost forgotten. The dinner was a most excellent one. The menu was as follows:

Blue Point Oysters
Consommee Royal
Salmon Trout Sauce Hollandaise
Potatoes Parisiennes
Filet of Beef with Mushrooms
Potato Croquettes Asparagus
Roman Punch
Roast Turkey
Cranberry Jelly Squash Pies
Prairie Chicken Celery Mayonnaise
Ice Cream Charlotte Russe
Roquefort and Camembert Cheese
Fruit Coffee Cigars.

And, in the intervals between the courses, some of the younger alumni struck up some humorous ditty or one of the good old songs to swell known to the sons of Eli. Will N. Runyon with three other well-known singers, sang together and made an excellent quartette, and Runyon sent his hearers into roars of laughter when he sang that quaint and sorrowful tale of the young man, the maid, and the parrot that talked.

When the last course was finished and the clouds of curling blue smoke gradually increased as cigar after cigar was lighted, Toastmaster Joy arose from his seat.

According to the menu the toasts and the speeches were as follows:

Yale ..... President Dwight
"I mighty Mother, proudly see
Beside the far inreaching sea,
None shall thy troubled past forget,
Or doubt thy future must be great."
—Edmund Clarence Stedman, '53
The State of New Jersey ..... Dr. Austin Scott
"In whose face
Cavalier honour, Huguenot valour,
The Quaker truth and sweetness,
And the strength of the danger-girdled race
Of Holland, blend in a proud completeness."
Planco Consule ..... Dr. James M. Whiton
"We dwelt within the old Brick Row,
Before Durfee or Welch was built,
Or gilded youths in Vanderbilt
Took down the old and set up new
The trophies of a conqueror."
—Fitz-Greene Halleck
Lux et Veritas ..... Dr. William R. Richards
But Mr. Joy had scarcely risen to his feet when Will Runyon sprang up and it was "Three cheers for Joy," which were given with a right good will. Then the president of the club was allowed to speak. After a few well-chosen words Dr. Dwight was introduced as the President and Beelzebub of Yale. Then the gray-haired old man took the floor and, in his dry, humorous way, said that in all his experiences, of which he gave a few, that he had never had the good or bad fortune, whichever it was, to be given that title. After speaking in a light vein for several minutes he came back to the subject of his toast, Yale, and spoke of the college. He called the life at Yale the richest and dearest part of a graduate's experiences, and thanked the Divine Providence for the privilege of entering and going through the college and remaining there the rest of his life. There it was, he said, that we learn what real friendship is. After speaking on Yale of the past he said:

"The same spirit is there now that there was forty years ago but the institution has grown wonderfully in numbers, resources and opportunities. I look forward with great confidence to the future and expect that in the next century greater improvements will be made. Let me extend to you from me and from the institution a kindly greeting."

After a few closing words, Dr. Dwight sat down.

After the loud applause had subsided to some extent, Mr. Joy said: "Dr. Dwight has prepared for the future and appointed his successor, William Runyon."

And then the coming president started a rollicking song "If I Were President," well known to Yale men, of the general good time he would have if he "were president."

Dr. Austin Scott, of the Class of '69 and now president of Rutgers College, responded to the toast "The State of New Jersey." He spoke of New Jersey as the subject of gibes and jeers and declared that she did not deserve it. "If there is one state in the Union," he exclaimed, "that is not representative state, that state is New Jersey." I will not say that she is the best but she has the extremes; what she has that is good, is very good, but that which is bad, is horrid." He also spoke of New Jersey as a deciding state, in politics as in other things, "Yale has had her share in this. There are two things that stir my heart and they are New Jersey and Yale. Yale is like New Jersey in that it is materially representative." And after other remarks in a similar vein, the diners united in the song "America" and then Dr. James M. Whiton answered his toast on "Planco Consule," and told of the doings of Yale, on the campus, in the gymnasium and the athletic field. He also told the story of the first athletic contest between Yale and Harvard which he arranged. Harvard was represented at the dinner by Jose A. Machad and he was next to respond. He remarked upon the feeling between Yale and Harvard and hoped the present situation was only temporary. He spoke of the two as national allies, but friendly rivals and brought the greetings of their Harvard brothers.

After a verse of "Auld Lang Syne" S. St. John McCutchen responded to "The Blue." Reminiscences followed joke, and story followed reminiscence until his auditors had to stop laughing for sheer want of breath. He told of the famous Yale spirit and how it makes every Yale man that enters a contest feel that he has got to win.

Dr. B. Van D: Hedges, as the Princeton speaker, was also very entertaining. He remarked upon the wonderful coolness of Yale men in daily life as well as in the athletic field and gave a very laughable experience with some of them.

"Lux et veritas," the motto of Yale, was spoken upon by William R. Richards, and in a few words he told of the many true straightforward men that had come forth from Yale and spoke of these two as general characteristics of many Yale graduates. He referred to the woman of New Haven whose opinion of Yale was so poor and seemed to think she knew very little of most of the students at that institution. Several songs followed and then with a rousing "Rah, rah, rah, rah, rah, Yale!" the party broke up.

The gallery was filled with the friends of the diners. Those present at the dinner were:

A. H. Atterbury and J. C. Palmer, of Brooklyn; M. S. Bate, of New York; H. L. Moody and J. M. Wells, of Westfield; Clifford Kelsey, Charles S. Foote, Edward Finch, George H. Ryder, Robert S. Tracy and E. A. S. Man, of Fanwood; J. F. Raymond, H. C. Tracy and Mr. Richards, of Orange; Mr. Schultise, Tom Arbuthnot and Mr. Schribin, of New York; William H. Corbin, of Elizabeth; Assemblyman C. N. Codding, of Westfield; Evarts Tracy, John Leal, Henry A. McGee, W. D. Murray, Mr. Hutchens, Mr. Calkins, Arthur Lovell, Clarence Peck, Fred Yates, Irving West, T. VanBoskerck, Percy Stewart, Mr. Foote, Mr. Stewart, C. C. Cokefair, William N. Runyon, Howard Huntington, John M. Whiton, Jose A. Machado, Assemblyman-elect Charles A. Reed, S. St. John McCutchen, Dr. Austin Scott, J. R. Joy, Dr. Timothy Dwight, Dr. William R. Richards, Dr. James M. Whiton, Dr. B. Van D. Hedges, Samuel Huntington, J. E. Tracy and W. F. Murray.

First Musical.

The first musical of the Thursday Evening Music Club was held last evening in the Olympia. The programme was one composed of nothing but the works of Ethelbert Nevin. The guests were Dr. and Mrs. T. S. Davis, Dr. Ida B. Hunt, Mrs Coard, Mrs. Maxson, Miss Mary Collier, Messrs. Charles Davis, Charles Noble and Mr. Sprowl.

Epworth Gathering.

All the members of the Epworth League are urged to be present at their meeting and sociable this evening in Vincent chapel. Get in line for work in the evangelistic services soon to be held. You are cordially invited to take supper with the ladies. Let there be a general rally.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
Dr. G. C. Osgood,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
Dr. J. F. Kincheloe,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. Archer, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although the only regular medical supplies what is kn... as regular produ... we are free to confess that the merits ... Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

OFF FOR THE DARK CONTINENT.

What Is to Be Plainfield's Loss Will Be Africa's Gain.

The regular monthly business meeting of the W. C. T. U., held yesterday afternoon in their rooms on Watchung avenue terminated in a very pleasant manner, which it is safe to say will never be forgotten by those present.

Miss Rachel Mair, who sails for Africa on Saturday morning, was given an informal reception by the members and the event was an affecting one. Miss Clementine R. Yates arose and spoke in part as follows:

Dear sister, as you are about to leave us and go to dark Africa, this afternoon we are all exceedingly sorry that Plainfield is going to loose you, but we congratulate Africa. We know that you will take Christ with you and the prayers of this union will also go with you. We felt as though we ought to give you a little gift as a souvenir, for your faithfulness in this union and for what you have been to us.

At this time Miss Yates presented Miss Mair with a tourist satchel containing a purse with money and a very handsome copy of the "Christian Legacy." Miss Mair responded by heartily thanking all for their generous gifts. Two other gifts not to be opened till Christmas were presented by the teachers of Warren chapel and Mr. and Mrs. Seeley Edsall. Each member had written a letter and they were also presented to Miss Mair. They are not to be opened till she boards the steamer. The balance of the afternoon was devoted to sociability, during which tea and wafers were served.

Miss Mair and Miss Arms, of Iowa, will sail Saturday morning on the Steamer Lucania and upon their arrival in Liverpool will meet Bishop Taylor. From there they will go to Brook's station, Africa, one hundred miles from Cape Pamas, which is the postoffice address. They expect to arrive there in six weeks.

German Society Nominations.

The following officers were nominated at the business meeting of the Saengerand Turn Verein societies held last evening in their hall on Somerset street: President, Robert Jahn, Henry Haurand, M. Schoettlin; vice-president, John Richter, H. Meyer, H. Voegel, R. Wargle; corresponding secretary, M. Schroettlin, L. Kohner; financial secretary, C. Felber, L. Moraller; treasurer, A. Wolff, L. Moraller, C. Duvier. The nominations for the finance committee were laid over till next meeting.

A Novel Trade.

Augustus M. Frazee, of Plainfield, was here on Tuesday to trade crutches with Fred Mildenburger, who was a chum of his at the time both were laid up in Muhlenberg Hospital. "Gus" is minus a leg but looks younger than he did thirty years ago when he ran a daily express between Plainfield and New York.—Bound Brook Democrat.

SONGS OF A COLONIAL KIND.

RENDERED BY YOUNG PEOPLE WITH CALICO DRESSES, ETC.

The Old Folkes Concerte Successfully Carried Out Before an Appreciative Audience—The Old Names of Participants.

In a mental and optical way a fair sized audience in the Y. M. C. A. Hall was last night carried back to the colonial period. It was the occasion of the "concerte of ye olde folkes" given under the direction of Ernest Skoover Makepeace MacClymont. The programme, which had a superfluous lot of ys and es, announced that "ye musick will commence at earlie candle lighte."

This phrase was put on the programme in a figurative sense, but it came near being literally true. After the choir had become seated on the platform and were about ready to commence vocalizing, a fuse in the electric light system blew out and the hall was plunged into sudden darkness. After a tedious wait of a half hour the break was repaired and the concert was started.

The numbers were all pleasingly rendered, evidencing careful training of the participants by Mr. MacClymont. The character impersonated by William G. Runyon was especially mirth provoking and his make-up as the prim old maid was very ludicrous. During the progress of the programme he sang a laughable parody on "There is Only One Girl in This World for Me."

The women singers were as follows: Asphyxia Williams, Smanthy Glen, Belinda Runyon, Humility Keenan, Mehitable Bitterfinder, Desonelo Dunham, Prudence Bleeker, Belinda Petrie, Keziah Keeping, Vanderpool, Bilsh, Pettingil McKillop, Belinda Norgise Scarborough, Keziah Chism Gleb, Rebecca Pepple, Mary Crescent, daughter of Benedict Arnold, Wealthy Ann Mennesmith, Deliverance Herring, Bumps Blair, Periwinkle Pruden, Arsenith Newell, Twitchel Runyon, Sheria Petrie, Rachel Pruden and Goodenough Bond.

The following were the men singers:

Deacon Hezekiah Miner, Jonadab, Hasstine, Melchizidek Spriggins Drake, Ichabod Hooker Barnes, Adonijah Warren Pope, Valient Brettle Flannery, Zebidee Miner, Noah Bumpus Yaager, Ephaham Primrose Schutt, Theophrastus Baxter Honeyman, Selah Brinsindad Gallup, Sunlighte Hornblower McGee, Josiah Peeble Petrie, Brother Nathaniel Smedley, Samantha Jane Moon, George Washington Angleman.

The programme was as follows:

RULERS BEYOND THE BROOK.

THEY MEET AND DISPOSE OF MANY BOROUGH MATTERS.

Reports of Officers Received as to Progress of Work in the Various Municipal Departments—Improvements to be Made

The only member absent from the Borough Council meeting last evening was Councilman Peck. After the minutes of the last regular and adjourned meetings were read the financial statement of Clerk Arnold was presented as follows:

	Balance.	Deficit.
Borough	$1,001.39
Fire department	$ 229.19
Light		$ 308.46
Roads	$ 674.30
Poor		$ 288.30
	$1,905.81	$ 786.96
	$ 786.96
Total balance	$1,209.85
Fines		$ 69.60
B. A. Begeman, Jr		4.86
Cartmen's license		10.00
Harrison street improvements		110.00
		$187.06

The report was received and filed.

Rev. Jocelyn Johnstone and others asked for a crosswalk on the south side of Mercer avenue, and the matter was referred to the Streets and Public Health Committee.

The monthly budget of bills was presented and later ordered paid after being audited.

Mr. Valiant, from the Laws, Ordinances and Election Committee, reported that the Green brook matter had been referred to the Board of Health and the latter had consulted the Borough Counsel.

Mr. Lounsbury stated that the overcoats for the marshals had been purchased and were now in use, also that a pair of trousers had been purchased for Marshal Lines, who did not get a pair when the other marshals were supplied.

The report was received and filed.

Mr. Smith reported that 9,675 feet had been macadamized on Harrison street and that together with the sand, gravel and grading had cost $640.45. The cost of stone was $313.16, making a total cost, with sundries, of $958.11. A little later the clerk read a report of the street committee which was received and filed.

Mr. Schutt offered a resolution that Elias McFarland, Abram L. Cadmus and A. E. Hoagland having failed to comply with the ordinance in regard to the laying of sidewalks, that the street commissioner be instructed to lay the tasks and the council take steps to effect a lien on the property for the payment. The resolution was adopted. Mr. Howell offered a resolution that a map be procured for the commissioner appointed to assess benefits and damages along the proposed extension of Watchung avenue. The resolution was adopted.

A resolution was introduced by Mr. Valiant which provided for the drawing of $848 to pay a note of $800 with interest, to the Gamewell Fire Alarm Company, due December 5th. The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Smith offered a resolution which was adopted that a warrant be drawn for $1,560.90 in favor of Treasurer H. N. Spencer to meet the note of $1,500 with interest due December 10th, and have the same charged to road account.

Mr. Lounsbury offered a similar resolution for the same amount, the same to becharged to the borough account. It was so ordered.

Mr. Lounsbury brought up the matter of the condition of the approach to the Elm place bridge on the borough side. He said that his attention had been called to it and upon investigation found it to be in very bad shape and exceedingly dangerous. The matter was referred to the street committee. They will confer with the Freeholders and see what can be done.

The following is the street committee's report for the past two months, showing expenditures on borough streets:

Brook avenue	$ 14 05
Myrtle	6 50
Duer street and Mercer avenue, crosswalks	4 75
Johnston's drive	16 00

There being no further business the council then adjourned.

Handsome Residence.

A very handsome $6,000 residence is about to be erected on Stelle avenue for Lawyer L. Dennis, of New York. Both the interior and exterior will be very fine. Clum & Lancaster are the architects, W. H. Brokaw the carpenter, Seaman Williams the mason and C. M. Baybert the plumber. Work will be commenced very soon.

A WIDER FIELD OPEN.

Rev. C. E. Dunn Called to Take the Pastorate of an Illinois Church.

The Rev. C. E. Dunn, pastor of the Third Presbyterian church of Albany, N. Y., has received a unanimous call to the First Presbyterian church, of Freeport, Illinois.

Mr. Dunn is a son of S. F. Dunn, of this city, and has many friends here who will be glad to hear that he is to have the opportunity of taking of a wider field than the present one.

Jas. R. Cowley, city editor of the Freeport Journal, writes as follows:

"The First Presbyterian church is the leading church in this city. The last pastor, Rev. Dr. Hill, had been here only about a year when the congregation granted him a vacation to visit Europe and paid his expenses, and a few months later, again sent him abroad. During his pastorate they put in a $5,000 organ, and remodeled the interior of the church and put in a gallery. A pastor who is liked, and they have never yet had one who was not liked, can get anything he wants. The congregation is wealthy and will back up the pastor in any good work that he may attempt. Dr. Hill told me it was the greatest trial of his life to leave here, yet his best friends in the church urged him to go. Where they loved him, they did not wish to stand in the way of his advancement."

Mr. Dunn will visit the field and occupy the pulpit next Sunday.

THE RIDDLE RECITAL.

A Small Audience Entertained in a Pleasing Manner.

Before a small, but enthusiastic, audience, George Riddle gave a recital at Y. M. C. A. Hall last evening. The programme was one of unusual excellence and well deserved a crowded house. The first part consisted of several scenes from Victor Hugo's "Lucretia Borgia." The selections gave Mr. Riddle a chance to show his fine ability in tragedy.

The second part consisted of a selection from "The Rivals" by Sheridan, one from Kate Douglass Wiggins' "Village Dressmaker" and "A Piece of Red Calico" by Stockton.

Plainfield has not heard Mr. Riddle before in humorous parts, but he is as good in amusing as he is perfect in his tragedical renditions. The three selections were all full of humor and kept the audience in continual roars of laughter. In the "Village Dressmaker" Mr. Riddle was especially pleasing, his imitation of the village gossip and her sewing being very realistic.

Concert at Bethel Mission.

The music lovers of Plainfield will be glad to learn that another concert like those so much enjoyed in years past is to be given at Bethel chapel next Thursday evening. The programme is under the direction of the regular precentor, and will consist of songs by members of the Sunday-school. Many of the selections will be the old plantation melodies familiar in times before the war, and now so interesting when revived. Much enjoyment is promised, and a large audience should seize this opportunity for an evening of pleasure.

In a New York Hospital.

Joseph B. Gavin, of Columbia avenue, who a few months ago lost his hearing and has since been receiving medical attention from noted specialists was compelled a short time ago to relinquish his business and enter the Eye and Ear Infirmary at Thirteenth street and Second avenue. Mr. Gavin is reported as being somewhat better. Several of Mr. Gavin's friends have called upon him since he has been there and "Joe" was glad to see them.

Progress.

Man's ingenuity is never dormant; it constantly keeps pace with the demands of the times, and in no line is this ingenuity more evident than in the designing of Christmas gifts, ample proofs of which you will see if you visit Collier's, 103 Park avenue, and inspect the many new, rich, and yet low-priced holiday devices in gold and silver. You will be charmed as well as surprised at the beauty and reasonableness.

Receipts Exceeds Expenses.

The managers of the course of lectures now being delivered by Professor Riggs are happy to announce that the proceeds of the sale of tickets is so much in excess of the expenses, that it is expected that one or more lectures will be added to the course which the holders of tickets will be at liberty to attend without further cost.

Attention, Young Men.

Harry M. Jaquett has taken great pains to meet your wants in the shape of overcoats, suits, separate trousers, hats, neckwear, etc. Stop and see him, it will do you good.

Children Cry for It.

"Omnia" bread is unexcelled for growing children as it builds up their bodies perfectly, makes sound teeth, bone and muscle to perfection. Try it. All grocers are served by the Hygienic Food Co., of Orange.

NEIGHBORS' QUARREL AIRED.

LIVELY SET-TO BETWEEN LITIGANTS IN CITY COURT TODAY.

A Petition Presented to the Court Declaring a Family to Be a Nuisance—It Did Not Affect the the Verdict—Other Cases.

A hackmen's quarrel opened the cases in the city court this morning and then, as a grand climax, a scrap between some of the residents of West Sixth street and Mason place.

James MacArdle and John Keely were arraigned before Judge Coddington on the charge of the violation of the hack ordinance. Wm. L. Callahan was the complainant and he charged them with soliciting trade yesterday at the North Avenue station. Callahan brought George Belcher and John Kelley as witnesses. MacArdle said that instead of soliciting a passenger he had merely gone in answer to a question from a woman on the steps. The Judge reserved his decision until next Saturday. City Judge-elect DeMeza represented the two prisoners.

Three little boys, one colored and two white, all under fourteen years of age, were the next to line up in front of the prisoners' mail. They were Harry Boyd, Fred Ammon and Gustav Sutterline, and they were charged with carrying and shooting firearms within the city limits and smashing the switch lights on the railroad. Station Agent Haynes was present and told of the great danger to life and limb on the trains when the switch lamps were destroyed. All three of the boys pleaded guilty, but George W. DeMeza asked for mercy on account of their age.

Judge Coddington did not agree with him, however, and thought that an example should be made of them to prevent any reoccurrence of the shooting. He therefore fined the boys $20 each or thirty days at the county jail. Boyd's fine was paid. The parents of the other boys have not been heard from.

Then came the exciting case of the day which was adjourned from last Monday. The cause of all the trouble and excitement was an old German named Frank Conde, who had been arrested on the charge of using profane and indecent language. The court room in the station house was crowded with witnesses and friends of the two parties. The complaint was made by John Pfeiffer, of Manson place. George W. DeMeza was counsel for the accused. Laura Pfeider, wife of John Pfeider, was the first to be put on the witness stand.

Her story was that a week ago yesterday morning she sent two of her youngest children to the candy store on an errand, and that Conde's daughter-in-law sent her children to throw stones at them, so she sent her older boy to protect the children. Then Conde came out and threw half of a brick-bat at her and called her names.

"What did he call you?" asked the Judge.

"Must I tell?" said the witness.

"We would like to know," replied the Judge, and then shutting her teeth together, she gave the tirade of abuse and disgusting language that she had heard. Her two little boys, one four and one seven years, who could hardly see the Judge, they were so short, substantiated her statements, and all the cross-questioning of DeMeza could not shake their testimony.

Conde was next brought up and it was claimed that he could not speak English, although he seemed to grasp the situation without any trouble. Special Officer Giese acted as interpreter. At first he did not know anything about a scrap, but the women in the room warmed up to the fray and Conde soon caught the excitement and began to answer with some interest.

Pfeiffer was given a chance to cross-examine him which he did in German.

"Hold on here" exclaimed DeMeza, as the two grew excited, "we want to be in this," and then the examination was translated. Other witnesses were brought up and high words were exchanged between the would-be women, a petition was presented, signed by several of the neighbors, in which they declared the Pfeiffers were a nuisance.

"This shows without a doubt what kind of a woman Mrs Pfeiffer is" remarked DeMeza.

"Yes," screamed the woman referred to, "you come and live along side of me for a couple of years and I'll show you what I am." The lengthy testimony did not prove anything and after a lively set of words for almost two hours, the Judge decided that prisoner guilty and gave him his choice between a fine of $5 or twenty days in jail. The fine was paid.

Superstitious People.

The ladder that crosses the sidewalk from outside the curb line and reaches to the top of the unfinished building of Assemblyman elect Coddington on Park avenue, is the means of making many superstitious people cross the street to the easterly side of that thoroughfare to escape walking under the ladder. They claim that bad luck follows one who will walk under a ladder while in such a position as this one is.

ENDEAVORERS ANNIVERSARY.

The Seventh-Day Baptist Society Four Years Old.

In place of the regular morning service in the Seventh-Day Baptist church this morning, the fourth anniversary of the Christian Endeavor Society of the church was held. The members of the society were seated together in the front of the church while the Juniors marched in and occupied the first four rows of pews.

The meeting was led by Miss Louise Lewis, president of the society. After singing by the congregation, several anthems by a large chorus choir, and prayer, a collection was taken. Then Miss Bessie Titsworth made her report as secretary. She told how the society had been started four years ago with sixteen members which has now been increased to sixty-nine. She spoke of the work that had been done and of the great enthusiasm and sociability of the members. She also pointed out the work that had been done by the committees, especially the missionary committee.

Miss Titsworth read the report of Mrs. H. M. Maxson, superintendent of the Juniors, who were celebrating their second anniversary. The report was encouraging; there are forty-one members while the finances are in a prosperous condition.

In place of the sermon, four papers were read, first by Clarence Rogers whose subject was "The Pledge;" the next was, "Am I My Brother's Keeper?" by Miss Lena Tomlinson; the third was, "The Inspiration Which This Society Gives" by Asa Randolph; and the last "The Relation of the Church and the Society to Each Other" by Mrs. J. G. Miller. The papers were all very helpful and laid great stress on the work of the juniors in preparation for their work in the other society.

The service closed with a short address by Rev. L. E. Livermore, who summed up the substance of the five speakers and gave an illustration of the Sunday-school lesson of the afternoon, "David and Goliath." He made the letters in David's name represent the five talks of the morning and called them Unity, Affection, Virtue, Inspiration and Duty.

WORK AMONG THE UNEDUCATED.

A Missionary Tells of Her Labors Among Southern People.

The meeting of the Home Missionary Society of the Crescent Avenue church, held yesterday afternoon in the chapel of the church, was one of great interest to the large number of members present.

Mrs. Pierson, president of the society, presided and conducted the devotional exercises. Miss Ketcham, the secretary, read the minutes of the preceding meeting, which were approved.

Also a very interesting letter from Miss Jennie Buchanan, of Mt. Pleasant, Utah. Miss Buchanan has charge of the mission school at that place, and the Plainfield society takes a great interest in her work. She reported having received substantial aid from the society for which she was thankful.

Mrs. Kimball then gave an enjoyable report of the last synodical meeting of the society. This was followed by the reading of a letter by Mrs. Hallowa from the Home Missionary Journal of New York.

Mrs. Pierson then spoke of the Dorlon Academy at Hot Springs, Va., where Miss Kate Newhall is at present and working in the school. The school is in great need and the society will render assistance immediately. Mrs. Pierson then introduced Mrs. Grant, of North Carolina, who has been laboring among the mountaineers. Mrs. Grant entered in a vivacious style, consisting of a white silk bonnet trimmed with ribbons and flowers. She also wore a lace wrap and a gown dark material. She gave an exceedingly interesting talk of her experience among these peculiar people, showing conclusively that they deserved very much in the way of help, education, etc. She told much about the peculiar habits, customs and manners of these people that was listened to with pleasure by all. The next meeting of the society will be devoted to sewing by the members and the preparation of a barrel to be sent to a mission field.

Postal News.

The postal authorities at Washington have granted Postmaster Hetfield two assistants for the increased business during the Christmas holidays.

On Monday morning Frank J. Quaas, now clerk at Werner's clothing store, will enter upon his duties as substitute clerk at the postoffice.

Assistant Postmaster Geo. Godown is still very ill with heart trouble.

Evangelistic Meetings.

Col. Hadley's evangelistic meetings in this city will be held Sunday, December 15th and December 22d. the first meeting to be held in Trinity Reformed church. Miss Sarah Wray, the noted singing evangelist, will speak in the Park Avenue Baptist church, Sunday morning, December 15th.

VANDALISM.

The Savagery of Some People Who Call Themselves Civilized.

The savagery of savages is as nothing to the savagery of some creatures who are brought up in civilized communities and all themselves civilized also. We have few records of Indians or Zulus wantonly destroying pictures or books or statuary unless they thought them "bad medicine" and held devils. Yet how far could one of our city thugs be trusted in the presence of a work of art or a thing of beauty? It seems to be a sort of instinct with him to throw a stone whenever he sees flowers or ornaments, or to pull out a knife and hack at them, or to upset or scratch or injure them. In a certain blind and brute way, perhaps, his conduct gives him a flattering sense of power. He cannot make anything useful or beautiful himself, but he can destroy it.

The only way to cure these vandals appears to be either to educate them early or drown them. Drowning is the least expensive, but there is a public prejudice against it, so for a few centuries we must expect to see our public buildings defaced, our metal work bent and scratched, our plate glass broken, our street lights shattered, our pictures ripped with canes and umbrellas, our mirrors marked with initials carved by diamond rings, our rugs and carpets and woodwork spat upon, our walls scribbled with pencils, our streets made depositories of filth and our books torn and dog eared, for it takes a long time to cure a vandal of his vandalism. One needs to begin with his father.

There is so close a relation between the wantonness of the destroyer and the darkness of deeds of violence that the two often are justified in keeping a suspicious watch on any man, woman or child who will destroy plants, books and pictures or throw stones at helpless animals. The excessive aggression that mutilates and makes ugly will trespass on others' enjoyments, rights and property with but little more development. This is seen particularly in the case of burglars. These fellows, not content with stripping a house of all they can get, not infrequently destroy what they cannot carry away. They burn papers, tear paintings from their frames, smash furniture, break glass and otherwise act like vandals and fiends. It might not be a bad idea in case of the capture of these men to impose sentences of hard labor proportioned to the amount of damage they had worked. It would make others of their tribe a little more considerate—perhaps. On general principles these wanton destroyers should go to prison, anyway.—Brooklyn Eagle.

How Father Maloney Helped the Church.

"Father Maloney was one of the best known and best loved men in Nevada," remarked an old mining man, "and I am sure he did as much for the church as any priest in the state. Father Maloney solicited subscriptions for a new church, men who never gave before dug down deep and came out handsomely with an appearance of cheerfulness that was surprising. One day he walked into a saloon where a big poker game was running. He watched the play till the game broke without interrupting and then said:

"'Gentlemen, we are trying to get money enough to build a new church here. Is any of you feel disposed to help us out?'

"A big, rawboned fellow, who had been losing steadily all the forenoon, in consequently in no pleasant mood, growled:

"'I'll rastle you for $40.'

"Without a word Father Maloney produced the amount and laid it on the bar. The gambler looked surprised and hesitated, but when the other players commenced to jeer him he got up and covered the priest's wager. They pulled off their coats and squared off. Father Maloney commenced playing for an opening in a manner that showed that he was no novice to the sport. The big fellow made a rush and threw out a long arm to clinch his opponent around the neck. Quick as a flash Father Maloney ducked and as he did with both hands, turned and threw the big fellow clear over his shoulder. He struck on his back with a crash that made the glasses behind the bar rattle and jump. Father Maloney quietly donned his clerical coat, pocketed the stakes and watched the big fellow pick himself up painfully.

"'My friends,' said he, 'I would have been very thankful for $10. I had to be a little unjustified, but I have made $40 for the church.' "—San Francisco Post.

Glave's Heroic Task.

In 1892 Edward James Glave left New York, bent upon one of the most hazardous tasks which this century has afforded. His purpose was to proceed from Zanzibar in the direction of the Arab raiders far in the interior of the dark continent and there to obtain such exact information as would enable the civilized powers now interested in Africa to proceed intelligently toward the suppression of the horrors of and with the cruel traffic in human lives carried on by Arab man hunters. Entirely alone, save for a dozen native carriers, he was to make his way past the great lakes and deadly swamps to the headwaters of the Kongo, and thence across the continent to the ocean once more, relying entirely upon his skill with the rifle to provide food for himself and his followers, for it was only by going in this way, in the guise of a hunter, that he could obtain the information he wished. The Arabs would not be likely to molest a single hunter, whereas they might attack and destroy a small armed force, and would be certain to flee from a superior force, in either case defeating the ends of the expedition.—Harper's Weekly." by Robert Howard Russell, in Century.

Corners.

Few women realize the decorative possibilities of corners. The result is that even in pretty and artistic rooms the corners are too often left bare, the walls being allowed to run up to the ceiling, with nothing to break their monotony. Before attempting to alter this, however, it is well to recognize fully that corner ornamentation must in no manner detract the architectural qualities of the room. When an apartment is small, the corners should not be filled up, nor cut off by placing pieces of furniture diagonally across them, for this only diminishes the apparent size of the room. When the ceiling is low, it would be well to put low corners which does not carry the eye beyond its own level. It is, therefore, only in large rooms that we can have absolute freedom in corner decorating.

A Surprise.

Lady—You know, I wish my portrait to be a total surprise to my husband.

Artist—Yes, madam, I understand.

Lady—And you will try not to have too strong a likeness, as I would not like him to recognize it at the first glance.—London Tit-Bits.

AN INDIAN LOVE SONG.

His winter home the bear forsakes;
The red deer swims the shining lakes;
Up foaming falls the salmon leaps;
The wild sheep halts on dizzy steeps;
The swans are northward flying.
With laughing voice the rivers run,
Their billows flashing in the sun.
It is the moon of sprouting grass;
A thousand warm, new pulses thrill
Through lofty pine tops sighing.

With bounding steps the antelope
Springs lightly down the mountain slope;
To woman's wiles the Indian hies;
The eagle mounts the morning skies,
And all the birds are mating.
With life and joy all nature bright!
Come forth, my love, my soul's delight!
Thy wigwam's folds throw wide apart!
For thee, oh, dear and tender heart,
Thy lover true is waiting.

NOT CHOLERA GERMS.

A Hawaiian Renowned as to Some Roots He Saw In His Pot.

An incident is told by ladies who deal out rations to needy natives at the central depot of the Hawaiian Relief society about an aged native and his allowance of pot.

"Pot for six," cried out one of the ladies as she turned to the roomy old bucket to one of the native attendants.

"Pot for six," cried the attendant as he returned the bucket filled with the substance.

The native received his allowance and started to walk away when something in the bucket seemed to have the effect of hypnotizing him. His eyes protruded from their sockets and the cold beads of perspiration on his forehead indicated fear of some kind.

Returning the bucket to the lady at the window, he pointed to some yellow specks in the pot, well distributed throughout the whole mass. "Her kuku kolera kela" (those are cholera germs), said the native, who had evidently not been educated in the science of bacteriology.

The lady tried to explain that the yellow specks were the roots of the taro, which sometimes get into the poi when the tubers are being peeled. This was beyond the comprehension of the man, and the lady was about ready to give up when a young native stepped forth. "All like him kuku kolera kela" (those are cholera germs), said the native, who had evidently not been educated in the science of bacteriology.

The lady tried to explain that the yellow specks were the roots of the taro, which sometimes get into the poi when the tubers are being peeled. This was beyond the comprehension of the man, and the lady was about ready to give up when a young native stepped forth. and taking the bucket once more from the lady he walked away perfectly satisfied.

A similar incident occurred lately, though not generally known, comes up in connection with this story. A great many natives are in the opinion that the germs of cholera can be seen with the naked eye. They catch fish, and if they see nothing suspicious, use them as food without further thought of the matter.—Pacific Commercial Advertiser.

A Welsh Rabbit.

The original proprietor of a chophouse in New York married one of three sisters named Pray, the other two becoming the wives of Barney Williams and William J. Florence. All three of the sisters are still alive. Browne's associations brought about him many actors, and today the place is one of the best known for actors' income, although she does not manage it, is a midnight resort for the actor colony in the metropolis. The preparation of the Welsh rabbit is a simple matter. The cheese is very thin and very crisp. It is placed on a plate, which itself is placed on a very warm stove until it becomes too hot for the touch of the fingers. Then comes a sufficient quantity of rather "sharp" cheese, and the utensil is held over an intensely hot fire until the cheese is melted. Then a stale beer or old ale is poured in and the mixture rapidly stirred about. It quickly reaches a smooth, creamy consistency, and is then poured over the toast and served in the waiting eater with flying footsteps. He throws over it a dash of red pepper, a little bit of English mustard and some Worcestershire sauce, and finishes it off with good draft ale. If he fails to use the condiments mentioned, he will have little blue devils running riot in his breast all night long, but if he follows these instructions his sleep will be restful and his dreams blissful. If only some Philadelphia restaurant would get this recipe and not endeavor to make rabbits smooth and creamy by additions of cream and the bulk of eggs, how happy we might be.—Philadelphia Times.

Frightening Children.

A writer in The Popular Science Monthly, writing on "Childhood Fears," brings to mind the practice—in vogue for centuries, and in all lands—of frightening children by the use of bobbes, goblins and manifold dangers. There are many parents who follow this custom, seeking to quiet their little ones, to induce obedience or to keep them from harm, by filling their heads with stories of wild beasts, bobgoblins and other dreadful creatures. Frequently the injury done to the sensitive nature in the imagination of the child lasts for years. Many adults can recall how they were pursued in their teens and into their twenties by the bugaboos and nightmares that these people and deceptions of those who had them in charge. The wickedness and cruelty of this practice ought to be apparent to any one who will stop to think. How dreadful a thing it is to people the childish imagination with spectacles of danger and hideous pictures of terror! Is there any truth to favour! Is there anything more cruel and mean than to hush a timid child in its couch, and force it to sleep by crowding the terrors of the bedchamber with monstrous shapes and frightful spectres! —Central Christian Advocate.

The Baron's Nap.

Sir Frederick Pollock, chief baron of the English court of the exchequer, took a nap pretty regularly about midday. His waking was generally slow. When his "forty winks" ended, he would start to seize a pen, and with imperturbable gravity say to the arguing counsel: "What page was your last authority on?" The harmless deceit was humored by the bar, and only once did it provoke tartness. This came when an old sergeant retorted, "Did your lordship refer to the last citation made before your lordship gave Somnus a new trial, or the citation I made when your lordship produced a pair of nutcrackers?" Nothing nettled Baron Pollock imperturbably answered, "The one immediately preceding the gap."—San Francisco Argonaut.

To prose once signified to write in prose rather than in verse, and a prosy man was one who preferred to clothe his ideas in prosaic rather than in metrical form.

PRIMARY TEACHERS.

Quarterly Meeting of the Union Held Yesterday Afternoon.

The quarterly business meeting of the Primary Teachers Union was held at the Y. M. C. A. building yesterday afternoon with twenty-three members present, and the president, Miss Nettie Beeching, in the chair.

The devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. Darby, and Miss Haff taught the lesson on ways and means of teaching. Following this the treasurer's and secretaries' reports were read by Miss Haff. The latter report showed good attendance and an increased interest. Mrs. Powlison was then elected second vice-president, and Miss Bainbridge third vice-president. Mrs. Powlison, Miss Maggie Bocap and Miss Bainbridge were selected as a committee on securing teachers for the lessons. The following were chosen as press committee: Mrs. Mosher, Miss Haff and Miss Mary E. Howlett.

Miss Beeching, as a member of the State Council, then presented an informal report of the recent meeting she attended at Trenton, and stated that it had been decided to hold three summer schools this year instead of one. Asbury Park and Schooley's Mountains had been selected thus far, and the third place would be decided upon later. The local union discussed the public meeting which will be held about January first, after which the meeting adjourned.

The Eden Musee.

A partial rearrangement of the wax groups at the Eden Musee has been made during the past week, and in the main hall the Japanese jugglers group has been thoroughly remodelled On account of the death of Tarkey the figure of the Sultan among "The Rulers of the World" attracts special attention. Another figure just remodelled is that of Gen. Jose Marti, the Cuban patriot. New groups are being made as rapidly as possible, and some of them will soon be placed on exhibition.

Semi-Annual Conference.

The semi annual conference of the Union County Christian Endeavor Union will be held in the First Presbyterian church at Roselle on Friday evening, the 13th inst., and the programme committee have arranged for a meeting of unusual interest.

VICTIMS OF JOHN BARLEYCORN.

A Man Arrested Who Tried To Break in The Press Office.

David McLerned and William Drake were arraigned before Judge Coddington in the city court this morning on the charge of trespassing on coal cars and stealing coal. They pleaded not guilty of throwing coal off the cars. The Judge thought the testimony was too strong and made the punishment a fine of $3 or ten days in Elizabeth jail. They took the latter.

There was one other culprit to appear before the Judge and he was a victim of too much liquor. He gave his name as David O'Donnell. He was arrested by Detective Blackford on North avenue, where he was vainly trying to enter the door to the pressroom of The Daily Press. He sadly pleaded guilty and took the sentence like a man. A gift of $3 to the city or a ten days visit with Sheriff Kyte was the decision of the Judge.

Incidents of Cycling Abroad.

Those who missed the delightful stereopticon entertainment at Y. M. C. A. Hall last evening will be given a chance to see another one on Tuesday evening at the Y. M. C. A. Hall. Spencer C. Crane, formerly of this city, will give an illustrated lecture on a wheeling trip through Norway and Sweden, under the auspices of the Crescent Wheelmen. One hundred and fifty views, taken by Mr. Crane, who is an expert amateur photographer, will be exhibited, and he will tell some of his thrilling and amusing adventures. Mr. Crane carried a small American flag on his wheel throughout the trip. Among his exciting experiences was a coast of five miles down the side of a mountain.

Cards are out for a tea to be given by Mrs. William Ebbets Lowe, of 1024 Park avenue, on Thursday, December 19th.

An Unparalleled Offer

Demorest's Cut Paper Patterns are the most practical on the market. They are of any size that any member of a household could require. In each copy of the Magazine is printed a clear engraving of the garment, or purchaser, to a pattern (worth and regularly sold for 50c.) or any number of patterns for four cents each to cover package and postage. When the value of the patterns is considered the subscription price is nil.

Demorest's Magazine Free

And what a magazine it is! For 1896 it will be more beautiful than ever before. New management, new ideas. Each copy contains an exquisite reproduction in colors of some celebrated picture by a famous artist, works to adorn the walls of the humblest cot or the proudest palace. It is affirmed that DEMOREST'S is the only complete Family Magazine published—one having all of the many excellent points of its contemporaries, besides having inimitable features of its own. Can't Afford It? Then it is a Dog at a Cure. Events and Ideas for the busy man or woman, a Review and a Symposium of the latest fads in Art, Music, Letters, mothers, sisters and daughters can find exactly what they need to amuse and instruct them, also practical helps in every department of domestic and social life, including the furnishing and decoration of the home in a tasteful, tidy, tri-a-bone, artistic and fancy work of all kinds. Fashion is studied in a full and practical way regarding the well-being and dressing of the town person.

The new volume of the articles for 1896 and 1896 will cover the whole country and its varied industries. The articles will be profusely illustrated with the finest engravings, and, in addition, it will contain a full and perfect fiction. It treats at length Out-of-Door Sports, Home Amusements and Entertainments; it gives a great deal of attention to the Children's Department, and Other Stories, and has a Monthly Contribution by Celebrated People, in which are discussed important questions of interest to the public or to the older readers.

Let us have your subscription at once. You get more value for your money than it is possible to secure in any other magazine.

THE

New York Times.

THE TIMES is a newspaper for intelligent men and women who want to read all the news of the world every day. The paper has distinguished political affiliations, but neither sensational nor dull. It is not sour-tempered. It is not frivolous or visionary. It sees plenty of good in the world an ' talks about it. It tells of the bad when it must, but not unwholesomely. It prints with fullness the record of human endeavor in many fields outside of business, politics and war—in literature, religion, science, sports and household matters. No paper in the country prints so many book reviews and so much book news. No paper has so complete a financial page—a daily manual for investors and officers of financial institutions. Its market reports—wool, cotton, breadstuffs, farm products, etc.—are the best in the country.

The Democracy of THE TIMES is of the old-fashioned sort—as old as Thomas Jefferson; majority rule, no bossism, no machine tyranny, the divorce of politics from private money-making and sound currency, industrial emancipation, and every-day honesty. To promote the advance of the Democratic Party along these lines it labors with heart and conscience and all its might.

Scribner's for Christmas

Frank R. Stockton has a Christmas love story, which bears a characteristic title—"The Staying Power of Sir Rohan." Its illustrations are quaint and exactly suitable. A thrilling detective story by C. E. Carryll entitled "The River Syndicate," perhaps equalling Sherlock Holmes' best work. Illustrated.

Joel Chandler Harris' characteristic tale of a faithful slave—"Uncle Remus's Nigger-Dog." Other Christmas stories are, "A White Blot," by Henry VanDyke, a poetic and imaginative tale of a picture (illustrated); Professor of Landers," by A. S. Pier (illustrated), and "Hopper's Old Man," by R. C. V. Meyers.

Sentimental Tommy,

By J. M. Barrie.

Those who have read (and who has not?) "The Little Minister" and "A Window in Thrums" can anticipate what Mr. Barrie's "Sentimental Tommy" will be. It is to be the chief serial in Scribner's for 1896, beginning in the January number.

Two Years for $4.50.

Scribner's Magazine costs $3 a year, but new subscribers can have all the numbers for 1895 and a year's subscription for 18 for $4.50.

Scribner's Magazine is going to be better next year ever. It is going to have new features. Its publishers are not satisfied with past successes. It purposes to more thoroughly deserve the confidence of the reading public. The History Serial—"Last Quarter Century in the United States"—will be continued. Just now it is approaching a period of absorbing interest to the present generation—the first administration of President Cleveland.

Scribner's Magazine ought to get careful consideration as a Christmas gift. The $4.50 offer ought to get double circulation.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXVII. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1895. NO. 50

"Support the Constitution, Which is the Cement of the Union, as Well in Its Limitations as in Its Authorities!"—Madison.

CANTATA THEME IS HISTORIC

A PAGE OF HISTORY TO BE SUNG BY THE CHORAL SOCIETY.

The Society Have Taken Long Steps in Matters of Music and the Recital Thursday Night Promises to be the Best.

It is a long, long time since the Choral Society first warbled "The Sands of Dee" and "Stars of the Summer Night" for Plainfielders delectation, and it has been a succession of long steps—musically speaking—from the part songs of MacFanen and Smart to the kind of entertainment they have learned to look for regularly now.

In the selection of Max Bruch's superb dramatic cantata of "Arminius" as the initial novelty of this season, the society has given another proof of its artistic nerve, and its performance of the intricately melodious numbers of this work of the modern German school will furnish the old-time patrons, who are presumed to have been growing in musical grace while the choral leaders have been growing gray, a fresh opportunity to institute comparisons between the old-time concerts and the new.

The theme of the cantata is historic rather than legendary, for although its hero—the great Fenton with the Latin name—was exalted long after his tragic death to a place among the medieval deities, his fame as the liberator of Germany is firmly fixed in history through the unfriendly testimony of the enemies whom he baffled with and overthrew at a time when his countrymen made history but did not write it. The time is the ninth year of the Christian era, and the story that of the great uprising of the Teutonic tribes under the leadership of Aminius, and the terrific three days battle amid the gloomy shadows of the Teutobugus-wald, in which three of the choicest legions of the Roman Empire were almost annihilated, a battle whose results literally changed the currents of the world's history. He as the star of the nation which was destined to be a mother of nations rose over Winfield, the star of Rome began its descending course. The tramp of the Roman hosts was to be heard again upon the banks of the Elbe and the Rhine, but they were no longer the legions invincible. The despairing cry of Augustus, "Give back my legions Varus," sounded the note of retreat for Rome at an hour when, in the language of Burke, "The earth seemed void of independent nations," and the sententious observation of Victor Hugo concerning Waterloo, that it was not a battle but "a change in the front of the universe," is not less applicable to the wild struggle amid the forests of Westphalia, whose issue secured for Arminius the deserved title of Liberator of Germany.

AT EUCHRE TABLES.

CYCLING THROUGH NORWAY.

Spencer C. Crane Interests an Audience in the Y. M. C. A. Hall.

To those who have never taken a cycling trip of any length, the lecture at the Y. M. C. A. Hall last evening on a tour through Norway and Sweden by Spencer C. Crane was a revelation. The lecture itself was very enjoyable, as Mr. Crane is a pleasant speaker and has a ready command of language. The stereopticon views added to the pleasure of the lecture and gave the audience some idea of the wonderful country through which Mr. Crane rode. His accounts of the Norwegian dinner and shave were very amusing while his description of the perilous descent into Naerodalen Pass was thrilling to say the least.

If suffering with piles, it will interest you to know that DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve will cure them. This medicine is a specific for all complaints of this character, and if instructions (which are simple) are carried out, a cure will result. We have tested this in numerous cases, and always with like results. It never fails. L. W. Randolph, 143 W. Front st.

OLD VOLUNTEER FIREMAN DEAD.

John Cass One of the Borough's First Fire Fighters.

At his home in Raritan, on Saturday last, John Cass died, aged sixty-three years. When the old Board of Fire Commissioners purchased the second steam fire engine for Gazelle Engine Company, No. 1, in October, 1869, No. 2 having already been bought, the hand engine that Gazelle Company had been fighting the fire fiend with, was turned over to a company styling itself Warren Engine Company, No. 2. Barnabas Moore, now deceased, was elected its first foreman, John Cass, first assistant and Godfrey Herold, second assistant. The hand engine is still in use in Scotch Plains. The engine was stored in an unused blacksmith shop on Somerset street, where Richter's barber shop now stands, until the engine house was built for them later on further up Somerset street. No one man did more towards organizing the new fire company than did John Cass. He was an enthusiastic and conscientious fireman and never missed a run. He was afterwards elected foreman of the company and always took a lively interest in fire matters.

Mr. Cass in those days resided in what is now Orchard Place, Washington Park and was in the employ of the late William White. He was a brother-in-law of the late Jacob P. Adams, father of Dr. D. C. Adams, of Grove street, and of John Wendell, of Warren township. Before coming to Plainfield he had resided in New York city and belonged to the old volunteer fire department. He knew intimately many of the men then in the New York department who afterwards became famous.

Mr. Cass learned the book-binding business, but could not stand being confined inside all day and was forced to give it up. Several years ago Mr. Mr. Cass accepted a responsible position in one of the mills in Raritan and later his family removed to that town where he has since resided. He has been in failing health for a long time and his death was not entirely unexpected. He had many friends in Plainfield. He was a kind, sympathetic and affectionate man. He leaves a wife and one married daughter. His funeral took place in Raritan yesterday morning. Interment was at Mt. Bethel.

A Millington Wedding.

The hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Dilley, of Mine Brook, was the scene of a brilliant wedding on Thursday at high noon. The contracting parties were their daughter, Anna May, and Ayers L. Leeson, of Millington. Rev. Walker Jones, of Bedminster, performed the ceremony, assisted by Rev. P. Gibb, of Millington. About one hundred guests gathered to honor the occasion.

The presents were numerous and beautiful. The happy pair left for Dover, where they will make their future home.

Among those present were Rev. Mr. Gibb and wife, O. R. Stelle and daughter, Mrs. Wm. Leeson, Mrs. Irene Irving, Mr. and Mrs. James Runyon, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Terrell, of Millington; Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Cook, Joseph Channon and sister, of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Irving, of Somerville; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Leonard, of Elizabeth; Mr. and Mrs. David Leonard, George Fritz, Mr. and Mrs Wood, Mr. and Mrs. Kenworthy, Mrs. Everhart and daughter, of Newark; Judge Codington and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Moon, Mr. and Mrs Hance, Mrs. Williams, and Miss Gertrude Jackson, of Plainfield.

A Fit Title.

"The Palace of Sweets" is a fit title for Tier's Park avenue store. Heaps of delicious candies are on all sides, all his own make, too. Now he is selling an excellent special mixed candy at ten cents a pound. Just take a look at his windows and see a few of the attractions.

State President to Talk.

Rev. J. Clement French, D. D., of Newark, State President of Christian Endeavor, will make the address at the tenth anniversary of the Christian Endeavor of the Congregational church Friday evening, December 20.

When most needed it is not unusual for your family physician to be away from home. Such was the experience of Mr. J. Y. Schenck, editor of the Caddo, Ind. Ter., Banner, when his little girl, two years of age was threatened with a severe attack of croup. He says: "My wife insisted that I go for the doctor, but as our family physician was out of town I purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, which relieved her immediately. I will not be without it in the future." of unqualified endorsement. For sale by Reynolds' Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

ENGLISH IN THE CRIMEAN WAR

THEIR SERVITUDE AND SACRIFICE TO DUTY WAS REMARKABLE.

He Tells of the Personal Experience of Remarkable Men and the Extraordinary Suffering—Power of War Correspondents

Plainfield is having an unusual treat in Dr. James F. Riggs' lectures on the Eastern Question, and that they are thoroughly appreciated is shown by the increasingly large attendance. A large audience gathered Tuesday in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church to listen to the lecture on the Crimean War.

Before beginning upon the subject of the evening, Dr. Riggs, with the aid of a large map, pointed out some of the places in Turkey which are just now of especial interest.

"The Crimean War," said Dr. Riggs, "was of peculiar interest on account of the small extent of territory fought over, the personal influence of remarkable men, the extraordinary suffering involved, and the power of the war correspondents. It was the first war in which large modern guns had been employed on any extended scale."

The personal influence of the officers over their men was very great. The *men almost worshipped their com*manders.

On one occasion Captain Gordon found a corporal and a private quarreling as to which of them should go up on the breastworks to make some needed repairs. He said to the corporal, "Never tell a man to do what you are afraid to do yourself!" and sprang up when they both followed him at once.

About the devoted charge of the Light Brigade, there will always be a great mystery. It has never been discovered where the mistake was made. Lord Raglan, who sent an order of some kind—no one knows what—died soon after, and Captain Nolan, who carried the order, was killed while delivering it, endeavoring to overtake Lord Cardigan and stop the charge, knowing there must have been a mistake somewhere.

As Lord Cardigan ordered the buglers to sound the charge, knowing well that the brigade was doomed, but obliged by military etiquette to obey orders, he said. "Here goes the last of the Cardigans!" When the few survivors of the charge returned, he sprang from his horse and stood in front of the line, saying, "Men it was an awful shame, but it was not my fault!" And though the cavalry was wounded and bleeding, many of them, swung their hats and cheered him, saying, "Never mind, General, we'll do it again if you say so!"

Such were the Englishmen who fought through the Crimea, and returned to England, what was left of them, covered with glory.

A Contagious Card Removed.

Edward, son of E. L. Suffern, of Linden avenue, who has been ill with scarlet fever, has recovered, and the card denoting contagious disease has been removed.

Major C. T. Picton is manager of the State Hotel, at Denison, Texas, which the traveling men say is one of the best hotels in that section. In speaking of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy Major Picton says: "I have used it myself and in my family for several years, and take pleasure in saying that I consider it an infallible cure for diarrhœa and dysentery. I always recommend it, and have frequently administered it to my guests in the hotel, and in every case it has proven itself worthy For sale by Reynolds' Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. SOME ORDERS WERE SERVED.

THE NORTH AVENUE SEWER USERS WILL HAVE TO SHOW CAUSE.

Borough Counsel Reed Says That There is No Desire to be Arbitrary, But the Time for Action Has Come—His Views.

The publication in The Daily Press Tuesday of the fact that Chancellor McGill had granted the application of Borough Counsel Charles A Reed for *orders to be served on property own*ers using the North avenue sewer to show cause why they should not be restrained from using the sewer, caused a great deal of talk among both city and borough people. The borough officials claim that this action was only taken as a last resort to suppress the pollution of Green brook after every appeal to the city officials to remedy the nuisance, had proved futile. They admit that the brook is no more unhealthy now than it has been in the past, but that inasmuch as there was no immediate prospect of the abatement of the sewage mixing with the water in the brook and Manning's pond, as well as the stench, the actions in courts may as well be brought now as at any future time.

Borough Counsel Reed told a Press reporter this noon that he understood unofficially that the city officials did not desire to commence using the sewage beds until the weather was most favorable for them to succeed, and with this condition of affairs existing the pollution of the brook would be likely to continue all winter unless legal measures, such as have been taken, were enjoined to stop it. The borough, he said, had no desire to be arbitrary in the matter or to inconvenience property owners in the city, but they had waited as long as they felt that they could. The fact that many property owners would never make connections with the new system of sewers as long as the North avenue sewer could be used with impunity, made it mandatory for the borough president to take the action which they have.

A number of the orders to show cause will be served on property owners this afternoon. Tenants will not be bothered.

Whether or not any action to prevent the issuing of injunctions will be taken by those who will be effected remains to be seen.

THE LOAN EXHIBITION.

Committee Who Has It in Charge and the Proposed Art Sections.

The committee in charge of the loan exhibition of the Plainfield Camera Club meets this evening. The exhibit will be held some time during the month of February and will continue for one week. It is intended to combine the annual exhibition of the work of the club with this loan exhibition. The loans will be insured and a watchman will constantly be in attendance.

The following are the art sections proposed for the exhibition: Paintings, engravings and etchings, statuary, photographs, painting on porcelain, illuminations, gems of the printers' art, goldsmiths' art, embroidery, Indian art, Japanese art, Oriental art, glass and European porcelain.

The committee in charge consists of G. A. Audsley, Harold Serrell, John E. Stewart, Howard Y. Stillman, J. Hervey Doane, G. Thorn, G. Harry Squires, George P. Taggart and H. H. Coward.

Four Score Years Old.

Miss Phœbe Frazee died at the home of her niece, Miss Mary Coulter, at South Plainfield, last night at 8 o'clock. She has been ill for several months. She was in her eightieth year and had lived in the house where she died for over fifty years. The funeral services will be held in the church at South Plainfield, Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Interment will be made at Samptown.

Receiver of Somerset Bank.

Chancellor McGill yesterday appointed George Vanderveer, of Somerville, temporary receiver of the Somerset National Bank, of Somerville. This place was formerly filled by the late Wm. Y. Johnson. A statement of the basis of settlement will be made on December 23d.

The wife of Mr. D. Robinson, a prominent lumberman of Hartwick, N. Y., was sick with rheumatism for five months. In speaking of it, Mr. Robinson says: "Chamberlain's Pain Balm is the only thing that gave her any rest from pain. For the relief of pain it cannot be beat. Many very bad cases of rheumatism have been cured by it. For sale at 50 cents per bottle by Reynolds' Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

OLD GLORY COUNCIL.

Another Daughters of Liberty Lodge Organized Last Night.

Old Glory Council, Daughters of Liberty, took the initiative step towards organization last Monday by electing their officers and closing the charter. Mrs. Bennett, State organizer, was present and assisted.

The new council will be instituted Tuesday evening, January 7th. The following officers were chosen last evening:

Councilor, Mrs. Lines; Vice Councilor, Miss Lizzie Dunlap; Ex-Associate Councilor, Mrs. Walter Walker; Junior Ex Councilor, Mrs. Heath; Associate Councilor, Mrs. GaNun; Associate Vice Councilor, Mrs. I. H. Boehm; Guide, Mrs. Demarest; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Snyder; Assistant Recording Secretary, Mrs. Holstein; Financial Secretary, Mrs. B. Thatcher; Treasurer, Walter Walker; Inside Guard, I. Voorhees; Outside Guard, W. Wyckoff; Trustees, W. Scribner, 18 months; W. Wyckoff, 12 months; Mrs. Lines, 6 months.

The Council starts off with a membership of 39.

AN AFTERNOON MARRIAGE.

The Nuptial Event Delayed a Half Hour by the Belated Pastor.

A quiet wedding was performed at Grace P. E. Church Tuesday afternoon when Miss Caroline Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, of 1030 West Front street, was united in marriage to W. H. Fulton, of Mauch Chunk, Pa. Rev. E. M. Rodman officiated, but owing to his being at Trenton the ceremony was delayed for half an hour until he arrived.

Arrangements had been made to have a Royal Blue Line train stop here at 4.30 to take the bride and groom to Philadelphia. The train stopped, but as the couple were awaiting the return of Rev. E. M Rodman to be married, they were unable to meet the train. *They left on the 6.38 train for Phila*delphia where they will spend their honeymoon. They have not yet decided where they will reside.

MR. LEO RESPONDED.

His Remarks Stir the Women to Send a Barrel of Clothes for the Needy.

The Home Missionary Society, of the Park Avenue Baptist church, held a regular meeting yesterday afternoon at the home of the president, 821 First place, as usual. Owing to the illness of the woman who was expected to address the society, she was unable to be present. Alexander Leo, of New York, who is assisting Col. H. H. Hadley in the revival meetings this week, very kindly offered to say a few words about his work in the slums of New York. He presented his subject in an exceedingly interesting manner, and the women present decided to prepare a barrel of old clothing to be sent to New York to be *used in the mission work. Any hav*ing articles to contribute can send them to 821 First place, where they will gladly be received. Mr. Leo says that anything from baby socks to a spring bonnet will be gratefully received.

Jerusalem Lodge Elects.

The election of officers of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. and A. M., last evening, was very harmonious, it being the unanimous re-election of the present officers. They were as follows: Worshipful Master, Dr. D. C. Adams; Senior Warden, Stephen Beaching; Junior Warden, Warren F. Bartlett; Treasurer, Alexander Titsworth; Secretary, Charles Yaeger; Trustees, C. H. Rugg; L. B. Woolston and L. S. Pocock; Representative to Masonic Hall Association, W. R. Codington; Proxy to Grand Lodge, Henry Leifke. The installation of these officers will take place on Tuesday, January 7th, at which time the appointed officers will be announced.

Necessary to Kill the Horse.

A horse belonging to Geo. Conover, of the borough, received a severe injury at the stone crusher near Washingtonville yesterday afternoon that resulted in his death. His left hind foot caught in a stone causing the hoof to be entirely severed from the ankle. The animal suffered considerably from the loss of blood and as no relief could be given him, it was necessary to kill him.

To Settle Accounts.

A meeting of the committee in charge of the Firemen's Fair will be held tomorrow evening when the accounts will be settled up and the exact amount, that which was made, will be determined.

MISS WRAY'S SLUM WORK.

SHE TALKS OF HER LABORS AMONG THE LOWLY PEOPLE.

Stirring Remarks by Mr. Leo—A Touching Solo by William N. Runyon—More Mission Converts to be Present Later.

A very much larger audience was present at Reform Hall last Monday than at any previous time and the service was especially interesting and helpful. Mr. Leo was in charge and after a spirited song service he made a few stirring remarks to the unsaved. He is a very bright speaker and has a manner of holding the attention of his hearers.

An impressive portion of the service was when Wm. N. Runyon sang "One Sweetly Solemn Thought." Everything was so quiet that the slightest vibration could be distinctly heard.

Miss Wray followed by telling of her remarkable conversion, and of her work later in the Whitechapel district in London and the slums of New York. After hearing her wonderful experience everyone felt convinced that the Christian life was more than a myth and many hearts were deeply touched with her earnest words. The service closed in the usual manner and all felt well repaid for being present.

There will be no service this evening and everyone is urged to attend their own prayer meeting service.

Tomorrow evening the services will be continued when a contingent from the old Jerry McAuley mission will be present.

A BRAKEMAN'S FATAL TRIP.

Struck an Overhead Bridge at Pamwood and Killed.

A very sad accident occurred last evening between 11 and 12 o'clock, when Brakeman William Jetters, of Camden, going west on a freight train, was struck by the Fanwood bridge, while standing on a freight car, and knocked insensible. The train was making fairly good speed.

He was discovered by his mates on top of the freight car, where he was thrown, and brought to this city in an unconscious condition. The ambulance was sent for and he was taken to the hospital. It was the belief that the blow he received in the head resulted in his death, as there were no other wounds about his body.

Mr. Jetters was a young man and very popular with the crew on the train. His body was cold when taken to the hospital and will be sent to Camden today.

Mr. Jetters recently gave up his position as conductor on a P. & R. freight to accept this last one on a fast freight.

Not Many Present.

There were not very many present at the social given by the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Baptist church last evening. The social committee, Miss Grace Yerkes, Mrs. Chas. Conover and Mrs. E. VanName arranged the affair, which was very enjoyable. A portion of the time was passed in playing games, after which refreshments were served.

Careless Children.

Several small children playing in the street near the Arlington Hotel last evening about 5 o'clock, narrowly escaped being run over by Car No. 3. The children were trying to see how many times they could cross before the car arrived. One of the little ones fell across the track and the motorman succeeded in stopping his car about two feet from where the child lay.

An Evening of Sociability.

The Junior Epworth League of the Monroe Avenue chapel was very enjoyably entertained at the home of Miss Charlotte Aldrich, of Sherman avenue. The evening passed very quickly in playing games. Dainty refreshments brought the sociable to a close.

An Address by Dr. Wilson.

Dr. Wilson, of the Christian Alliance, New York, spoke to the members of the local branch in the W. C. T. U. rooms last evening. It was a very profitable meeting. These meetings are held every other Tuesday and those interested are invited to be present.

A Christmas Cantata.

A cantata is being rehearsed for the Christmas entertainment of the Sunday-school of the Seventh Day Baptist church which takes place on Thursday evening, December 26th.

—The contract case of Tobin against Chandler has been adjourned in Justice Newcorn's court to December 23d.

CAUGHT IN THE ACT.

FRENCH OFFICIALS NABBED THE DANGEROUS SMUGGLER.

A Man Has a Right to His Favorite Brand of Smoking Tobacco, but He Must Keep It Out of France—A Narrow Escape From a Heavy Fine.

The career of a criminal is always interesting, especially if the criminal be oneself. Then a person, knowing all the circumstances of the case, can trace the career of the wrongdoer from the first false step until the final catastrophe, when he is laid by the heels. If a man enters into a career of crime, he is reasonably sure to be caught at last, and as a warning to others I set down here the particulars of how, after deluding the customs officials of Europe for years and years, I was at last trapped and, curiously enough, when I was innocent. I am a little mixed as to what the moral should be.

For years and years I have defended the French customs officials in the matter of tobacco. I think, of course, that it is wrong to smuggle as a general rule, but I cannot imagine it wrong to bring into an unenlightened country like France tobacco that a white man can smoke. I always declare that number of days I shall be in any part of France, and then I take a two ounce package for each day and a couple extra in case I should meet a friend famishing for a smoke. And in this quantity I have never had any difficulty in smuggling into the great European republic. As the tobacco is entirely for my own consumption, and as I am not a citizen of France, and as I shall be swindled enough by the hotel keepers in whatever part I chance to be, I easy my conscience by polishing out these facts to it, and I must say that my conscience, being a reasonable one, does not judge me harshly in the matter. It is needless perhaps to add that the French government does not agree with me in all this; so, therefore, in order not to trouble the government more than is necessary, I place these packages about my person in such a way that on passing the French frontier I give the government as little bother as possible.

The other day I came on my way to Switzerland. I expected to be able to register my trunk clear through to Bern, and although I knew tobacco was cheap and good in Switzerland I thought I would take the precaution of putting a few packages of my own particular brand at the top of the trunk. It was a foolish thing to do, knowing that I had to pass through France, and when I got to the railway station in London and found I could only register the trunk as far as Paris I should then have taken the tobacco out if I had thought about it. We arrived in Paris a little after 6 o'clock in the evening, and the train for Bern left at 8:30, so I ran into the other side of the city at 8:30, so there was just time enough to get a comfortable dinner and cab it across Paris from one station to the other, but it allowed no great margin for customs examination.

When the villain who acts for the French government asked me if I had anything to declare, I said I didn't exactly know. I had some tobacco, but it was not intended for use in France. I was going to take the night train to Bern if I could get the baggage across Paris in time. I opened the trunk and showed him the packages of tobacco. He shook his head, and gathering the packages in his hands he departed, leaving me there with the open trunk. He returned after awhile with a man who was evidently a higher official, and behind the higher official came another of the same rank as the first.

"Why didn't you declare this tobacco?" said the official first.

"I did declare it," I answered. "I told him I was going through to Switzerland with it and none of it was to be opened in France."

The official said nothing, but the two understrappers attacked the box and turned out every moral thing that was in it. I don't carry much luggage when I travel alone, but this trunk contained the various articles of wearing apparel that belonged to my family. It had been packed with much care, and the boys it made on the bench where they examine luggage in Paris was something appalling. It didn't seem to me possible that my human being could ever get all those things back in the trunk again. They found no more tobacco, but they all retired to an office and consulted for about five minutes, when the main official came out and said that this was a case for the chief inspector.

"Very well, then, get the chief inspector here as quickly as possible."

"But he has gone for the night," said the official.

"Do you mean to tell me," I said, "that you are going to make me miss my train for Bern all on account of a few packages of tobacco? Keep them, for heaven's sake, and present them with my compliments to the inspector tomorrow, but let me pass through Paris and catch my train."

He shook his head, and the two understrappers began to repack the things in the shelter back in the trunk, and finding they could not squeeze down the lid again they took all things out of the rest of my baggage and locked it up for the night. I learned that the inspector would not be there until 10 o'clock in the morning, and that would make my train in the morning train for Switzerland also. I again offered the pompous official the tobacco, but he said that it was not a question of the tobacco at all, but of a fine. I should be probably fined 2,000 francs, he added. A man who had concealed two boxes of cigars, at Cubus, the week before had been fined 3,000 francs, and probably the case would be the same as his. It all would depend on the inspector.

"But," I said, "I did not conceal the tobacco at all. I told the man it was there before the trunk was opened."

The official shook his head.

"You call Cubus, then," he said.

There was nothing for it, then, but to go to a hotel, which we did. I consulted the hotel proprietor, who advised me to curb my naturally quick temper and to be exceedingly deferential in the morning. He said that if the inspector chose to put a 2,000 franc fine upon me I should have to pay it or leave my baggage there forever.

In the morning I was taken before a very dignified official, who scrutinized me with some severity. He listened to what I had to say and, luckily for me, the first inspector did not tell any lies about it, but admitted that I had told him I had tobacco and had said that I was going through to Switzerland and mentioned that the tobacco was in the trunk. It had lain on the top of the trunk. The official then sent me to show my ticket to Switzerland, which I did. He finally came to a decision, which was that I should pay for a man to go across Paris with me and see my trunk registered through to Bern, and that I should pay 15 francs duty on the tobacco, and that I should remember I was getting off very easily.—Detroit Free Press.

WHEN DICKY HAD THE MEASLES.

We found we had to hide his shoes,
His stockings, frocks, his waistcoat, coat,
And then he vowed he'd get on Sue's
Pink gingham, and he'd find his boat
And have a lark. He wouldn't stay
In bed and swallow nasty stuff?
And thus he'd fret and toss all day.
Oh, there was interest quite enough
When Dicky had the measles!

On Monday he was eloquent:
"I say, now, mother, since I'm sick,
I must live like a nobby gent.
What if Old Spectacles does kick?
See, here's the lunch list—five cream tarts,
Three red bananas and some dates,
A coffee cake and shad roe tarts!"
We sadly thought of pearly gates
When Dicky had the measles.

On Sunday, in a steamer chair,
We left him and we went to church.
The service over, in the glare
Of sunlight, on a wooden perch,
Sat freckled Dicky with his chums.
His tongue was running like a streak.
We're thankful now whatever comes
It can't surpass that awful week
When Dicky had the measles.

THEIR PET MEANNESS.

Traits of the Miser That Sometimes Show Through.

Wealthy Frenzy.

Shoes were the pet meanness of a distinguished English nobleman whose ground rents in London alone would have shod all its inhabitants for centuries to come. It is related of him that he once took his favorite pair in person to a cobbler, and that after carefully examining them the man said to him: "I never saw the like since I was at the business. You are either the greatest pauper in England or the Marquis of"—

"I am the marquis, not the pauper," said his lordship, and far from being offended seemed greatly amused. To mount a new pair of shoestrings even is pain and grief to him, and a new pair of shoes always brings on a violent fit of gout, so vehemently is he opposed to the sad necessity of donning them at all.

Lord Eldon was a peer of this pattern, only he proceeded to the other extremity and would never allow his wife and daughters but one bonnet between them. One wonders what party Betty Sutton saw in him to induce her to elope with him, cost what it might.

There is a Frenchman whose eccentricity in respect of a pet meanness is very often commented upon in Paris, for, though he has a model establishment and positively rolls in money, he cannot bear to use twenty-six francs' worth of his neighbors'. It is said that upon staying at one of the old castles of Brittany for a week he took his hostess' entire private and shoot and her over three dozen towels that he had been gloating over for days. "All these, madam, I have saved," he remarked with great delight. "I have taken them home in my room, it is true, but I and my wife have only used one between us. Servants are careless, wasteful creatures. I return the rest."—Lippincott's.

The Electrician at Play.

An electrician who amuses himself by devising all sorts of novel applications of electricity, which may or may not have practical value, tells chemists that he has a much better plan for removing the glass stopper from a bottle than the usual method of tying the bottle neck for awhile over a Bunsen burner. This method is open to the drawback that the bottle has to be held in a horizontal position, and the fluid may easily be spilled out of the bottle. The up to date improvement is an adjustable clamp which is connected to a battery, lined in a strip of asbestus attached. The clamp, which is connected to a battery, is put on the neck of the bottle, the current is turned on, and the glass is brought to any desired heat. This is, in fact, an adaptation of the electrotherm, or heating pad, which is now used in hospitals in lieu of hot water pads formerly in vogue.

Another novelty of this resourceful electrical trifler is an electric annihilator of moths, flies and mosquitoes. It consists of an incandescent electric lamp placed inside a large globe, which is coated externally with a mixture of honey and wine, or other odor-attractive sticky paste. The windows and doors are to be closed, the blinds pulled downand the room is to be made as dark as possible. The current let then be turned on, and in a few hours the vast life of the room will be found sticking to the glass globe. The final instructions are to "remove the victims with hot water an' set the trap afresh."

Artistic Taste.

All efforts to popularize art are commendable and praiseworthy when intended. The tendency, however, is to extend away from rather than toward the masses. Art exhibits are always held up for condemnation, and they generally make special efforts to get high class works, or such as suit their cultured tastes, which are far, far enough beyond those who patronize other

A LOVING CUP PRESENTED.

MADAME MENZELLI BARTLETT GIVEN A TOKEN OF ESTEEM.

The Firemen Show Appreciation of Her Efforts to Make Their Fair a Success —The Event Closes This Evening.

The attendance at the fair last evening was not as large as it should have been, but was about the same as on Thursday night.

The programme included another recitation by Will J Irvin. After the curtain had been drawn on the last tableau in the firemen's drill it was suddenly opened again ere the dancers had left their positions and Auguste L. Saltzman led Madame Bartlett to the front of the stage where with a few well-chosen words, he presented her with a handsome silver loving cup bearing the inscription "Presented to Mrs. A. Bartlett by the firemen of Plainfield, N. J., December 1896," and while she bowed her thanks the crowd wildly applauded and the curtain was again drawn.

During the performance a woman in the audience feinted and was taken to her home on LaGrande avenue in a hack.

A ton of coal, which was presented to the fair by George O. Stevens, was voted upon last evening. It was voted to Abner Bartlett, who presented it to the Children's Home.

The programme this evening will include the flower dance and several other new dancers.

Ex Chief Hendricks, the present Mayor of New Haven, Conn., has written a letter to ex Chief Saltzman, containing an order for a gilt bronze statuette of the "American Fireman" for the fair. Mr. Saltzman brought the statuette this morning and placed it on exhibition at the fair where it will be sold.

The attendance at the Firemen's Fair during the week has been essentially an American throng. All classes were represented, the humble laborer was there with his family while quite a number of the Four Hundred of this city have been in attendance.

More About the Skulls.

To the Editor of the Daily Press:

Noticing the skull which was unearthed on the Stelle farm and on exhibition in your window, marked, "Supposed to be of an Indian," will say, while not up in skullology, that I've noticed many skulls known to be Indians, and they all distinctly showed the sutures, or lines of juncture, which are not visible on the skull referred to; and in way of a solution to the query about these skulls and skeletons, will say I remember the late W. B. T. Lane, my father-in law, telling that the original size of the farm was about 300 acres, extending from Dog Corners on the east, to Long pond, where French's mill now is in Plainfield, on the west, included all the properties between these points, the original deeds being dated 1684, and also if his showing me the location of the houses used for the slaves, and of him saying the burying ground for the slaves was near the house occupied by Manning Stelle's farmer, which is, as I understand about where the bones have been found, so being sure they are not Indians, I think they are the remains of the negroes. Percy C. Ohl.

Republican Hypocrisy.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—Well, Elmore D. Moffett, Deputy County Clerk, is to be bounced. This is the honesty of the Republican party on the Civil Service question. The partisan Republican majority in this county has insulted Moffett in this. Their demand is to be heeded. An old soldier, who defended his country's cause, must be removed to give place to a partisan of Republican faith, for he has rallied the boys on election day. And all this in face of the fact that the Republicans are preaching Civil Service Reform: Well, well, I find no fault with your partisanship, but stop and hush your pretenses. J. E. Martine.

A Christmas Gift.

Parents and others should consider what a suitable and valuable Christmas gift to a young man or a boy would be a full educational or junior membership in the Y. M. C. A., worth $8, $5, and $3, respectively. The privileges of the educational membership are as follows: Admission to the educational classes and star courses of entertainments. The full membership includes all the above, and full use of the physical department, including gymnasium, bowling alleys, shower baths, swimming pool, etc., all under the direction of a competent physical director. The junior membership includes use of the physical department two days in the week and other privileges. Membership tickets issued now will be good until January 1st, 1897. If desired, tickets may be purchased on the installment plan.

A Generous Act.

The ton of coal, which was voted Abner Bartlett at the Firemen's Fair last evening, was donated by Mr. Bartlett to the Children's Home.

RESPECTED MAN DEAD.

Peter Wyckoff, Seventy Years Old, Passed Away Last Night.

After a lingering illness, Peter Wyckoff passed quietly away last evening at his residence on Park avenue. The cause of his death was heart trouble. Mr. Wyckoff was in his seventieth year and has resided in Plainfield for a long time. He has been residing with his wife and two unmarried daughters. A married daughter, Mrs. L. Ross, lives on La-Grande avenue and at her home the funeral will be held Monday morning at 11 o'clock. Robert Wyckoff, his son, is the salesman at the Columbia Cycle Academy and lives on Arlington avenue. Burt Wyckoff, another son, is engaged in business in New York, but makes his home in Plainfield. Mr. Wyckoff was a prominent member of the Park Avenue Baptist church. A large circle of friends mourn his death.

FORESTERS ELECT OFFICERS.

Men Who Will Look After the Organization for the Year.

Court Plainfield, No. 1114, I. O. O. F., met last night and initiated one candidate and elected the following of fleers to serve one year:

Court Deputy, Joseph Bird; Court physician, Dr. H. H. Lowrie; Chief ranger, John Bird; Vice-ranger, Chas. Jaeger; Recording secretary, James Patterson; Financial secretary, John F. Casey; Treasurer, J. J. Praed; Chaplain, John Allen; Senior woodward, Jas. McClinton; Junior woodward, Wm. Jaeger; Senior beadle, T. Fitzgerald; Representatives to High Court, Dr. H. H. Lowrie, John Allen, John Risberg, Chas. Jaeger; Finance Committee, John Allen, H. Hansen; Trustees, H. H. Lowrie, D. Nuttal.

MR. MARTINE FAVORS ANNEXATION.

The Farmer Orator Thinks Borough and City Should Be Governed Together.

In answer to a question of a Press reporter as to what he thought of the North Plainfield annexation project Mr. Martine said he felt that every advantage to North Plainfield demanded annexation. "Our interests are identical," said he. "It would advance the progress and welfare of both city and borough. Sanitary questions demand this. Extension of streets would advance the interests of both."

What!

One of the most trying problems of this holiday season is to know what to give to your lover, and, and this problem is easy of solution if you look around and learn what is new in the line of gifts; we are sure that if you take a look at Collier's extensive display of novelties your only puzzle will then be—"which of these many appropriate, beautiful and yet not costly souvenirs shall I select?" 103 Park avenue.

Getting Their Manual Ready.

The letter carriers of this city are working hard to make their yearly manual more interesting this year than its predecessors. Besides giving all postal information, it will contain a history of the Plainfield post office, from its origin to the present date. The manual will be issued about January 1st.

Syphon of Vichy Explodes.

A man started from Leggett's drug store this morning on his wheel carrying a syphon of vichy. In attempting to cross the car tracks his wheel slipped, causing him to fall. The syphon exploded, startling passers-by very much. Street Cleaner McFadden was on hand, as usual, and removed the glass, thus removing the possibility of cyclers cutting their tires.

Door Mats Disappearing.

The residents of West Seventh and Eighth streets have been troubled lately by the sudden disappearance of their door mats. The evening is the time of the theft and, in several cases, the mats have been stolen almost directly before their owners.

They Have Arrived.

Our 1896 Columbia—What is more suitable for a Christmas present? $100 worth in every wheel—Hartfords at $60 and $80, next best—The Eldridge Bicycle Co—Park avenue and Fourth street.

A Consulting Engineer.

Charles K. Moore, who is well known in this city, and who lately was deputy street commissioner to Col. Waring, of New York city, is one of the consulting engineers of the New York and New Jersey bridge that is soon to be built across the Hudson river.

Express Lines Consolidated.

Captain William Hand & Son have purchased the business of Rickert, the city expressman, and began to day running the city express in connection with their other business.

CAMPAIGN OF CHRISTIANS.

The Meeting to Be Led by Col. Hadley, Miss Sara Wray and Mr. Lee—Particular Effort to Save Men From Drink.

The meetings which begin tomorrow morning in the Trinity Reformed church and the Park Avenue Baptist church, at the former of which Col. Hadley will speak; the latter to be addressed by Miss Sara Wray, singing evangelist, and Mr. Leo, "The Christian Athlete," will continue throughout the entire week, except Wednesday night, at Reform Hall, and it is earnestly requested by Col. Hadley and those associated with him in this work, that the Christian people tomorrow in their various churches should earnestly pray for God's blessing upon all these meetings, which will be devoted entirely to the subject of reaching the non-church goer, especially the habitue of the saloon.

The meetings are in no sense temperance meetings, but are rescue meetings such as are held in St. Bartholomew's Rescue Mission and in the old Jerry McAuley Water Street Mission, New York, every night in the year.

The rescue-one plan, by which every Christian who will, is asked to pray for and as far as possible, to save one person during the year 1896 will be fully explained and urged.

Miss Wray, the singing evangelist who assists Col. Wray at these meetings is famous throughout the world as the leading woman in such work. Her audiences are usually limited to the size of the hall, and it is believed that those who come to the mass-meeting tomorrow afternoon in Reform Hall at 3 o'clock, must come early in order to secure seats. The public is especially notified that this meeting is for both sexes.

Ministers, who have at heart the salvation of the drunkard or non-church-goer, are earnestly and cordially invited to be present upon the platform at the meeting tomorrow afternoon with their wives.

Col. Hadley will lead the meeting and make a statement of the plans and objects of the campaign, which will then formally open. These meetings, however, are largely for the purpose of instructing Christians, who may volunteer each to save one during the year, how to do the work and to receive suggestions from them, so that at the close of the campaign, December 23d, some feasible methods, agreeable to all the Christians, may be adopted by which the numerous saloons in Plainfield may be offset to some extent by the work of the Christian people who, with God's help, may be able to counteract the evil influences of drink.

The meeting Sunday evening will be held in Grace Episcopal church, Rev. Dean Rodman, rector, at which Col. Hadley, Miss Wray and Mr. Leo will speak.

The Monday night meeting, which will be held in Reform Hall, will be led by Col. Hadley, assisted by Miss Wray and Mr. Leo and several of the converts of the famous St. Bartholomew's Rescue Mission, who will come for the occasion and give their thrilling testimonies.

On Tuesday night, Miss Wray will relate incidents from her thrilling experience in the slums of New York and London, especially in the dreaded Whitechapel district, where she labored for seven months.

Further announcements will appear in the public press from time to time. The book known as "Rescue Songs," which is used at all the Rescue Missions throughout the country, will be used at these meetings in Reform Hall.

Owing to the fact that Wednesday evening is the prayer meeting night of the churches, Col. Hadley's meeting held at Reform Hall on that evening, since it is one of the iron clad rules of the Christian Men's Union, under whose auspices these meetings are held, not to interfere with any of the regular meetings of the churches, the object of the Union being to strengthen and recruit for the churches, instead of interfering with them or set up a counter-attraction.

The prayer meetings throughout the city are earnestly requested, next Wednesday night, to pray for God's blessing upon these meetings and that the result may mean the salvation of many of the slaves to drink in Plainfield and vicinity.

UNION COUNTY BIBLE SOCIETY.

The Thirty-seventh Annual Meeting to be Held at Cranford.

The Union County Bible Society will hold its thirty-seventh annual meeting on Tuesday evening next in the First Presbyterian church at Cranford. Each church in the county is expected and urged to be represented by its pastor and one or more delegates.

The exercises will include reports of the officers and address of welcome by Rev. George F. Greene, and Dr. Glanford will respond. The greetings from the American Bible Society will be delivered by Rev. Dr. Moffett, and there will be an address by Rev. W. R. Richards, D. D., of Plainfield.

GEROME'S PERSONALITY.

As a Noble Man, With a Military Manner and a Distinguished Air.

In person M. Gerome is a wiry, medium sized man, with a fine presence and very soldierlike in his erect carriage. His face is strong and full of character, his snapping eyes are searching and stern, and his iron head of gray hair and military mustache give him quite the appearance of a cavalry officer. Courteous manners, great affability and a most distinguished air make him an ideal type of a gentleman. At most absurdly early hour, when only milkmen, bakers and laborers are stirring, he may be seen in the Bois de Boulogne, or on the Champs Elysées, astride of a handsome horse, taking his morning exercise, but long before the gay world of Paris is idling over its morning cup of coffee the artist has returned and is busily engaged before his easel or with his modeling tools.

Twice each week he gives his forenoon to his pupils at the Government School of Fine Arts on the Rue Bonaparte. His presence is eagerly awaited, and his arrival in the atelier is a veritable ovation. On his entrance and after his hat and coat have been taken by one of the scholars, without a word he proceeds to look at the work of criticism, in which he is a model of brevity and conciseness. His unerring eye at once detects the faults and wrong tendencies of each student, and nothing whatsoever escapes him. A pupil may deceive himself, but not the master. Kindly advice to the serious, stinging rebukes to the careless, encouragement and praise to workers and useful counsel to progressive men—such are the results of his visits. He is very liberal in his ideas and gladly welcomes any style of work so long as it is healthy, honest and sincere. He takes great pride in the efforts of the pupils under his charge, and has instituted in his many pairs of stairs to the most humble little studio to correct and advise some poor, struggling chap at work on a picture, and for many years past what one of them went southwest to the mountain fastnesses of Cilicia, where another Armenian kingdom grew up in the twelfth century. Other went to Persia. Others moved northeastward and now form a large, industrious and prosperous population in Russian Transcaucasia, where many have entered the military or civil service of the czar and risen, as the Armenians used to rise long ago in the Byzantine empire, to high positions and power. Russia's three best generals in her last Asiatic campaigns against the Turks were Armenians.

Others again have scattered themselves over the cities of Asia Minor and southeastern Europe, where much of the local trade is in their hands. But a large number, roughly estimated at from 1,300,000 to 1,700,000, remain in the old fatherland round the great lake of Van, and on the plateaus and ridges which rise from it westward from Mount Ararat to Erzerum and Erzinghian. Here they are an agricultural and, in a way, pastoral population, leading a simple, primitive life and desiring nothing more than to be permitted to lead it in peace and in fidelity to its ancient customs, which have been to them the symbol of nationality as well as the guide of life for 16 centuries.—Hon. James Bryce, M. P., in Century.

Choosing a Sweetheart.

A lady who has the credit of being versed in matters of the heart gives these few hints for the novice in love—they are applicable to both sexes:

Do not, if you have always admired fair women, marry a brunette, or a man with a dark person. The fact that you have always preferred fair people shows that your best chance of happiness would be with a fair partner.

For instance, the man who has always admired small, slim girls should not choose for his wife a tall and well developed girl. He should be the man who thinks that a man should be tall and broad he persuaded to accept a man who possesses these two characteristics.

People of different complexions and physiques will act in totally different ways under identically the same circumstances, and it is a fact that every man and every woman knows instinctively with what style of helpmate he or she is most likely to live in happiness.

Those who have acted contentedly been known when these rules have not been followed; but, generally speaking, it is unsafe for any one, in such a serious matter as marriage, to disregard in a moment of passion the fixed ideas and instincts of a lifetime.—Edinburgh Scotsman.

Why "Timothy" Grass Is So Called.

The forage grass known to the farmers of the United States as timothy is so called because first introduced and extensively cultivated in this country by one Timothy Hanson, a farmer of Maryland. This species of grass is indigenous in England and all over western continental Europe, where it is grown extensively by most farmers between the Mediterranean and the North sea. The botanical name of this grass is Phleum pratense. Timothy is known in the British isles as cat's tail grass and in several of our eastern states as herd's grass. In Canada it is grown in large quantities in Maryland and Pennsylvania long before a spear of it had ever been seen in England, the first seed of it ever seen in the latter named country being imported from America.—St. Louis Republic.

The Claims of Long Descent.

In a notice of a recent wedding the bride was described as "a lineal descendants of Edward III." A poetical friend, sending his congratulations, wrote:

From my earliest days I was led to believe
That we all were descended from Adam and Eve;
But poor Mrs. Brown-Jones—'tis very absurd—
Was only descended from Edward the Third.

Exact.

Father-in-law—What? Oh, my daughter was valued at $10 when she was a child.—Fliegende Blatter.

A DEADWOOD STORY.

IT IS TOLD BY DAN COSTELLO, THE OLD TIME CIRCUS MAN.

The Hero of This Tale Was California Joe, a Picturesque Character—How the Minister's Death Was Avenged—An Indian Head In the Belle o' Union.

There was a little gray haired old man sitting in the corridor of the Tifft House the other day who seemed to be taking a great interest in the people who circulated around him. Nobody spoke to him, and he sat alone and unnoticed, for he was a complete stranger in the city. He was from Dakota, and it had been nearly a quarter of a century since he had made his home in the east. Years ago he had been a man of wealth and had owned interests in Dakota, mines worth many thousands of dollars, but he now had very little of that fortune left, and his name was no longer known among the business men of the state where he had lived. He was Dan Costello, the once famous clown, who for several years was in partnership with P. T. Barnum in the show business.

Costello was in Deadwood in the old pioneer days, when the town was filled with gambling place where they gathered together at night and where several of them were killed. "Going down to the Belle o' Union to see the fight" or "to get shot" was quite a favorite pastime with Deadwood citizens in those days.

One of these lawless men whom Costello knew was California Joe, and it was about this man that the ex-clown told an Express reporter an interesting story, which, although it happened 15 years ago, has never crept into print. Here it is:

"Well," as Costello told it, "it doesn't make much difference how we mortals die, just so we die right. I went to California Joe, except that he always said he would rather like to quit the world with his boots on. And he did. To begin with, there's the Indian head in the basin of the skin and hair still clinging to it, in the Smithsonian institute in Washington. I don't suppose any of the people at the institution know how that Indian came to be killed, but it happened in a peculiar way. In Deadwood, when I was there, there was a minister hanging around the town and holding street services for the miners. What was his name or to what denomination he belonged I never knew, and I don't suppose anyone was most who did, but that doesn't matter so far as this story is concerned. One day this minister started out on horseback to ride over to Butte mountain. He had to ride a good deal through the hills and then across the plains. It was a very dangerous one, for there were many Indians on the Indians, who were thick in the neighborhood, to lay their traps and more than a few of the whites had been waylaid and killed by the redskins while riding across the plains, and the Indians could see for miles from its summit and watch for travelers. The minister rode slowly through the hills, with his gun hanging across his saddle and his Bible bulging out from his coat pocket, and he did not see so much as a redskin on his way to the butte until he reached the plains and was spurring his horse over the long, straight stretch of road that lay before him that he heard a whoop, and suddenly half a dozen Indians rode out from their hiding place. The minister had fighting blood in his veins and he put spurs to his horse right away. He got a bullet in each leg, and then succeeded in killing one of the Indians. But the Indians got the best of him, and his horse was killed by the bullets.

"It happened that California Joe and his partner were on their way from Crook City to Deadwood that day, and it was their misfortune to meet the same band of Indians on the road across the plains. California Joe's partner was killed almost as soon as the fight began, and at the same time one of the Indians fell. Joe stood his ground and fired shot after shot in quick succession. Two more of the Indians were killed, and then the remaining fright from Joe's good marksmanship, hurried away. Joe then leant over one of the Indians lying in the road. The Indian was dead, and Joe scalped the top of the head off his head. Then he mounted his horse, took the head with him and rode full speed for Deadwood through the principal streets as fast as his horse could go, holding the Indian's head, the blood from which had spattered his saddle, by the hair. The news of the killing had spread in the Belle o' Union, and everybody left the gambling tables to hear Joe's story.

"That Indian's head hung on the wall in Belle o' Union, and I was there for a year or more. Then somebody threw it out on a garbage pile. It lay there all one summer, and the following spring somebody who took an interest in such relics found it lying out in the yard, and in some way or other it got to the Smithsonian institute.

"As I said before, California Joe died with his boots on. It was only a little while after his adventure near Deadwood that he had a falling out with a man near Red Cloud agency. Joe called him a liar, or something of that sort, and the fellow took offense. He pursued Joe, trying to get the drop on Joe for a week, and finally he landed him. Joe was coming down the street when the fellow sent a bullet into his back. He fell and died in a lonely spot on the plains not far from there. Some of his old friends stopped playing poker long enough to dig a hole for him, and they chipped together and put a little picket fence around the grave to keep the coyotes away and put up a headstone on which were simply the words, 'California Joe.'"

The minister in Costello's story was mentioned in the article on Deadwood in The Illustrated American. He was the Rev. Henry W. Smith, the first missionary to the Black Hills.—Buffalo Express.

Chrysanthemum Culture.

I think it advisable to keep chrysanthemums in pots during the entire season, because when this is done the labor and risk of lifting and replanting in the fall are avoided. Then E. Rexford in The Ladies' Journal. The plants should be shifted into larger pots from time to time during the season, if grown in pots, until you have them in 8 or 10 inch pots. Give rich soil and plenty of water. Pinch off the ends of the branches to make the plants compact. Do this at intervals until the latter part of July or middle of August.

THE New York Times.

THE TIMES is a newspaper for intelligent men and women who want to read all the news of the world every day. The paper has distinguishing merits of its own. It is neither sensational nor dull. It is not sour-tempered. It is not frivolous or visionary. It sees plenty of good in the world and talks about it. It tells of the bad when it must, but not unwholesomely. It prints with fullness the record of human endeavor in many fields outside of business, politics and war—in literature, religion, science, art, sports, and household matters. No paper in the country prints so many book reviews and so much book news. No paper has so complete a financial page—a daily manual for investors and officers of financial institutions. Its market reports—wool, cotton, bread-stuffs, farm products, etc.—are the best in the country.

The Democracy of THE TIMES is of the old-fashioned sort—as old as Thomas Jefferson; majority rule, no heroism, no machine tyranny, the liberties of politics from private money-making, a sound currency, industrial emancipation, and everyday honesty. To promote the influence of the Democratic Party along these lines it labors with heart and conscience and all its might.

As the legislative session approaches there is hope that some legislation will be enacted which will root out the elder joints.

It cost just $50 a year to keep the first common road in New Jersey in order. There is difference between then and now.

The Populists went out of existence as a recognized political party in New York State at the last election. They failed to poll the necessary ten per cent. of the total vote cast to entitle them to have their tickets printed without a petition.

About 63 per cent. of the Representatives and about 68 per cent. of the Senators in Congress are lawyers. In the House there are 173 college men and 183 who are not college men, and in the Senate the college graduates number 38 out of the total of 88.

The appearance of a Paris music hall singer in this country at $4,000 per week following close on to the event which culminated in the Vanderbilt millions going abroad with a title, seems to indicate that American love and art are among the things that are below par.

Though defeated in the municipal elections in Georgia, the undeterred American Protective Association sent a committee to Gov. Atkinson to ask that he refrain from appointing Catholics to office. As in immediate rebuke the Governor appointed James O'Neil, a Catholic, to be City Solicitor of Atlanta at $10,000 a year.

Since many taxpayers have questioned the policy of the Common Council in purchasing a chemical engine, the following report of Fire Commissioner Sheffield, of New York, is opportune:

I desire to report as to the value of chemical engines in fire extinguishment, that the testimony of the Fire Department authorities of Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, Buffalo and twenty other leading cities of whom inquiries have been made is to the effect that they are the most valuable of recent additions to apparatus in treating fire, their operations covering an absolute control of from 35 to 90 per cent of all the fires in those cities, reducing both the total of the losses by combustion and the sometimes casualty serious and often unnecessary damage by water. There has not been one adverse criticism received.

After sixteen years of service in the County Clerk's office Elmore D. Moffett, of this city, will on January first retire from the position of Deputy Clerk. The reasons for Mr. Moffett's retirement can be summed up in two sentences: Mr. Moffett is a Democrat. County Clerk Howard is a Republican. Ever since Mr. Howard assumed office there has been a strong effort among Republicans to displace Mr. Moffett in order that B. Frank Corriell, of this city, could secure the position. County Clerk Howard has been reluctant to take any such action, from the fact that the long experience and careful attention to duties had eminently fitted Mr. Moffett to perform the exact work which devolved on him. But such political pressure has finally been brought that Mr. Moffett will retire to be succeeded by Mr. Corriell. There is little doubt, however, that if Mr. Moffett really desired to retain his position, he could make it very embarrassing for Mr. Howard to effect his removal. Under section 2 of chapter 155 of the Laws of 1895 no soldier can be dismissed from any position held by him in any department of the government of this State or of any department of the government of any county or city, without charges first being preferred against him and an opportunity given him to reply to the accusations. Mr. Moffett was a soldier, and inasmuch as his removal is brought for partisan purposes only, and not by any reason of incompetency, his retirement can only be accomplished by his own volition to do so. Of B. Frank Corriell, who will succeed Mr. Moffett, the Daily Press feels sure that he will rapidly acquaint himself with the duties of his position by reason of his natural aptitude for clerical work and eventually prove a valued attache for the office.

The State Road Commissioner in his annual report urges the adoption of convict labor for stone road-making, very much in the spirit as it was adopted at the Good Roads Tournament in Atlanta. He thinks that this would be one of the ways of solving the problem that has for years irritated the labor organizations, of bringing convict labor in competition with honest labor in the production of commodities. There is not a county in the State but could organize to utilize convicts in jail for road building, and those in prison for preparing the material for roads. He urges the adoption by township committees of ordinances to allow rebates for the use of broad tires on wheels. He suggests the rebate of $1 on each wheel instead of fifty cents, as the law reads now, and to make it compulsory that vehicles of 1,500 pounds or more to have broad tires. On the question of taxing bicycles in the interest of good roads, he is silent, but personally has expressed the opinion that he doubts whether a bicycle could be discriminated against and be made the subject of a special tax; that if the bicycle be taxed, all other vehicles that use public highways would be subject to the tax; that there are other vehicles that do positive damage to roads, while the bicyclist is disposed to improve it. He, however, does touch upon the wisdom, in suburban communities of having steel roads, so that vehicles of all kinds, as well as bicycles, shall have the advantage of trackage.

TWO MEN WOUNDED.

One Stabbed in the Head, and the Other Shot in the Side.

Michael Zenick, and Charles Zavanta, of Bound Brook, were taken to the Somerset County jail at one o'clock yesterday morning. Zenick was suffering from stab wounds about the head and face.

Zenick had attempted to break up a christening party by beating in the windows and doors of the residence of George Verda with an axe. George Wheelock came out and, it is alleged, attacked Zenick with a knife. Fellow-countrymen interfered. Wheelock fled and has not been arrested.

Zavanta was shot in the side. Al Sanderson, of South Bound Brook, is accused. Zavanta was walking along Main street shortly after midnight, when he staggered against Sanderson. A fight ensued, Zavanta fell to the sidewalk and Sanderson escaped.

Resolutions of Condolence.

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted by Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., at their meeting last Thursday evening:

Whereas, The great and Supreme Ruler of the universe in His infinite wisdom removed from our midst one of our worthy and esteemed fellow-laborers, William C. Winckler, and, whereas, the long and intimate relation held with him in the faithful discharge of his duties in this society makes it eminently befitting that we record our appreciation of him; therefore be it

Resolved, That the wisdom and ability which he has exercised in the aid of our organization, by service and counsel, will be held in grateful remembrance.

Resolved, That the sudden removal of such a life from among our midst leaves a vacancy and a shadow that will be deeply realized by all the members and friends of this organization, and will prove a serious loss to the community.

Resolved, That with deep sympathy with the bereaved parents and relatives of the deceased, we express the sincere hope that even so great a loss to us all may be overruled by Him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the records of this organization, and printed in each of the local papers, and a copy be suitably engrossed and presented to our late brother's family.

How to Give Charity.

Five cents to a beggar in nine cases out of ten is either a contribution to the grog-shop or a means by which mendicancy is encouraged. Even the charity societies are imposed upon and the same person, sometimes unworthy, is helped by a half dozen different societies at once. On Thanksgiving day, in a city where there was no Organized Aid Association, a poor woman received eleven turkeys. The Organized Aid Association prevents this overlapping of relief.

A Secret Marriage.

A very quiet marriage took place at Rahway on October 16th, when Miss Nellie A. VanDeventer, of Central avenue, and Joel P. Ryno, of West Front street, were united in marriage at the home of Mrs. Ryno's aunt, Mrs. Sarah Pearson. Rev. T. C. Mayham, of the new Second M. E. church, performed the ceremony. The marriage was a secret one, and was only announced until Saturday when Mr. and Mrs. Ryno moved into their new home at 123 West Front street, which Mr. Ryno had already furnished.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury.

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces, such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

WHAT PERSEVERANCE DOES.

SUCCESSFUL CAREER OF CITY JUDGE-ELECT GEORGE DEMEZA.

His Success Has Been Gained by His Personal Efforts Alone—Youngest City Judge Plainfield Has Ever Had.

The man who is to fill the office of City Judge after January 1st is a good example of a young man who has risen to a position of prominence by his own indefatigable efforts. George W. DeMeza is one of the prominent lawyers of Plainfield, and has now only begun his career which promises to be one which will be an honor to his city and to himself.

He was born at Hartford, Conn. on February 16th, 1871. When very young, his family moved to Plainfield where his father engaged in the furniture business. They afterwards removed to North Plainfield, where young DeMeza attended the public schools until twelve years of age. He then entered the employ of Schepflin, Baldwin, Tweedy & Co., where he remained for three years, continuing his studies outside of business hours. He afterwards studied for some time at private schools, taking up the higher branches of learning and the foreign languages. His father died when he was fifteen years old and he was thrown on his own resources. He accepted a position with L. M. French where he remained for six months; then he entered the employ of A. L. Cadmus for about the same length of time. The study of law was his next choice, and he began to read law in the offices of Jackson & Codington. After he had been there a month he showed a natural taste for it and soon made his appearance in the justice's courts as the representative of Jackson & Codington. He won his first case against a prominent Newark lawyer.

GEORGE W. DEMEZA.

On November 3d he was admitted to the bar. The motion admitting him was made by Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh. He rented a small office in the old First National Bank building. His first case came the next day when he represented Jackson & Codington in the divorce case of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Gable. He met with success. His first case in a high court was in the Supreme Court of New Jersey before Judge Lippincott, where he was also victorious.

Mr. De Meza has the reputation of being fearless in any court and has won the admiration of the members of the bar by his courtesy and his ever-ready arguments. He now has a handsome suite of offices in the Sergell building where he employs three clerks and a stenographer. He will be the youngest office holder in Plainfield and the youngest City Judge that Plainfield has ever had. He is also the youngest lawyer known in the State. He has a flourishing practice and has had a large number of cases in the high courts. He also is settling up a number of estates. Of all the lawyers in Plainfield Mr. De Meza is the best known in the city court, the methods of which he has a thorough knowledge. He has always been a staunch Republican, and although having taken an active part in the last State election, this is the first time he has run for office. He is an immensely popular man, besides with his mother on West Second street, Mr. De Meza is a hard worker and a thorough student. He is generally liked among the members of the bar. His popularity in this city was shown very plainly at the last election when he ran over 300 votes ahead of his ticket. He has one of the best and most complete law libraries in the State.

A CRY FOR HELP

RESULT OF A PROMPT REPLY.

Two Open Letters that Should Suggest to Thousands of American Women to go and do Likewise.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

LITTLE FALLS, MINN., May 11, 1894.

"I am suffering, and need your aid. I have terrible pains in both sides of my womb, extending down the front of my limbs and lower part of my back, attended by backache and pains in the back of the neck and ears.

The doctors have given me opiates to quiet the pain. I have a very high fever nearly all the time. I am nervous, and cannot stand. My doctor says I must keep in bed. Now I place myself under your care. I am only twenty-one years old, and too young to suffer so much." — MRS. CHAS. PARKER.

The above letter was received by Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., May 15, 1894, which received a prompt reply.

The following letter reached Mrs. Pinkham about five months later. Note the result.

LITTLE FALLS, MINN., Sept. 21, 1894.

"I deem it my duty to announce the fact to my fellow-sufferers of all female complaints, that Lydia E. Pinkham's treatment and Vegetable Compound have entirely cured me of all the pains and suffering I was enduring when I wrote you last May. I followed your advice to the letter, and the result is simply wonderful. May Heaven bless you and the good work you are doing for your sex!" — MRS. CHAS. PARKER.

All the druggists in town say there is a tremendous demand for Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound; and it is doing lots of good among the women.

If you are sick and in trouble write to Mrs. Pinkham. Relief awaits you.

GAIETY REIGNED SUPREME.

THE FIRST ASSEMBLY DANCED OUT LAST EVENING.

The Attendance Not Exceptionally Large, But Pleasure Was Enjoyed by Everyone —List of the Patronesses and Guests.

Beautiful gowns and inspiring music dazzled the beholder as he entered the Casino last evening, for all the light and gaiety betokened the fact that the social season was reaching its height and the first Assembly was in progress. The large hall presented a pretty appearance as the animated couples, the ladies in their charming and brilliant gowns and their escorts in the more sombre black, glided and whirled about the room. Rugs, cushions, scarfs and the like added to the beauty of the scene, while on the stage Elliott's orchestra, of New York, furnished the inspiring strains that kept the dancers in motion. In one of the ante-rooms a table, artistically decorated in pink and green, was bountifully laden with dainty refreshments, which were furnished by Max Wiertz in his usual excellent style.

The attendance was rather small as is usually the case with the first Assembly, but the evening passed off very pleasantly and it was long after the clock struck midnight that the guests departed.

The patronesses present were: Mrs. Joseph W. Reinhart, Mrs. William L. Saunders, Mrs. Louis G. Timpson, Mrs. Marion S Ackerman, Mrs. Orville T. Waring, Mrs. Frederick Wills, Mrs. James T. Scott, Mrs. William J. Roome and Mrs. Arthur H. Abernethy.

Among those present at the Assembly were: Mr. and Mrs. Lemuel W. Serrell, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. H. Curtis, Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. Vanburen, Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Raymond, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph W. Reinhart, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Saunders, Mr. and Mrs. Louis G. Timpson, Mr. and Mrs. M. S. Ackerman, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Roome, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Atterbury, the Misses Holly, Abbott, Shepard, Murphy, Vail, Sprague, Wilkins, of Jersey City, Richardson, of Brooklyn, Emilie Reinhart, of New York, Reise, of New York, and the Messrs. Wright, Hutchins, Huntington, Frost, Van Boskerck, Murray, Murphy, Shepard, Abbott, West, Van-Buren, Bull, Henderson, Erickson, Waring, Caldwell, of Elizabeth, Stillman and Behlen, of New York.

Why They Are Christians.

The service at Trinity Reformed church last evening was a novel one. During the past week the pastor, Rev. Cornelius Schenck, had written about a dozen letters to prominent Plainfield lawyers, physicians and business men, asking them why they were Christians and what benefits they derived. They all replied, including one woman and a little girl. Mr. Schenck read the letters last evening and they proved to be most convincing arguments why a person should become a Christian, and all were thoroughly practical. The pastor made an earnest appeal at the close for all to give up their life of sin and live for God.

MAKING ONE TOWN OF TWO.

ARGUMENTS FAVORING CONSOLIDATION OF CITY AND BOROUGH.

A Correspondent Who Thinks The City Residents Are Unanimously in Favor of It—Only Borough Politicians Opposed.

It is not unlikely that an effort will be made this winter to consolidate the city of Plainfield, with the contiguous borough of North Plainfield. All that separates the towns geographically is a tiny stream, but this waterway also constitutes the boundary line between Union and Somerset counties. So far as public opinion touching the desirability of uniting the city and borough is concerned, it is beyond question that the inhabitants of the city are unanimously in favor of consolidation. The borough residents, except possibly the officeholders, entertain the same views. The only strong opposition to the proposed union would emanate from Somerset county, which would thereby be shorn of its largest and wealthiest municipality. Assemblyman-elect William R. Codington, a resident and ex-City Judge of Plainfield, believes that the time is ripe for consolidation, and is heartily in favor of bringing it about. He has expressed his readiness to work for legislation that would extend the boundaries of Union County so as to include North Plainfield and merge the borough and city into one municipality. Judge Codington said today that he would introduce a bill for that purpose in Trenton this winter, if he received the assurance of support from his constituents. He cited some of the benefits that the citizens of the city and borough would derive by consolidation, and the existing disadvantages that would be abolished. The union, he said, would add greatly to the prestige of the city. At present the census credits Plainfield with but 13,629 population; ignoring a community of 4,245 persons that commercially, socially, in fact, in every respect, except politically, are already identified with the city.

Opinions of Plainfield's wealth and importance based on census figures and assessed valuations are therefore, it is said, misleading, and detrimental to the town's progress. It is asserted that the government of the consolidated city would be more economical, for one mayor, council, assessor, collector, etc., would perform the work now done by two governing bodies. The administration of justice is at present greatly hampered in each town by its isolation from the other. The authority of the Plainfield and North Plainfield police stops at the county line, and offenders are frequently able to escape capture by a few paces across the brook. The only magistrates in the borough are justices of the peace, hence every civil or criminal case of importance has to be referred to Somerville for disposition. Plainfield is slightly better off in having a city court, but its limitations are such that it comes far short of meeting the requirements of the city. Judge Codington says that the consolidated city would have a population sufficient to entitle it to a district court, in which could be tried many of the cases now on the calendars of the county-seat tribunals, thus effecting a great saving in time, cost, and inconvenience. Municipal improvements are retarded by the lack of political union between the towns. Plainfield is engaged in constructing a system of sewers, in the building or benefits of which North Plainfield has no share, although the need of sewerage is as great on one side of the brook as on the other. Similarly the privileges of free instruction in the Plainfield High School and of the Plainfield Public Library are denied to North Plainfield residents. And whenever an additional bridge across the brook is needed, or an existing bridge is in need of repairs, nothing can be done until the proposed improvement has been favorably acted upon by two boards of chosen freeholders, one in Somerville and one in Elizabeth, who share the expense equally.

science

Science is "knowing how." The only secret about Scott's Emulsion is years of science. When made in large quantities and by improving methods, an emulsion must be more perfect than when made in the old time way with mortar and pestle a few ounces at a time. This is why Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil never separates, keeps sweet for years, and why every spoonful is equal to every other spoonful. An even product throughout.

In other emulsions you are liable to get an uneven product—either an over or under dose. Get Scott's. Genuine has a salmon-colored wrapper.

A TALK TO ODD FELLOWS.

One Hundred and Fifty Attend the Y. M. C. A. Meeting.

The regular Sunday afternoon meeting held at the Y. M. C. A. Hall yesterday was specially for the Plainfield and Queen City Lodges, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. There were nearly one hundred and fifty Odd Fellows present. Special music was given by a male quartette and L. H. Bigelow, Jr., rendered two vocal solos very effectively.

Rev. D. A. MacPhie made the address. He introduced his talk by giving a resume of the objects of the order and urging them to stand fast to their principles. He said that the order was in no way opposed to other organizations of like character or religious denominations, in fact the principles of the order were based entirely upon Scriptural teaching. He took for the points in his discourse the three links, the symbol of the order, viz: Friendship, Love and Truth, but dwelt more at length on Love. He said that the parable of the Good Samaritan is a good type of what should be expected of a loyal Odd Fellow.

THE LAST NIGHT OF THE FAIR.

NAMES OF THOSE WHO WERE THE PRIZE WINNERS IN CONTESTS.

No Competition for the Firemen's Trumpet, and it Will be Disposed Of by the Fair Committee—Profits Amount to $500

The Firemen's Fair is over and nothing is left but the pleasant memories of that week of excitement. Saturday night was the last, and as is usually the case, the best. Over fifteen hundred people gathered in the Columbia Cycle Academy to witness the dances. Then when they were over the crowd either danced in the space that was cleared in the centre of the academy, or gathered in groups for a friendly chat. The articles at the various booths that had not been sold were next auctioned off to the highest bidder, while the different contests were closed. Abner Bartlett won the trumpet for the most popular fireman. The lady's Keating bicycle to be given to the girl securing the most money was won by Miss Beula Waters. Frank Denecklau won the men's Keating wheel in a like contest.

Charles Smith was victor in the contest for a handsome badge to the one turning in the most money in subscriptions and selling the most tickets. A ring was the prize in another contest for securing money for the fair and was won by George Schaeffer. Miss Lottie Chamberlin did the best in another contest for a watch. A silver trumpet, which was to have been contested for by the firemen of Scotch Plains and Westfield, was not awarded as there was no competition for it. The committee will make arrangements for its presentation in some other contest.

The exact amount of the money that will be turned over to the joint treasury of the fire companies is not yet known, but it is estimated at about $500.

FOREFATHERS' DAY ADDRESS.

Deeds and Misdeeds of Congregationalists, by Rev. C. L. Goodrich.

A Forefathers Day address on "Deeds and Misdeeds of Congregationalists," was delivered by Rev. C. L. Goodrich in the Congregational church yesterday morning.

In surveying history, said Mr. Goodrich, we come upon both good deeds and misdeeds, and we can learn from both.

The early Congregationalists have been much censured for their dealings with Roger Williams, Ann Hutchinson, and the Quakers. But before we condemn them, let us remember that these people were not punished so much for religious offences as for disturbing the public peace.

But nothing can justify the dark event that took place on Boston Common, when three men and one woman were "hanged by the neck until they were dead." At their death the religious spirit of the colony revolted, and the gates of religious intolerance were thrown down.

The history of the witchcraft delusion in New England seems terrible to us, but in reality it was very slight in America, in comparison with other countries. It was a very widespread delusion. A truer knowledge of God, more love to fellow-men, and more shrinking from anything like cruelty, have made a great difference in the world.

At first, only church members were allowed to vote in the new colony. After the division of religious and political privileges much of the carnestness of the churches died out. But God had not raised up His church to have it die. Jonathan Edwards became a great instrument in God's hand; Whitfield came over from England and a great religious awakening took place, 50,000 people being added to the churches.

At the time of the Revolutionary War the Congregational ministers were a strong factor in arousing patriotic sentiment. And by them was repeatedly urged the plan of a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. Congregationalism and patriotism have always been inseparable.

THE NEW CITY COLLECTOR.

A BRIEF BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF ELIAS H. BIRD.

Born on a Farm, He Has Worked His Way Up in the World, Winning the Respect and Confidence of All.

Elias H. Bird, the youngest son of five children, was born near Millington, Somerset county, Feb. 26th, 1860. His father, Clarkson Bird, was a farmer and died when Mr. Bird was seven years old. On July 6th, 1870, the family moved to North Plainfield, where Mr. Bird attended public school, which was then taught by Charles Gause on Race street. After a few years schooling he went back to his birthplace where he remained till Nov. 8th, 1876, when he was engaged by R. MacDonald as a clerk in his grocery store, which is located opposite the Y.M.C.A. building, and has been there ever since, and in nineteen years service the longest time he has been absent from the store was two weeks. That was last summer, when he took a vacation.

Several years after Mr. MacDonald's death, while J. Fred MacDonald, his son, was proprietor of the store, Mr. Bird was made manager, which position he had honestly earned by strictly attending to business. Mr. Bird is quiet and unassuming in his manner, and during his residence in this city has made a host of friends.

In December, 1891, he was chosen by the Republican party in the First ward to represent them in the City Council. He was placed on the fire and building committee, with E. N. Erickson as chairman, and also on the street committee the first two years, and when elected for a second term remained on the same committees and was also appointed a member of the sewer committee.

During his four years service in the Council he has served the people faithfully, and recognizing this they elected him City Collector at the last city election, which position he will no doubt fill with credit to himself and to his party.

Flames in the Nursery.

A servant girl in the employ of Mr. Rice, of Webster place, discovered the nursery in the home full of smoke yesterday morning, and gave the alarm immediately. A man living next door rendered his assistance, while an alarm was sent in from Box 27, about 9:30. The department responded at once, but when they arrived the fire had been extinguished. Chief Doane is unable to tell how the fire originated. It was discovered, however, to be in a box of toys in the nursery. The total loss will not exceed $12.

FREIGHT HOUSE TO BE BUILT.

THE CONTRACT FOR THE WORK AWARDED TO JOHN ABBOTT.

The New Building Will Be Located at Richmond Street and North Avenue—North Avenue Station Improvements.

After years of agitation the act which will give Plainfield a new freight house was consummated this morning by the signing of a contract between the Central Railroad of New Jersey and John Abbott, the contractor, for the construction of the building. The announcement that this improvement was an assured fact was published exclusively in The Daily Press some weeks ago, when a letter from President Maxwell to a prominent Plainfielder was printed, in which it was stated that the improvements at the North avenue station had been decided upon by the officials of the road.

The new freight house will be located at the corner of Richmond street and North avenue, the property necessary for which was purchased in 1893 when the new building was first contemplated. Station Agent Haynes this morning told a Daily Press reporter that work would be commenced immediately by the contractor and that it would be pushed as fast as possible, though the winter weather would doubtless interfere somewhat with its rapid progress. However, it is calculated that the building will be finished and ready for occupancy by the first of next April. The structure will be 153 feet long and 45 feet wide, two stories high and built of brick. There will be ample room for the storing and handling of all freight and a handsome suite of offices for the clerical force will be built in one end of the structure. The roof will be of iron and slate.

The architecture of the house will be such as to make its erection an improvement to the section which it will occupy.

As soon as the freight business is moved to the new building in the spring, the improvements at the passenger station will be commenced, which will include the demolition of the old freight house, the laying out of a pretty park on that side of the track and the construction of a ticket office and waiting room on the present site of the freight house. A fence will doubtless divide the two stations and underground passages from one side to the other for the use of passengers will be built so as to avoid the risk to life and limb in crossing tracks to board trains. The improvements altogether will cost a good many thousand dollars.

Plainfield is one of the most profitable stations along the line of the Central Railroad and the thousands of patrons who now use the superb service of this road from this city will be more than pleased to hear of the consummation of the improvements so long under consideration.

PRIZE WINNERS AT EUCHRE.

The Young People's Club of Dunellen and North Plainfield Meet.

The Young People's Progressive Euchre Club of North Plainfield and Dunellen, met at the home of Miss Sallie Gray, of Dunellen, Friday evening. The first feminine prize was won by Miss Mattie Barrett, while Charles Boice and Robert Carpenter tied for the men's prize. Mr. Boice won on the playoff. Miss Janie Churchill and Miss Bessie Benton tied for second prize, and Miss Churchill won the deciding game. William Terry won the other prize. After the game had been concluded, the evening was spent very pleasantly in dancing. Dainty refreshments were served at the close. The club meets again on December 27th.

PRISONERS ON THEIR HONOR.

Easy to Get Along With if the Officer Has Their Good Will.

Jasper Ramey, a moonshiner, walked 20 miles to give himself up to the revenue officers. This is not uncommon in the mountain counties. A number of the deputies who make periodical visits to the counties of Pike, Letcher, Knott, Magoffin, Floyd, have quite a task in arresting the men they are after, while other officers have to fight for their lives. It is told of one of the deputy marshals that whenever he wants to send a letter or make a report to his office he writes a letter to a neighboring town. Some of the letters wind up like this: "I also have warrants for several of the other boys mentioned in this report, but would like them and tell them that I will be in ——— and for them to be there." It is said that many of the men make their appearance at the place named and are settled.

Several deputy marshals who go to the top of the Cumberland for prisoners occasionally let the men travel with them while they are under arrest. The officer goes through the country, meets the man and says:

"Now, I've a warrant for your arrest."

"All right. I've been expectin it."

"I know you've a big crop, though, and as court don't meet before October you can have time to come up to Louisville just before court opens."

Then the man would return to his work, and at the appointed time he would be on hand, ready to answer to the charge against him when his case was called.

Several months ago one of the oldest of the deputy United States marshals in Kentucky walked up to the door of the county jail and asked for the jailer. He was introduced to Mr. Watts and said:

"I have three 'shiners' that I brought from Magoffin county. As we came on the train, I left my 'mittimuss' in the saddlebags, and when we came out of the coach I forgot my saddlebags. I want to know if you will let me put these prisoners in jail here without the papers? I will get 'em 'mittimuss' in a few days, and it will be all right and proper."

Jailer Watts told the man he would accommodate him, and then he said:

"But where are the prisoners?" said the jailer.

"Oh, them? Well, they're out in town across the river. Come in yonder, and I told them they might knock about the city until I arranged it with you for them to go in here. I'll go out and look them up and bring them in."

In about an hour he returned with three typical mountaineers, who said they had enjoyed looking at the sights of the city very much. They had never been in Louisville before and thought it a great treat to be able to "ride that free," even though they were as prisoners.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

MARINE SUPERSTITIONS.

The Changing Tides and the Launching of the Wick Smack.

In Orkney the ebb and flow of the tides were attributed to the breathing of a sea monster which lay underneath the confines of the world. So gigantic was he that his simple acts of expiration and inspiration took 12 hours to perform. The resemblance between this nature myth and that of the Greeks is very remarkable. North ocean-stream, which, as one idea has it, is one compass, for, by the motion of the ninth wave, the mother wave, they could, even in the thickest fog, ascertain their exact whereabouts and gain the shore in safety. The launching of a Wick smack was for years regarded as unlucky unless she was launched which follow were composed by the onlookers:

Fee rocks an soams,
An barren lan's
Keep's the fishes
Weel oot, weel in,
Wi' a' guid's aboot.

Harmful if not fatal results are believed to follow the utterance of certain words at sea. The salmon is ever a "fushie fish," and swine, minister, kirk, hare and numerous other words are accordingly interdicted. The presence of a minister in a boat is by many regarded with grave concern, and it is sometimes with the greatest difficulty that the fishermen is induced to go to sea if a minister is on board. Those who have sailed with these bold Norsemen tell us that they are very full of note of the method adopted to raise the "wun;" the mainmast is scratched energetically, and the men "whmstle" the while.—Scottish Review.

Stevenson and Love Stories.

May, 1892.—I have celebrated my holiday from romance by a plunge at the beginning of "The Young Chevalier." I am afraid my touch is a little broad in a love story. I can't mean one thing and write another. As for romance, I am no novelty any four of them. I can do a sort all right. Age makes me less afraid of a petticoat, but I was little in fear of petticoats. However, this David Balfour's love affair that's all right—might be read out to a mothers' meeting or a daughters' meeting. The hero falls in love very early, dwells at all on love is the dwelling on one string. It is manifold, I grant, but the tune is three unchanged, and the instrument, being very limited and lonely very much handled in letters, positively calls for a little pawing and grazing. With a writer of my powers of literalness and pertinency of point of view this all shows afforward grossness—positively even toward the far more damnable closeness. This has been, on all the occasions hitherto, and now I am to try, Lord! Of course Miss Dith can do it, and so could Shakespeare; but with all my romance I am a realist, and a prude, and a most fanatical lover of plain physical sensations plainly and expressly rendered; hence my perils.—Letter From Robert Louis Stevenson to Sidney Colvin, McClure's Magazine.

We Enjoy Likeness In Each Other.

What we truly enjoy in each other is likeness, not unlikeness. That is what makes the pleasure of society. There is no rest save on the common ground. If I meet a man of different tradition, different religious training, different habit of language, I am pleased with him for a moment, as I should be with a fairy or an amiable goblin, but he presently bores me when the surprise of him is over. I find that we have no common ground. Reciprocal yearning of our hearts is for intelligent response, and this can come only from what we have in common.—Henry Ward Beecher: "Equality as the Basis of Good Society," by W. D. Howells, in Century.

HOW TO PUBLISH A SONG.

If You Have a Reputation, You Get Paid. Otherwise You Stand the Expense.

"In publishing a song its success depends a great deal on the reputation of the composer and the title of his composition," said Louis Berge, the composer. "There is magic in a name, with all due apologies to Shakespeare, and even if a song amounts to nothing a reputation can go to make it a financial if not an artistic success."

"Do publishers pay for a good piece of new music?" I asked.

"Very rarely, and then only if the composer is a man or woman well known. In such cases $100 to $500 are paid for a song, and the composer gets 10 per cent of the royalties."

"Do publishers take songs by unknown writers if the latter pay for the expense of printing, etc.?"

"Certainly. That is done every day in the week. If the song is not a success, the publishers lose nothing, and the composer has had some experience for his money."

"I understand that many composers' songs cannot read a note of music. Is that so?"

"Yes," replied Mr. Berge, "some of the most popular songs ever written by men with no knowledge of composition. It is not absolutely necessary to be a musician in order to write a song. If you have talent enough to write a melody and can then write it down according to the rules of harmony, all you have to do is to go to one of the many musicians in this city who earn money by writing scores. You whistle or hum your tune to him, and he puts it in writing, ready for the publisher."

"How do you push a song in order to make it popular, if there is any popularity in it?"

"Well, before we put the song on sale we distribute nearly a thousand copies of it among singers and orchestra leaders. These people, you know, are always on the lookout for something new, and when we find the melody good and catchy, they sing or play it to their audiences. The success of the song then lies with the public."

"What is the usual publication price of a song?"

"A song with three or four sheets of music and an illuminated cover costs from $15 to $20. So you see, a composer does not really risk much if his composition is a failure, and if it proves a success, he is apt to make a fortune."—New York Herald.

Milanese Literature, 1750.

Literature was also neglected by the leisured classes of Milan. They read poetry, and they wrote it. One bard penned a sonnet on each of the hundred invocations to the litany of the Virgin Mary. Another aimed a hundred sonnets at the head of a man to whom he owed 8 shillings. A third poured forth five dozen sonnets on the peculiarities shown on the title page as being written by Sir Lullo, Sir Lallo and Sir Lello, annotated by Sir Lello and dedicated by Sir Lillo. One learned society took his meetings with a child for chairman, to whom they propounded all sorts of abstruse problems, and who was instructed to answer each question with one word.

Then those solemn triflers would choose two of their number to demonstrate that the chairman could not solve the question propounded or at least pointed straight to the right solution of it. Verse, however, was the chief business of the society, verses on births, deaths and marriages, christenings, confirmations and first communions; on a nun's taking the veil, or a nun's mother taking a new offering; on a preacher's first sermon; on a lady's pet, or a gentleman's bet, or a beauty's shifting her patches.

Even the proceedings once came forth on the death of a favorite cat, albeit the poet (to give him his due) showed himself conscious of the frivolity of this flood of rhyme he had helped to swell. One of his stanzas runs:

As Illad written
On the death of a kitten
In rhyme less facitious, if not very new
My teach you musicians,
Players, poets, physicians,
To prise at its worth the verse lavished on you.
—Macmillan's Magazine.

Moorish Customs.

Moorish customs are many of them somewhat obnoxious, particularly the fasts and festivals of the Mohammedan religion. The fast of Ramadan, which lasts a month, during which time the faithful may eat, drink, smoke or bathe between sunset and sunrise, falls more heavily upon him than on the stranger within his gates. The feast of Bairo, among other scenes of cruelty and gluttony, it is nothing uncommon to see a procession of butchers—followers of Sidi Aliaa or some other saint—tearing to pieces a lamb and devouring it raw during their progress through the streets.

Things in Tangier are celebrated after a manner peculiar and interesting. As soon as betrothal takes place the bride is confined to her room and fattened with luxurious food for fatinaceous diet. On the evening of her wedding she is conveyed to the house of the bridegroom in a box decked with gayly colored ribbons carried by six bearers, while the bride is followed in procession, some bearing candles and colored lanterns, others making night hideous with the firing of guns and the sound of tomtoms, flageolets and drums. At the door a small knot of female relatives welcome the bride to her new home, and the marriage is completed without the aid of religion.

Funerals are somewhat revolting. The corpse, wrapped in a shroud, is placed on an open bier and carried by hired mourners, usually negroes. Before and behind walk the mourners, and the procession hurries along, chanting in monotonous tones the famous creed of the Mohammedans—"Ashadu anna la ilaha ill. Allah, wa Muhammadu rasul Allah "—Good Words.

An Eye to Business.

Ex-Congressman Ben Cable of Illinois has a little daughter who has the making of a great financier in her. One day her papa found her in him.

"My dear," said he, "a man this morning offered papa this room full of gold if he would sell little brother. Now, that means gold enough to fill this room from wall to wall and from floor to ceiling. If I sell little brother for that sum, I shall be able to buy you everything in the world you want. Shall I sell little brother?"

"No, papa," answered the little girl promptly, and then before her delighted father could embrace her for expressing so much unselfish affection, she went on: "Keep him till he's bigger. He'll be worth more then."—Washington Post.

STEPHEN A. KROM REPLIES.

HE ANSWERS ARGUMENTS AGAINST THE INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION CUP.

He Discusses From the Point of a Church Member and Not as a Scientist—Says Dr. Johnstone Misunderstands.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:

As a church member, and not as a scientist I should like to make a few criticisms on the Rev. J. Johnstone's article published in your issue of the 10th inst.

His views seem to me to be a most curious psychological phenomenon, and a remarkable instance of superstitious survival. If I were more of a philosophical psychologist I should take great pleasure in analyzing them in detail. However, I will call attention on one or two points in his discourse.

In the first place Dr. Johnstone mistakes the issue at stake. He seems to think that it is as follows: How can we best deceive ourselves in regard to the existence of the pathogenic microbe; in other words, how far in the sand, after the manner of the ostrich will we have to stick our heads in order to avoid using the above mentioned organism so that we may eat and drink in the bliss of ignorance? The real issue is as follows: How can we best realize that such an organism as the pathogenic microbe really does exist, in order that we may receive an incentive to study methods of protection and extermination, so that we may eat and drink with the comfort that only comes from a true knowledge of the condition of things?

As a humble seeker after scientific truth, Dr. Johnson requests us to explain the higher average of life of the English clergy who run more chances of becoming rejected than the laymen do.

I take great pleasure in enlightening Dr. Johnson upon this worthy problem.

As Dr. Johnstone says, it is well known that the English priests possess stronger constitutions than do the laymen of the church, and that generally their health is better. That is due to the fact that they live very much easier lives than the average laymen do. They are not troubled by the thousand and one little worries which business and other like pursuits are beset with, and which are so disasterous to the nervous system. It is claimed by neurologists that literary pursuits coupled with exercise produce the best health, and thus increase the span of life, so we would expect to find such a class of men as the English clergy to be of a more rugged nature than the rest of the community.

It is well known that a healthy constitution is the best safeguard against the intrusion of the pathogenic microbe. In many cases when the priesthood has been running in the family for a long time, this natural safeguard would be greatly strengthened by heridity which always gathers force as it moves along.

Thus according to the germ theory of disease itself, these men should have a higher average of life than the rest of their fellowmen. But these English priests do not run any more chances of becoming infected than do the laymen. For instance, the consumptive or other infected person may occupy a pew right from part of the church; in such a case it is likely that the germs of tuberculosis, which have been dropped into the cup, will be all imbibed by the laymen long before the cup gets to the priest. It is not at all probable that the persons or person who are infected will be the ones to drink just before the cup goes to the lips of the priest. We find the following in the Common Prayer Book of the Episcopal church:

"And if any of the consecrated bread and wine remain after the communion, it shall not be carried out of the church, but the minister and other communicants, shall, immediately after the blessing, reverently eat and drink the same."

Thus we see that if there is too much bread and wine left for the priest to eat alone, and it must happen so quite often, he may call on some of the layman to help him. In all the above cases, we see that they share and share alike in any infection that may take place.

As I understand it I have answered the question Dr. Johnstone so kindly raises. A great deal more can be said on this subject, so that if Dr. Johnstone would like to pursue this line of inquiry still further, I would be most happy to discuss the whole matter of susceptibility and immunity.

A MOTHER GOOSE MARKET.

The Old Woman of Nursery Rhyme Acted Out by People in Real Life—Topped Off with a Musical and Literary Dessert.

"Victuals and drink were the chief of her diet."

was the rather suggestive sign at the entrance to the refreshment room at Mother Goose Market, held in the parlors of the Seventh Day Baptist church yesterday afternoon and evening. And the dainty little menus told of the delicacies which the "old woman," of Mother Goose's melodies, had for those that attended her market.

The affair was a novel one, but it proved very successful. The main room was reserved for the visitors, while the alcoves, which are partitioned off from each other by portieres, were artistically arranged as booths. The first one to the right of the front entrance was under the charge of two "Queen of Hearts," Mrs. W. M. Stillman and Mrs. Bessie Titsworth, and here candies and the wonderful "tarts" were sold. The booth was pleasingly decorated with red hangings while a large paste board heart hung over the entrance. The "Queens" were gowned in white, trimmed with numerous red hearts while each wore a crown and other signs of royalty. Numerous strings of cob-webs decorated the booth, as the "Old Woman that Sweeps the Sky," where Mrs. F. A. Dunham, in appropriate costume, sold brooms, baskets and the like.

"Cinderella" was in large letters above the next booth, but the fairy god mother did not seem to have arrived yet for kitchen utensils were the chief article of sale. Miss Lucy Dunham and Miss Mineola Tomlinson occupied this booth.

Yellow hangings and immense yellow chrysanthemums blended very prettily at the flower booth of "Mistress Mary," but her contrariness seemed to have vanished from the way her many costumers were treated. Mrs. A. L. Titsworth was in charge at this booth.

"Nancy Etticote" was the name on the next booth and here Mrs. Charles Dunham, sold candies and fancy articles. And last, but by no means least, came 'Simple Simon's" fishing pond. Here, standing on a high chair, was Simple Simon himself, fishing for what he could catch over the top of a screen and Miss Ruth Hoag of his luck to the amused watchers. His costume caused roars of laughter wherever he appeared, old dirty white flannel pants and a brown dilapidated coat, while perched on the back of a head of hair fit for a foot ball game was an old brown soft hat. But the greatest part of his make up was a set of large false teeth which gave him the silliest expression imaginable as he smirked and ogled at his costomers. Dr. Frank Clawson filled the part and kept everyone in a roars of laughter over his performances.

The refreshment department was under the charge of Mrs. D. E. Titsworth. Mrs. Frank Clawson and Mrs. J. G. Miller presided at the tables. The waitresses were the Misses Mabel Maxson, Lena Tomlinson, Lizzie Allis, Ida Spicer, Louise Lewis, Ruth Maxson and Edith Titsworth. Mrs. J. W. Van Sickle was chairman of the entire affair, and in the character of "Mother Goose," presided over the cashier's table on which was placed a large stuffed goose, "the goose that laid the golden egg," and one of the eggs was there also.

The programme consisted of several selections from "Mother Goose" by a chorus in costume, and some of the characters were certainly worth seeing.

Miss Grace Lewis was "Mother Goose" with long-pointed hat and gown after the fashion of the illustrations of that personage.

One of the best was Miss Maud Mosher who represented the "Old Woman That Went to Market Her Eggs for to Sell." Her old fashioned bonnet and gown, with plaid shawl, satchel and cotton umbrella, made the character a splendid one, while the green spectacles which she looked over made the costume complete. The part of 'Bo Peep" was taken by Miss Ernestine Smith, who made a very good shepherdess. Miss Eliza beth Allis was a charming "Mistress Mary" and wore her "silver bells and cockle shells" all over her gay costume. The "Queen of Hearts," as represented by Miss Bessie Titsworth, was indeed charming. "Simple Simon" was in the chorus as was also his friend the "Pie Man," Sydney R. Titsworth, who made a fit companion in his white apron, large white cuffs and tall grey hat perched on the back of his head. "Little Boy Blue's" horn was tooted by Nathan Lewis whose blue bloomer costume made an amusing object. Arthur J. Spicer looked very youthful in the costume of "Little Jack Horner."

Besides the chorus singing, there was a lullaby by Miss Allis and Miss Mosher, with violin obligato by Arthur Mosher. Miss Maxson acted as accompanist.

There was a large attendance and everybody thoroughly enjoyed the novel entertainment, which reflected much credit on those in charge.

MORE CHANGES SUGGESTED.

THE BOARD OF TRADE DISCUSS THE PLUMBERS ORDINANCE.

Recommended That Plumbers Not Only Register, But Also Furnish Bonds for $500.—They Want the Fee Eliminated.

A meeting of the Board of Trade was held last evening in their rooms. The attendance was rather slim. The meeting was called to order by President Elias R. Pope, and A. J. Gavett was appointed secretary in the absence of that officer.

After waiting some time to allow the interested parties to arrive, the committee to recommend changes in the plumbing ordinance, made its report through its chairman, A. J. Gavett.

The first change was an addition to section one of the plumbing ordinance providing that every plumber, when beginning work, should give a bond of $500 besides registering.

A motion made by J. B. Coward was carried, recommending that the registration fee of $3 be omitted.

According to the ordinance no privy, vault or cesspool can be constructed in the city without permission from the Board of Health; the committee suggested that after the word "cesspool" should be inserted 'in the area bounded by Berckman street, Webster place, Watchung avenue Ninth street, Plainfield avenue and Green brook."

In the next section the committee recommended that tunneling be allowed with the permission of the board, but that iron pipe must be used. There were several other minor changes also suggested.

The committee thought that the wording in section seven and eleven should be changed to make the meaning plainer. In the last named section Architect Charles H. Smith suggested that the vertical soil and waste pipes be increased two inches through and above the roof, instead of in no case being under four inches in diameter.

The Board recommended the change. The committee also added to this section the recommendation that after the main pipe must have another ventilating pipe. The committee was of the opinion that it was not necessary that every trap should have a special vent pipe, but that every trap that is liable to syphonage, should be of a kind that cannot have its seal broken by syphonage.

Section twenty-one was amended to confirm with section eleven.

Section twenty-five, which provides that water-closets must never be placed in an unventilated room or compartment, and that in every case the room must be open to the outer air or ventilated by means of an air-shaft, and that water-closets will not be permitted in cellars, except under special permit, caused considerable discussion. It was the opinion of those present that this section was needless, as it is the duty of the Board of Health to see that all plumbing work be done in a proper manner. It was recommended that this section be stricken out.

The wording of several of the other sections were changed, but the sense remained materially the same.

The committee was then authorized to make the corrections to the ordinance and transmit it to the Board of Health, as the suggestion of the Board of Trade.

FASTER SPEED, GREATER SAFETY.

Great Improvements by the Central Railroad at Elizabeth.

The enterprising and up-to date management of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, have about completed the improvements of their road bed just east of the passenger station at Elizabeth, upon which they have been at work for several months past.

This important and costly improvement consists in raising the grade of all their tracks for nearly a mile, to a height sufficient to cross over all the streets, five of which are spanned by plate girder bridges with a pavement passing beneath, which is the full width of the street. One street has been closed to team travel and the subway provided for foot travel. From Lorraine station to East Twenty first street, Bayonne, a distance of nearly seven miles there is but one grade crossing left, which is at Elizabethport, and that is one which is seldom used. This work included raising the grade of all the tracks in the freight yard, together with the platforms and the large brick freight house, which was done without interfering with the regular work in the yards and offices.

As a result of this improvement the citizens of Elizabeth will be free to cross the line of tracks without danger, and the railroad company will gain increased safety and speed.

The street railway extension is on the home stretch again. There is hope that it won't run afoul of anything.

A MOUNTAIN HOTEL

Vail and French Are Building One On Johnston's Drive.

A summer hotel is now in process of erection on Johnston's drive. It is located just above the turn in the road on the summit of the mountain and commands a very fine view. The foundations and first floor timbers have now been laid and it will be completed by spring. The hotel is a prettily designed structure with tower and large piazzas. There will be but forty bed rooms, besides spacious parlors and dining rooms.

J. T. Vail and John H. French are the owners of the new hotel and expect to open it next summer. Who will take charge is not yet decided.

It seems to be a part of the tribulations of the bachelor or widower politician—that is, a big one—to hear at frequent intervals that he ought to choose a better half. It must be annoying because lovers and politics don't mix with any degree of success. General Harrison is now undergoing the experience.

Next to The Daily Press itself there is no more welcome visitor into the homes and business places of Plainfield than The Daily Press calendar, which is distributed annually throughout the city during the latter part of the holidays. The calendar for the year 1896 will be the prettiest and most artistic and appropriate that has ever been presented to Daily Press readers.

STARTED RIGHT THIS TIME.

THE STREET RAILWAY ORDINANCE PROPERLY AMENDED.

The Suggestions of Mayor Gilbert Complied With and the Ordinance Will be Enacted as Soon as Possible.

With the temperature of the chamber of the City Council at 60 the city fathers were unable to transact the business on hand with any degree of comfort, last evening.

Councilmen Erickson, Dumont, Frost, Ginna, Bird and Moore, were present when President See called the meeting to order, and Councilman Fisk came in later.

After the previous minutes were read and approved, the regular order of business was suspended on Mr. Fisk's motion for the purpose of considering the street railway matter. There was no one present to offer any objections, and the clerk read the application of the Street Railway Company asking for a franchise.

Mr. Fisk then moved that section 2 be stricken out, which is from Watchung avenue to East Third street, from East Third street to Richmond street, from Richmond street to North avenue, and from North avenue to the city line at Fanwood. It was so ordered.

He then introduced the new ordinance, which was placed on first and second readings and ordered engrossed and duly advertised.

The customary batch of election bills were then presented, and after being audited were ordered paid.

A communication from Chief T. O. Doane, of the Board of Engineers, recommended that Albert Wilson be suspended from Engine Co., No. 2, for non-payment of dues. It was so ordered.

Mr. Dumont offered a resolution which was adopted, that $1,000 be borrowed in anticipation of taxes for the general fund.

Mr. Fisk then gave notice requesting that President See call a special meeting for Monday evening, December 30th, for the purpose of acting on the street railway ordinance. A resolution was offered by Mr. Frost that the Sewer Committee be authorized to give notice to property owners not to connect with the sewer mains until the former was prepared to have them do so. The resolution was adopted as was also another one by Mr. Frost, authorizing the same committee to secure necessary surveys and maps for the use of the city in connection with making assessments on property owners. The same not to exceed $500 in cost.

Mr. Moore then called up the ordinance to license inns and taverns, and on his motion had it placed on second reading. Mr. Fisk then moved that it be engrossed and advertised, which was so ordered.

Mr. Fisk then moved that when the council adjourned it be to meet on Monday evening, December 30th. Council then adjourned.

DESERVED BETTER PATRONAGE.

Excellent Musical Programme for the German Lutheran Church.

An excellent programme at the concert for the benefit of the German Lutheran church, held at Y. M. C. A. hall last evening, was greatly enjoyed by those that attended and the entertainment was of a kind that deserved more patronage than it received. There was a fair attendance. The numbers were all well rendered, especially the contralto solos of Miss Annie Hardenburgh. Miss Mary A. Luckey in her recitation, "Drunkard's Story," deserved the hearty applause that she received. The baritone solo of H. J. Martin was also greatly enjoyed, as was the quartette. The instrumental pieces were all of the highest class and the listeners showed their appreciation of them by their long and hearty applause.

Those taking part in the concert were: The Zampa Orchestra, of New York, Miss Annie P. Hardenbergh, Mrs. D. E. Titsworth, Miss Randolph, D. E. Titsworth, Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Korff, William Fox, Horace J. Martin and Miss Mary A. Lukkey.

A Rooster's Big Liver.

Edgar S. Brokaw's son who lives in Westfield, purchased a rooster last Saturday for his Sunday dinner. The fowl weighed five pounds dressed, and when he was opened an unusually large liver was discovered.

Mr. Brokaw being curious to know the weight took it to a butcher shop and learned that it balanced the scales at 13½ ounces. It is now on exhibition in Westfield.

Addressed the Students.

Rev. S. P. Simpson, of Watchung avenue, has been spending a week at St. Steven's College, Annandale, Pa., as the guest of Rev. Dr. Malcomb, professor of history and Greek. Rev. Mr. Simpson visited the recitation rooms and made an address to the students. On last Thursday evening Dr. Malcomb gave a tea in honor of his guest which was attended by the entire faculty of the college and a very pleasant evening was spent.

TAMPERED WITH WINDOWS.

A Netherwood Woman Frightened by a Night Prowler.

A few nights ago Mrs. Edward Willis, of Netherwood, had an exciting experience that frightened her considerably. Her husband was called away from the house a short distance, leaving her alone. He told her if anything happened she could call him by shooting his revolver off. Mr Willis had not been absent very long when she heard someone trying the doors and windows in an attempt to enter the house.

After repeated efforts and a failure to effect an entrance the person went away, but Mrs. Willis was frightened so that she could not use the revolver. When her husband returned she related her experience. He took a lantern and started a search about the house and barn. When he reached the latter he found a big, burly negro inside, about half asleep. He brought the man to his senses and asked him what he was doing there. He replied by saying that he couldn't get in the house, so he did the next best thing. Mr. Willis gave the man something to remember him by, and it's safe to say he will not return.

ELEMENTS OF SUCCESS.

Some of the Qualities Necessary for a Successful Business Career.

The students of the Plainfield Business College were favored last evening with a very instructive lecture delivered in the auditorium in the Babcock building by Rev. Joseph B. Graff, of Philadelphia. He has been the appointed lecturer on Business Ethics before the Spencerian College for several years. His subject was, "The Elements of Success." It was full of good suggestions and sound advice, interspersed with pleasing anecdotes and pertinent illustrations. A summary, giving the positive elements of success, is as follows:

A sound mind in a sound body; Wise and early choice of a trade or profesion; Adaptation to the trade or profession chosen; A thorough knowledge of one's trade or business pursuit; Energy in the chosen vocation; Mastering of all the details of one's business; Downright, upright hard work; Ability to see and seize opportunities; Integrity of character and conduct; Decision of purpose; Systematic methods of work: A proper valuation of time and money.

WILL COOL OFF IN ELIZABETH.

Two Sewer Bed Employes Take a Vacation in the County Jail.

A simple drunk, who gave his name as Patrick Cooney, an employe at the sewer beds, was arrested on Park avenue last evening by Officer Cooney and spent the night in jail. This morning in the city court he chose ten days free board in preference to paying three dollars.

William Hussey was arrested by Sergeant Reed and Officer Fredericksen at the sewer beds yesterday afternoon. He had received his pay yesterday, squandered most of it on drink and came back in an ugly humor. He wanted to fight the foreman and struck one of them when the blue coats of the officers appeared on the scene and he was left in jail over night to cool down. This morning Judge Coddington gave him his choice between a fine of $5 or spending twenty days in jail. His exchequer was too low to stand the fine and he was committed to the Elizabeth jail.

Badge Banners to be Awarded.

The principal local event in Christian Endeavor circles this week will be the semi annual conference of the Union County Christian Endeavor Union, which will be held on Friday evening at the First Presbyterian church at Roselle. All the societies in the county have been invited, and the badge banners will be awarded to the society having the largest percentage of membership in attendance.

The themes for discussions and addresses are in anticipation of the special evangelistic efforts to be made in the county during the winter. There will be a short praise service to begin the conference, and an open parliament with the Prayer Meeting. Our Meeting is in But; How Shall We Get it Out?" The speaker for the evening will be Rev. Ford C. Guttman, of Newark, and his topic will be "Evangelistic Meetings; How to Conduct Them." A purpose service will close the conference.

Ran Over a Hoop.

A number of small boys have been spending their afternoons in coasting down the hill in the rear of the freight house on their wheels. Wednesday one of them ran over an iron hoop and was thrown from his wheel, injuring his kneecap. A hack from Hedden's stable took the lad to his home on East Fifth street.

A Fine Painting.

A handsome oil painting by Frank Keck, one of the leading artists of Trenton, is now on exhibition in Garret Q. Parker's window. It is a rural scene and includes several sheep and cattle.

ABOUT BOROUGH ANNEXATION

INTERVIEWS FROM THE UNION AND SOMERSET ASSEMBLYMEN.

Assemblyman-elect W. H.Codington is Personally in Favor of the Scheme, but Would Do As His Constituents Desired.

The question of the union of the borough of North Plainfield and the city of Plainfield has been under discussion for some time and a bill is to be drawn up and presented to the next session of the New Jersey Legislature providing for the union.

A Daily Press reporter interviewed Assemblyman-elect W. R. Codington yesterday afternoon regarding his course of action should the question come up before the Legislature. When asked if he favored the union, he said:

'If the question should come up, my personal feeling in the matter would not be considered, but I should act largely in the feeling of a majority of the people throughout Union county. Personally, I am in favor of it."

"Do you think that the people of Union county want the union?" asked the reporter.

"I should think they would favor it," was the reply.

When asked what the sentiment was in North Plainfield, he said:

"I understand that there are a great many that want it in North Plainfield, but in Somerset county, outside of the borough, I think it will be opposed, as they wish to keep North Plainfield in the county."

When a Daily Press reporter saw Mr. Reed this noon, and the Assemblyman-elect said that if Plainfield should be added to Somerset county, he would favor the annexation of the borough, otherwise, he did not think that he should. He didn't care to make any definite statements regarding the union, however, as he said that such matters needed long and careful deliberation, and he did not care to be quoted regarding that subject at present.

PHILOSOPHER IN THE ROOKERY.

He Wouldn't Do Anything to Deprive Chief Grant of Bread.

The display of quilts in front of Van Emburg & Son's store in the Babcock building proved too tempting to James McGinnis yesterday afternoon, when the over indulgence in strong drink began to have its effects, and he started to arrange a bed for himself. Officer Saunders happened along and disturbed the would be sleeper's meditations by marching him to the lockup. McGinnis had begun to boil and he objected. His language was much stronger than he was, however. As his wandering steps were directed toward the jail he sadly remarked:

"I was a prominent member of the fourteenth ward in Brooklyn once, but I a disgrace to the ward now," and he smiled sorrowfully on the officer.

When Chief of Police Grant visited the lock up last evening, the ex-policeman begged for a drink of rum. The Chief replied that he could not grant his request, that he would loose his place if he did, and then the fourteenth ward man mournfully remarked.

"I don't want you to do that, I don't want to take the bread out of anybody's mouth. I would rather suffer," and he relapsed into silence.

This morning he appeared before Judge Codding at the city court. He understood his position and pleaded guilty. Then he was just helping to build up the town by putting money in circulation. The Judge suggested a fine of $3 or ten days in the county jail, and the ex-New Yorker thought that the ten days would do him the most good. This morning Chief Grant took him to Elizabeth. He had been working on the sewer beds.

TEN YEARS OLD.

Congregational Christian Endeavor Society Soon to Celebrate Its Anniversary.

The Christian Endeavorers of the Congregational church will soon celebrate their tenth annivery. The birthday of the society is Friday, December 28th, and on that evening the anniversary exercises will be held. A religious meeting will be held at eight o'clock and Rev. J. Clement French, D. D., of Newark, State President of the Christian Endeavor Society, will deliver an address. Rev. C. L. Goodrich will give a historic sketch of the society. There will also be special music, both vocal and instrumental. A sociable will follow this service, at which a programme will be given and refreshments served. The exercises promise to be very enjoyable.

A Point of Interest.

One of the most interesting places to visit these days is White's store. Every corner and counter in the store is filled with just the sort of Christmas presents that you want, and it is surprising the little money it takes to buy them. Two of the most attractive counters in the store are the ones that are filled with fine cups and saucers. vases, boa bon dishes, etc. There is always a crowd of eager buyers there. The toy department you will find as equally interesting.

A CRAYON PORTRAIT.

IT RECALLED TO ELIZABETH CADY STANTON HER GIRLHOOD.

Reminiscences of a Child Not Like Other Children, Who Grew Into a Woman Not Like Other Women—Stories of Her Early Impressions and Aspirations.

I presented myself at the door of Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton's home on Sixty-first street. I was met by the statement, made with an air of sympathy and regret by the housekeeper, that Mrs. Stanton would see no visitors, as she was "writing a piece." But I sent up my card with a request for an appointment. That was answered directly to say that his mistress would receive me at once. I was ushered into a room full of suggestions of the pursuits and tastes of the woman who occupied it—books, pictures, a piano, newspapers, periodicals, a large desk with neat piles of manuscript and files of correspondence and a small writing table with the pretty appointments and trifles which belong to one's social letter writing.

I had hardly settled myself when a maid entered with a large crayon portrait of a young girl, which Mrs. Stanton directed her to place in a good light before the visitor.

"What do you think of it?" was the question after a moment's pause.

"It is a charming face—brimful of character and of a beautiful spirit and courage. I also discover a strong family likeness."

"That is not strange," replied my hostess, evidently much amused, "for it is my own portrait at the age of 20. You can trace all the features, but the short, curly hair was brown then, though the same as now I had a number of gray hairs.

"I was married at 24. During our engagement my fiance wrote begging me for a lock of hair, when one of my girl friends, in a moment of thoughtless, pulled out of my head enough white hairs to form a very respectable little curl, which I tied up with a blue ribbon and sent to my sweetheart."

She was silent a moment, and a little slow smile crept over her countenance, as she gazed at the youthful face in the picture. Then she said softly:

"I love to look at that girl—I like to study her and to think how she has fulfilled her destiny.

"Had she any distinct idea then of what her career would be?"

"Yes. She had resolved upon that long years before. I was only a little child when my attention was drawn to those conditions of women which I have spent my life seeking to improve. It happened in this way:

"My father was a lawyer, Judge Cady, and had a great many young men in his office who came to him as students. They used to sit at their books in a large room adjoining the office and library. I was a child of 8 or 9 years, brimful of mischief, life and activity, and I was more interested in them myself than they readily followed my lead. Often when our noise and fun and pranks became unbearable to the students, my mother restored peace by banishing the ringleader to the office. There I always became perfectly quiet, but it was because I found much food for reflection in what I heard. It gradually dawned upon me that of all the clients who came there the women alone got no comfort. When they took down the law books and read from them what related to each particular case, the women went away sorrowful. My evident distress at the plights of these sorrowful ones entertained those students, and they let me pore over the laws myself, thinking it one of the funniest of jokes to see a child so completely occupied. I was taking it all much more seriously than any one imagined."

"By and by, on my birthday, and my father gave me a set of corals—necklace, bracelets and earrings. I was enchanted, and that day I loved those corals better than anything in the world. Of course I rushed to show them to my student friends, among whom was a young man from Delaware, named Bayard, an uncle of Mr. Thomas Bayard. I was always inclined to tease me and discerned an opportunity on this occasion. So he said, 'If you were my wife, those would belong to me.'

"'What!' I gasped.

"'Yes, they would be mine. You could not wear them, for you would be my wife, and I could take them from you altogether and give them to some one else if I chose.'

"This nearly finished me. But one straw more remained to be added. There was an old Scotchwoman, Flora Campbell, who used to come to our house every Saturday to bring chickens, butter, lard, maple sugar and herbs. We children were all very fond of Flora. She had been in service with my mother when she was a superior woman. Her husband had died, leaving all he possessed to his son. Then the son's wife came into Flora's house and treated her so badly that she was to retire. This story came to my ears, and I resolved to act.

"On the next Saturday I followed Flora to the gate and bade her be of good cheer, as those wicked laws were about to be abolished and she would soon be able to enter upon a life of peace and plenty. The plan I unfolded to her was to avail myself of the absence of the family at church the next morning, to go to the library and obtain from the law books every line of those dreadful laws against women. I assured Flora that I could do this in a very short time, and I proposed to take my pen and every volume was consumed it would not make the slightest difference in the property of anybody beyond the loss to himself. The only way to remedy unsatisfactory laws was to go before the legislature and get new ones passed to replace them. That, I said, I would do! I cried.

"I was only 10 years old, but from that moment I never forgot my purpose—never abandoned it for an instant until it was carried out. When I was before the legislature with the woman's property bill, women I had known well before crossed the street to avoid meeting me. I suppose their sense of propriety was outraged. They cried out that it was preposterous not to trust their property rights in the hands of their husbands, and I met no hesitate to intrust themselves. A pretty argument! But I lived to see that a good many of those same women afterward owed all their comfort and prosperity to the efforts which they had reviled."—New York Sun.

HUXLEY AS A LECTURER.

The Scientist Was Nervous and Ineffective Fearful of a Breakdown.

It is very singular that, although, as admitted by all who heard him, he was one of the clearest and most eloquent of scientific lecturers of his time, he always disliked lecturing, and the nervousness from which he suffered in his early days was never entirely overcome, however little apparent it might be to his audience.

After his first public lecture as the Royal Institution, he received an anonymous letter telling him he had better not try anything of the kind again, as whatever he was fit for it was certainly not giving lectures. Instead of being discouraged he characteristically set to work to mend whatever faults he had of style and manner, with what success is well known. Nevertheless, the return of the awful feeling of alarm which always came over him on entering the door of the lecture room of the Royal Institution or even the College of Surgeons, where the subject was most familiar and the audience entirely sympathetic.

He had a feeling that he must break down before the lecture was over, and it was only by recalling to his memory the number of times he had lectured without breaking down that he was able to stand and deliver. Then, by reasoning and then drawing conclusions as to the improbability of its occurring now that he was able to brace himself up to the effort of beginning. He never was cured of his nervousness before any audience, however large, or even of his dislike of lecturing,

COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.,

From Muhlenberg Hospital, as follows:

Plainfield, Nov. 27th, 1895.

J. Frank Hubbard, Esq., Director of the Board of Freeholders:

Dear Sir—On behalf of the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital, I tender their heartiest thanks to the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union County, for their very generous and timely donation of $1,250 to the general fund of the Institution.

(Signed.)

Very respectfully,

Wm. R. Cook,

Secretary.

No objection being offered, the communication was received and placed on file.

From Louis Quien, C. E. as follows:

To the Honorable, the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union, N. J.:

Gentlemen:—The undersigned respectfully reports to your honorable body, that the contract for regulating the grading and paving of Morris Avenue from Hobart's Gap to the Passaic River, has been completed in accordance with the terms of the said contract, and has been kept in good repair for the term of one year from the time of the completion of said contract, and that the said contractors, Messrs. Hillpot & Ayers are now entitled to the sum of one thousand six hundred and forty-four dollars and fifty-eight cents ($1,644.58), being the ten per cent retained for the term of one year.

(Signed.)

Respectfully submitted,

Louis Quien, C. E.

On motion of Freeholder Halliday received and placed on file.

Freeholder Roll on behalf of the County Road Committee, reported verbally in the matter of sewer pipes, in front of Howard property on St. George's avenue, at Rahway, that after due investigation, it had been decided by all the parties interested, that the county had no jurisdiction in the matter.

On motion of Freeholder Miller, the report was received and accepted.

From James W. Fink, County Road Inspector:

Westfield, N. J., Dec. 5th, 1895.

To the Honorable, the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union County, N. J.:

Gentlemen—The undersigned would respectfully submit the following final report of work of repairing county roads for the year 18 6:

On St. George's avenue 7,461 lineal feet of road has been repaired, 13,638 feet of ruts have been filled and 15,538 feet of gutters have been cleaned.

The "Clyde Line" Between New York and Jacksonville, Florida. Without Change.

Has excellent accommodations for the poor as well as the rich, each of their steamers having superior first-class, intermediate and steerage accommodations. The "Clyde Line" service is par excellence, their steamers being built of steel, and are large, new and speedy. Rates about forty per cent. lower than all rail. Write "Clyde Line," New York, for descriptive matter, mailed free.

Suing the Soldiers.

A suit to recover $250 has been brought in the District Court, Elizabeth against Colonel Benjamin A. Lee and other officers of the 3d New Jersey Regiment. The suit is brought by Louis Newbane, a caterer, of Elizabeth, who alleges that he was engaged to furnish dinner by the regiment on the occasion of its recent field day, on October 30, at a price of $300. The caterer was paid $50 on account, but nothing since, as the Committee of Arrangements say the dinner was not what it ought to have been.

A Coming Marriage.

Mr. and Mrs. John G. Buckley, of Newburgh, N. Y., have issued invitations for the marriage of their daughter, Miss Rachael Buckley, to Harry Ellis Green, of this city. The ceremony will take place Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 1st, at two o'clock, at the home of the bride's parents, 52 Chambers street, Newburgh. Mr. and Mrs. Green will reside on Manning avenue, North Plainfield.

Cyclers Collided.

While Charles Conover, of Elmwood place, was riding his wheel on West Second street, near Liberty, Saturday evening, he collided with a cyclist going in the opposite direction. The unknown rider sustained several bruises and had a small quantity of flesh scraped from his leg. Mr. Conover escaped without injury, and the wheels were not damaged.

Methodists to Meet.

The quarterly conference of the First M. E. church will be held Wednesday evening after prayer meeting. Rev. C. S. Ryman, presiding elder of the Newark Conference, is expected to be present.

LOCAL SPORTSMEN TO MEET.

They Will Propose Steps for the Preservation of Game.

A meeting of local sportsmen is soon to be held in this city in the interest of true sport. The present game laws, the scarcity of game, and the hordes of irresponsible shooters from the large cities who tramp all over the State, suggest the necessity of some immediate steps. The men who are arranging for the meeting favor either the stopping of shooting altogether or a tax upon every gun used for hunting. The latter plan seems practicable and is much in favor as the funds so raised will be sufficient to restock the State. With such a law passed and the game laws modified it would amply repay the gunners in the good shooting that would result. It would also stop the numerous irresponsible city gunners in their unmerciful slaughter and would, in a measure, stop the use of the small calibre rifles in the hands of careless lads.

A Splendid Sermon.

Rev. Dr. Yerkes, of the First Baptist church, preached a very interesting sermon yesterday morning, contrasting Christianity with Mohammedanism. He showed that the characters of the founders, Christ and Mahomet, were not more different than the spirit of the two religions as illustrated by their doctrines and fruits. He paid a tribute to the moral influence of Admiral Farragut and the power of American war ships when he quoted the reason given by the Grand Vizier when asked why he allowed the establishment of Robert College at Constantinople. The Grand Vizier's reply was simply two words, "Farragut! Monitor!"

The Rev. D. Dewolf, of Newark, corresponding secretary of the New Jersey Baptist convention and superintendent of missions, occupied the pulpit in the First Baptist church for a brief time yesterday morning, presenting a claim of the State committee.

Blind Boy to Sing and Speak.

Percy Cannon, the blind boy, will speak and sing, and play upon the autoharp at the meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society of Trinity Reformed church tonight at 8 o'clock. An offering will be taken and presented to him at the close of the meeting. Everybody welcome.

A Party on Skates.

Archibald Butler and Alvah Davis are getting up a skating party among the young people of this city and the borough for Saturday evening, if the weather permits. They will go to Westfield or New Market, whichever pond is in the best condition.

A Place for Holiday Shoppers.

Of all the big dry goods houses in New York, there is none better known in Plainfield than the firm of O'Neills. While their patronage from Plainfielders is very large it is their desire to still increase it. and it is this fact that prompted them to insert the big advertisement on the fourth page of today's Press, knowing the superior value of The Press as an advertising medium in Plainfield and this section. Their store in New York is an emporium for every thing that can be desired in the holiday line and it is the wide variety and the low prices which abound there that has made them the leading department store in New York.

Scribner's for Christmas

Frank R. Stockton has a Christmas love story which bears a characteristic title—"The Staying Power of Sir Rohan." Its illustrations are quaint and exactly suitable. A thrilling detective story by C. E. Carryll entitled "The River Syndicate," perhaps equalling Sherlock Holmes best work. Illustrated.

Joel Chandler Harris' characteristic tale of a faithful slave—"The Colonel's Nigger-Dog." Other Christmas stories are, "A White Blot," by Henry VanDyke, a poetic and imaginative tale of a picture illustrated; "Decline of Landers," by A. S. Pier (illustrated), and "Hopper's Old Man," by R. C. V. Meyers.

Sentimental Tommy,
By J. M. Barrie.

Those who have read (and who has not?) "The Little Minister" and "A Window in Thrums" can anticipate what Mr. Barrie's "Sentimental Tommy" will be. It is to be the chief serial in Scribner's for 1896, beginning in the January number.

Two Years for $4.50.

Scribner's Magazine costs $3 a year, but new subscribers can have all the numbers for 1895 and a year's subscription for 18 6 for $4.50.

Scribner's Magazine is going to be better next year ever. It is going to have new features. Its publishers are not satisfied with past successes. It purposes to more thoroughly deserve the confidence of the reading public. The History Serial—"Last Quarter Century in the United States"—will be continued. Just now it is approaching a period of absorbing interest to the present generation—the first administration of President Cleveland.

Scribner's Magazine ought to get careful consideration as a Christmas gift. The $4.50 offer ought to get double circulation.

Tramps Supposed to Have Started a Disastrous Fire in a Barn.

The large barn, belonging to J. H. Havens on Plainfield avenue just beyond the city line, was burned to the ground last Monday. Shortly after ten o'clock, Officer Totten, who was stationed at the corner of West Sixth and Liberty streets, saw a bright light in that direction. After making sure that it was a fire, he sent in an alarm from box 37. The fire department responded promptly, only to find that the nearest water was half a mile away. No attempt was made to extinguish the flames, but all their efforts were directed in saving the house, as the wind was blowing the sparks in that direction The extinguishers were used and a bucket brigade was formed.

The barn, worth about $800 to $1 000, was utterly destroyed, as was the contents of about $2. 000 worth of carriages and farming utensils. There was no live stock in the barn The paint on the house was badly blistered, but the building was saved. Mr. Havens and family are spending the winter in New York and Ed. Barry and wife are taking care of the house. Barry was down town when the fire occurred. The fire is supposed to have been started by tramps.

Officers Chosen.

At the regular meeting of Mizpah Lodge, No. 1, I. O. L., Monday two candidates were elected and one proposition received, and the following officers were elected for the ensuing term: P. L., Mrs. Mattis; N. L., vice L., Mrs W. R. Mattox; chaplain, Mrs. A Corwin; recording secretary, Mrs. L. Snyder; L. reporter, Mrs. D. Page; financial secretary, Mrs. E. Demarest; treasurer, Mrs. Brokaw; senior warden, Mrs. A. Randolph; junior warden, Mrs. M. Sweeney; conductor, Mrs. H. Angleman; guardian, Mrs. M. G Terry; senior representative to governing lodge, Mrs. R. Radin; junior representative to governing lodge, Mrs. E. Cox. The installation of officers will take place on the evening of January 13th, 1896.

A Good Glee Club.

The Fitchburg Sentinel of November 30th says of the Brown Glee Club concert given in that city: "A good-sized audience greeted the college boys, Friday evening at Y. M. C. A. Hall, and came away delighted with the concert. Without question they are to be ranked among the best of the glee clubs. The work of the mandolin club was especially fine, the addition of a flute and violin rendering it better than usual." The club appears under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. in Association Hall next Saturday evening.

Young Men's Association Elect.

The Young Men's Association of Monroe Avenue chapel met last Friday evening and elected officers for the ensuing year. They were as follows: President, Blanchard Randolph; vice-president, Mr. Arthur; secretary, Henry Apgar; treasurer, Adam Neuman. The rest of the meeting was spent in talking over the work for the next year and arrangements were made for some future amusements for the young men. The committees were appointed for the different branches of work.

Music at Mt. Olive Church.

The concert in the Baptist church last Friday evening was much enjoyed by those present. This remarkable family of musicians are two brothers and two sisters. The variety of instruments used, together with vocal selections, make this entertainment one of great interest.—Vermont Journal, Windsor, May 4, '95. These musicians appear at Mt. Olive Baptist church tomorrow night.

The New Business College.

This commercial school, which opened in this city October 1st, has made a good start and a good record. It is steadily growing in numbers and popular favor. It now takes a holiday vacation for eight days and will resume work January 2d. This will be a good time for a large reinforcement of new students and it is hoped the young people will be prompt to improve their opportunity.

Major C. T. Picton is manager of the State Hotel, at Denison, Texas, which the traveling men say is one of the best hotels in that section. In speaking of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy Major Picton says: "I have used it myself and in my family for several years, and take pleasure in saying that I consider it an infallible cure for diarrhoea and dysentery. I always recommend it, and have frequently administered it to my guests in the hotel, and in every case it has proven itself worthy of unqualified endorsement. GOVERNMENT MACHINERY.

FINE WORK NOW BEING DONE AT THE POND WORKS.

Working on the Disappearing Gun Carriage—Will Soon be Commenced—They Are Marvels of Mechanism and Invention

Through the courtesy of Andrew McArdle, superintendent of the foundry at the Pond Machine Tool Company, a representative of The Daily Press was shown through the works Monday afternoon and had an opportunity of seeing some of the important machinery now in course of construction for the government. The foundation upon which the eight disappearing gun carriages will be erected is now about completed and the work of building the carriages will soon commence. The idea of this new style of carriage is to place them in a fort, and after being discharged they will recede from the gun-hole and drop a certain distance to where the men are located who have charge of the gun, thus preventing a disastrous attack by the enemy.

They are marvels of mechanism and one of the greatest invention of the age. Considerable time has been spent in erecting the foundation, but now that it is about completed the other work will move along more rapidly, though it will be some time before the carriages are finished.

The last one of the four turning and boring lathes for twelve and sixteen inch guns is rapidly nearing completion and it weighs 330 tons and is 138 feet long. For beauty of workmanship and mechanism it stands as a model. It is capable of doing the very finest work for which it is intended and the company have certainly taken the greatest pains to have it meet the requirements, which it will no doubt do. The lathes were started about one year ago. When this one is completed representatives of the government, and leading journalists will visit the works and a photograph of the machine will be taken, after which they will be the guests of the company at dinner.

This machinery is to be used at the Watervliet Arsenal at Troy, New York, and no doubt more will be built if the test is satisfactory.

TWO LICENSES GRANTED.

The Somerset County Court Grant Licenses to Two Borough Dealers.

The Somerset County Court opened at Somerville Monday. The members of the Grand Jury from North Plainfield township are Charles P. Sebring and David F. Randolph. The petit jurors are George Collins, Isaiah Corlell, F. N. Brown and B. R. Cain.

Hotel licenses were granted to Rudolph Spiegel, of the Crescent Hotel, and Richard A. Boyce, of the Somerset House in the borough of North Plainfield.

The case of Thompson against Hummer was called, and on consent was put over the term. The jury was discharged until Jan. 6th. Chas. A. Reed represented the plaintiff, and Wm. K. McClure, the defendant.

An Appeal for Help.

While our hearts are tender towards the suffering in other lands and localities, let us set aside a due portion for the victims of the licensed saloons in our own immediate neighborhood. We never ask for help while we can answer our own prayers. Now our treasury is empty and we need clothing for men and boys, to make it possible for several to attend church and Sunday-school next Lord's day; we need comforters, pillows and mattresses for two cots. Supplies will be called for or sent directly to Reform Hall. A quick response is urged.

Mrs. George F. Opdyke,
Pres't W. T. A. S., Reform Hall.

Danbury Troubled About Sewage, Too.

The city of Danbury, Conn., is in trouble over the sewage question. A number of years ago a combined system of sewers was put in, taking in both sewage and rain water, although they were advised against it by good engineers. The people living down the river into which the sewer empties, have been complaining of the pollution of the river, and the people of Danbury are against the idea of providing beds for the large amount of sewage and drainage water.

The wife of Mr. D. Robinson, a prominent lumberman of Hartwick, N. Y., was sick with rheumatism for five months. In speaking of it. Mr. Robinson says: "Chamberlain's Pain Balm is the only thing that gave her any rest from pain. For the relief of pain it cannot be beat." Many very bad cases of rheumatism have been cured by it. "For sale at 50 cents per bottle by Reynolds' Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

ASSISTANT POSTMASTER SELECTED.

John Whitenack Will Fill the Late George Godown's Place.

Postmaster John M. Hetfield Monday morning made the changes in his office staff made necessary by the death of Assistant Postmaster George Godown. John Whitenack, who has for several years been money order clerk, has been promoted to the position of Assistant Postmaster, and will assume the duties of the position January first. Mr. Whitenack's long connection with the local postal service has made him an efficient employe and his acquaintance with the routine work of the office particularly qualifies him for the new position. He will also superintend the work of the letter carriers. Mr. Whitenack is a Democrat but his appointment will meet with approval of all parties. Letter Carrier William Sharp will be promoted to the money order department, and one of the eligible substitutes will take his place among the carriers.

EXCITEMENT AMONG SHOPPERS.

A Runaway Team Upset a Carriage on Front Street Last Evening.

At the hour when West Front street was the most crowded with its throng of Christmas shoppers Tuesday at about five o'clock, the horses attached to J. E. Bailey's truck ran away. They started on West Front street near Plainfield avenue, becoming frightened while standing by the curb, and ran toward the business section without anyone to guide them. They dashed through the throng of carriages and in front of Harry Werner's clothing store struck the rear wheel of George H. Burgess' two-horse carriage, which was standing by the sidewalk, upsetting it. Mrs. Joseph Yerkes and her little child were in the carriage. Patrick Connolly, the coachman, was thrown under the carriage and has his head slightly cut. The other occupants of the carriage were more frightened than hurt. The carriage itself was scratched and bent and some of the equipments broken.

Convention of Teachers.

The Primary Teachers' meeting held Tuesday afternoon in the Y. M. C. A. building was conducted by Mrs. Powlison. There were twenty members present. The public meeting to be held next Monday evening in the First Baptist church was discussed, and it was stated that Mrs. Barnes, of Jersey City, Mrs. Clark, of Newark, and Mr. Ferguson, of Trenton, would make addresses. Previous to the meeting the members will serve tea in the parlors of the church for their guests. It is earnestly desired by the members that all who possibly can will be present at the meeting. Invitations have been sent to several Sunday-school teachers in adjoining towns to attend.

Malicious Stone Thrower.

It costs the Pond Machine Tool Company a few pennies to keep glass in the windows of their works that face the railroad, owing to the fact that men and boys who steal rides on coal trains persist in breaking them with stones or pieces of coal. One evening recently while Andrew McArdle was seated in his office a stone was thown through the glass and just missed hitting him in the head.

Elected President of the Alumni.

Col. Mason W. Tyler, of this city, was elected president of the Alumni Association of Amherst College at their annual dinner at Hotel St. Denis in New York Friday evening. He has a brother who has long been a professor in the college.

Borough Barbers Pleased.

The North Plainfield barbers are much pleased with the move made by the Council to close their places on Sunday.

Want a Pound Keeper.

Many residents of Netherwood are desirous of the appointment of Henry Brick as pound keeper for the Netherwood district.

When most needed it is not unusual for your family physician to be away from home. Such was the experience of Mr. J. Y. Schenck, editor of the Caddo, Ind. Ter., Banner, when his little girl, two years of age was threatened with a severe attack of croup. He says: "My wife insisted that I go for the doctor, but as our family physician was out of town I purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, which relieved her immediately. I will not be without it in the future." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Reynoldss' Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

SABBATH REFORM WORK.

Tract Board Anxious to Take Definite Action About Dr. Lewis' Work.

The Seventh-Day Baptist church tract board is very desirous of taking intelligent and definite action at its next meeting, which occurs January 13th, 1896, in refere ce to the employment of Dr. Lewis in Sabbath reform work, and to this end they have been canvassing the churches. At the last Board meeting eight churches had reported. The result so far is encouraging and indicates a purpose to carry out the recommendations of the society and of the general conference.

The relations of Dr. Lewis to his church and editorial work the pressing need of a revision of the tracts on the Sabbath question, and the importance of the work in general all demand that a decision of some sort be reached promptly.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

J. W. Reinhart has returned from his visit to the South.

Rev. Arthur Crane, of Carleton avenue, is spending the holidays at home.

The Proper Line.

Tho' they've trouble to divine what is just the proper line in this Venezuelan matter lately mooted, yet in line of anthracite all our doubts are put to flight, for at George O. Stevens' yard we can be suited.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces, such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

The other prizes were:

For perfect recitations in catechism—John Berry.

For punctual attendance at Sunday-school—Miss Anna Ryan.

After the exercises were concluded most of the children went to the club house of the old C. Y. M. I., where the firemen tendered a reception to those who had assisted in the dances at the firemen's fair. Gifts were distributed from the teachers, and then ice cream and cake were passed to the young people. The members of the firemen's fair committee present were Second Assistant Chief J. A. Martin, A. H. Martin, L. M. Dunavan, Abner Bartlett, Jr., and W. T. Newman. W. J. Stephenson was the caterer. Sam Frazee furnished the music.

In the evening the reception was continued and was largely attended by the young people. A very pleasant evening was spent, dancing adding to the enjoyment.

A GROVE STREET WEDDING.

Miss Florence Walker Joined in Wedlock to Harry Sherar, of Westfield.

A very pretty home wedding took place Monday at the home of Duncan Walker on Grove street, when his daughter, Florence, was wedded to Harry Sherar, of Westfield. Dr. Yerkes, of the First Baptist church, performed the ceremony in the presence of a number of the bride's and groom's immediate relatives.

The bride was becomingly attired in white silk while the groom wore the conventional suit of black. Miss Martha Walker, sister of the bride, was the bridesmaid and was charmingly attired in white silk. Both the bride and maid carried handsome bouquets of white roses. Robert Love was best man.

After the ceremony a collation was spread, after which a varied programme of vocal and instrumental music was rendered in an entertaining manner by some of the guests. The couple received a large number of useful and costly presents, which were arranged in one of the rooms and were much admired. After a short honeymoon the happy couple will reside in Westfield, where the groom is well and favorably known and where he is engaged in the oil business.

THEATRICAL.

"My Jack" is undoubtedly the ablest, strongest, most picturesque and most consistent melodrama ever sent us from England. Ablest—in that its literary merits are unsurpassed; strongest—in that its dramatic episodes and climaxes are intense and thrilling, but at the same time absolutely rational; most picturesque—in that its scenic embellishments outshine those of any play upon the American stage today; consistent—in that not a flaw can be found in its dramatic construction. At Music Hall Friday night.

—Rev. J. W. Richardson will preach next Sunday on the subject, "Shall We Labor for War or for Peace.

BIG REAL ESTATE DEAL.

Wealthy New Yorkers Buy Farm Property for Unknown Purposes.

The real estate market in the vicinity of Oak Tree and Marconnier has had a boom in the last sixty days that has startled the natives. About 100 acres of the best land in that locality has been sold, amounting in cash to about $25,000. The property was owned by Mr. Noe and Mr. Randolph. The buyers are New York bankers and brokers, one of whom is Mr. Clinch. The rumor gained currency that it was to be used for dairy and farming purposes, but those living in that vicinity hardly believe that to be so. It is rumored that a gigantic scheme of some kind is in view and that the place is to have a big boom. A large house is now being erected on a piece of the property for residental purposes. There is considerable mystery surrounding the deal.

If You Doubt the Popularity of the "Clyde Line" from New York to Jacksonville, Fla.,

without change, just call at their Pier 29, East River, New York, any sailing day, Monday, Wednesday or Friday, at 3 p. m., and see for yourself the number of passengers on board. There are many reasons for this, a few of which are because there is no change between New York and Jacksonville, Fla.; they make the run in about two-and a half days, including half a day's stop in Charleston, and because their officers are such courteous, genial fellows they make you feel right at home as soon as you get aboard. Their rates are the lowest and it will pay you to write "Clyde Line," New York, for descriptive matter, if you anticipate going to Charleston, Jacksonville, Fla., or any interior points in the south or southwest.

VARIOUS SPORTS.

William Tallman and James L. Anthony, of this city, have been chosen among the judges for the coming New York dog show.

Charles Krewson, of this city, who is considered one of the best pool players in the State will enter the ten-men pool tournament for the State championship, which will be started next week at Newark.

Three games have been played in the Park Club billiard tournament and Chas. H. Lyman has come out victorious in two of them. Mr. Lyman gave S. St. J. McCutchen 20 points and defeated him 120 to 96. He gave W. M. McCutchen 30 points and also defeated him 120 to 84. Charles A. Reed, who was allowed 20 points by Mr. Lyman, defeated him by one point.

A movement is now on foot among the leading schools of the country for the organization of a National Interscholastic Association. The promoters of the scheme have called a preliminary meeting for Saturday morning at 10 o'clock at the De La Salle School, New York. These interested ones in the Plainfield High School Athletic Association are much in favor of joining the new association, and a meeting of the P. H. S. A. A., is to be held Friday morning at 10 o'clock in the Y. M. C. A. building to discuss the question and appoint a delegate to attend the meeting in New York on Saturday.

CYCLING COMMENT.

The latest invention in the way of cycles was recently sent to Percy Ohl, of this city, by its patentee, who desires the principle of his invention demonstrated. The motive power is to be obtained from an animal who works in a tread mill. Calculation has been made which shows that twenty to thirty miles an hour can be made by the cycle carrying a horse of 1,000 pounds weight, working and walking in the machine at the rate of three miles an hour. This speed is calculated on 1,000 pounds extra weight for the occupants. Dog power has been used to demonstrate the principle, and very satisfactory results have so far been given. We may soon be using it for engines. F. C. Phoebus, of the Greenbrook kennels, is breaking the dogs for its use.

A loud ring of your doorbell in the dead hours of night is alarming. So is the first hollow sound of a cough from one's husband, wife, son or daughter. It is disease knocking, with perhaps a certain silent visitor waiting not far away. Arrest that cough. Stop it. Stop it at the start. A few day's use of Ely's Pineola Balsam and the danger is past. Relief is immediate, a cure certain. This remedy is rich in the curative principles of the balsams and also contains certain ingredients that are new.

One Minute Cough Cure is a popular remedy for croup. Safe for children and adults. L. W. Randolph, 143 W Front St.

NOTES IN DIXIE LAND.

PHASES OF INTELLECTUAL, MORAL AND PHYSICAL NEGRO CHARACTER.

The Confederate Veteran—Sent Away Like Rip Van Winkle—A Visit to the Atlanta Exposition—Trouble at the Midway Flagstaff.

[Special Correspondence.]

ATLANTA, —It has been my good fortune for a few days past to run about the city and vicinity, including the exposition grounds, with a youngster to the manner born, who sees everything and either knows its significance or soon finds it out, for he is a live, interrogation point. It is like a revelation. I know, of course, that Atlanta was a cosmopolitan city, and just now we have Turk and Greek, green Chinaman and Arab, and many more "outhangunged folk," but I had never dreamed that the natives were such a heterogeneous set. My friend points out to me what there are four distinct races of Africans represented in this region, ranging from a tall and angular people with faces much like Jews, down to those "stubby and shovel faced fellows" who sprung from the Kroomen of the Guinea coast; that while the country negroes are growing blacker—that is, the miscegenes there are absorbed—the city negroes are growing lighter, and between the two there ragges a sullen feud which is the underlying reason of many of those otherwise unaccountable frays which are of nightly occurrence in the city's black districts.

THE COUNTRY NEGRO.

Negro Vocabulary.

"I'll wager that if the fall truth could be known," says he, "there are a thousand darkies in this city carrying razors or pistols for more or less murky, and the only reason there is so little killing is that they are on the lookout for each other. As it is they seldom have a picnic or excursion without at least some gouging badly slashed, and here lately they have done a deal of it at their camp meetings. These are the "regular low down niggers" you hear about and the better class of them and the social line on them very severely. When the distinction between city and country negro was pointed out to me, I discovered that I had not noticed it before, it is so marked. The work and good wages due to the exposition have drawn thousands here from all parts of the state, and even from the lower coast of South Carolina, where, as I take it, the least developed branch of the race in this country is to be found. These benevolent and law abiding negroes are penniless and will take any job they can get at any price, and so in addition to the old feud there is a kind of labor war on—Cheaper to take the place from a city man, is a high crime in the city darky's estimation. I note also that the line is very closely drawn between white and black labor. The dray drivers, the truck handlers, the bevvy porters, in short all who do hard and dirty work in the hot sun, are black. Almost all the white negro colored employee in the cotton mills or any place where close attention to machinery is required.

"It won't do just yet," is the common testimony of employers. "There is a curious streak in the negro mind which we have never been able to overcome. Even the smartest and best educated have it. No matter how carefully he is instructed, or even how dangerous the neglect is, his mind will wander from his work at intervals, and they appear to be tolerably regular intervals too. If the machine makes a sound that is not actually harsh, the negro will soon get to humming and sometimes to singing in a sort of tune with it, and then, if it is a machine he is 'feeding,' he is apt to lose a finger or a part of one. They did put darkies in the little cutters for splitting cane, and in a month or two enough finger ends were nipped to start a new plantation, and we were first joint bones enough in stock to frame a baby. The women, also, are much harder on sewing machines than white women, and you will see in the big laundries that the smoothing rollers are run by white girls. Even the new flatiron with fire inside is too complicated for our old black washerwomen, and they burn the clothes or themselves. Your notion that the lighter colored girls and boys should be put in walk them and train mules won't do just yet—that is, unless philanthropists will train them thoroughly, but that takes a long time and this is a fast age."

Confederate Veterans.

"We took particular notice of the Confederate veterans, of whom thousands were there for a few days, each wearing the white badge of honor, and with rare exceptions I think they were a handsome set of men to others of their age and class. They are on the average considerably older than Federal veterans of the same age, as well fixed, but when we had decided that the "poor and ragged old Confederate" was a myth we run upon one who completely filled the bill. He sat on the post office steps, his back squeezed into the angle formed by the portico and main wall. He was dining on crackers and cheese, and from the crown of his slouch hat to the open jaws of his boots he was the perfect wreck of a once splendid manhood. He was Hector and Palamon and the ruins of Carthage all in one. His rent clothes held together in front with buckskin thongs in lieu of buttons, and straps of the same were over his back to prevent the parting of sole and upper. And his face was full of character too. His raven black hair, but slightly tinged with gray, curled about a bold forehead, under which glowed two glorious black eyes, and to these his large aquiline nose contributed to make up a singularly fine face. He was from "wire grass Georgey," I was told, and had never been in Atlanta since the evacuation. He had spirit enough to kick when his kinsfolk wanted him to, but kicked too late, as vide cut. Almost every southern state makes some little provision for the old Confederates, and in this connection a very curious thing happened here a few weeks ago. A woman who had considered herself a widow for 31 years and drawn the pittance ever since it was granted was amazed by the appearance of her husband. In the retreat from Kenesaw he had got separated from his command, and believing the struggle hopeless had slipped away in the night and escaped through the lines to east Tennessee. Old age, poverty and homesickness made him tramp to Atlanta, where his old comrades recognized him. But they gave him the marble heart, and he tramped back to where he had acquired a legal residence in Tennessee, and in his days in the poorhouse. The only comment of his wife, so far as heard from, was that she would now lose her allowance as a soldier's widow.

Exposition Notes.

As to the exposition, it is no longer denied that there has been inexcusable delay, chiefly on the part of the exhibitors. One week after the opening day I made the rounds of the buildings, and here is what I saw and heard. The first large building I approached was barred by huge planks across the door on which was inscribed in deadly black, "No Admittance." Next I entered the Georgia Manufactures building to find not a single exhibit complete, though several are nearly so. And they will be beauties, too, especially the display of clouded, veined and pink marbles from the now famous Tate quarries. In the Transportation building I found just one exhibit complete, that of the Studebakers of South Bend, Ind., and it's a splendid one. In the Woman's building the contrast between the catalogue and the situation was laughable. Every room where the exhibits were in place was closed to visitors while the finishing touches were being put on, and elsewhere there were stacks of boxes and piles of litter and distressed looking women. The most entertaining one I got there was of a carpenter on a stepladder and two ladies standing by with anxious looks. The carpenter was homely and clumsy and the ladies beautiful, and so this odd and ungainly ungoodly was comely, as we say in Paris. It is an interesting fact that all the ladies in charge of this building are good looking and several of them superb beauties, so when the exhibits are in place this department alone will be worth the price of admission.

The Fine Arts hall was completely furnished, and it is quite up to the promise. There was a deal of talk that the nude was to be suppressed, and some of the city preachers gave notice that a line must be carefully drawn, but so far as I can see it is much as at Chicago. The government building was the first to be complete throughout, and it is worth many days' study. Especially amusing is the array of articles that in the mails or stopped in transit and sent to the dead letter office. Among them are an alligator, Indian scalp, rattlesnake, centiped, Chinese shoes, cowboy hat, hickory nut doll, whisky flask, false teeth, an Easter egg and a Chinese doll. Of all other buildings it may be said in general that they were about two-thirds complete. The out doors was unqualifiedly bad. The broken stone pave was loosely thrown down, and to use it was like walking over a bed of Indian mud savages, and where the mud did not go it was worked up into beds of dust and every passing cart or dray raised a rolling cloud of it as bad as on any country road. A thin mat of sod was all that was seen on plaza; two hours' walk in it made one look "foxy," and a visitor with black clothes and white shirt front was a sight to madder. Most of the visitors were country people, and from those I talked with the cry was "Water, water. Do tell us where we can get a drink of water."

Discontent on the Midway.

Such was the condition. That night there was a general reorganization. Some ill luck attended the first wreck in a day or two, Colonel W. A. Hemphill was put at the head, and a fresh force of workers put on, and there is a decided improvement. Still there is room for fix early, when and two of the Mexican gentlemen added to the interest of the place by an impromptu duel with the swords designed for the bull fight. But there was a row over a Chicago girl employed as cashier in the village. The younger one thought himself ill treated and insulted the other, who was the lady's girl. In an instant they had grabbed the keen rapiers and were slashing at each other in a way to have delighted Dumas' heroes. One man was down on the other's weapon at his breast, and nothing but a blow from the watchman which paralyzed the victor's arm saved the other's life. Entered each other's hearts it would have but none so bad as this. The trouble is the Midway folks are in a fierce state of discontent because the big crowd hasn't come and are threatening lawsuits and all sorts of trouble.

Sightseeing is not expensive. Refreshments of all kinds are sold in the grounds at the standard city prices elsewhere. Good board and lodging can be had at hundreds of places in the city for $6 per week, and fifteen cents will buy three gallons. I am, however, greatly disappointed to find Atlanta such a poor fruit market. The best of the state's crop of peaches will be picked a month ago, and those since sold are from California and cost perhaps twice as much as in Chicago. The native apples are dear and are lying on the lawn. There was a big kick because the trolley lines charge 10 cents to the grounds, but they make as good time as the Southern railway, which does not. The parking privilege is charged 10 cents, and I can't expect Chicago rates on a third of the patronage. The real trouble, the only serious trouble, was in the delay, and we may now hope to soon see that rectified.

Baptists.

There are 15 branches of the Baptists in the United States, each distinct in name and in some important particulars from all the others. They are designated as follows: Regular, north; Regular, south; Primitive, Old Two Seed; Regular Baptists (colored), General Baptists, Original Freewill Baptists, United Baptists, Baptist Church of Christ, Separate Baptists, United Brethren in Christ, United Brethren in Christ (old constitution) and four varieties of Plymouth Brethren.

MAY ESTABLISH A MISSION.

THAT IS THE POSSIBLE RESULT OF COL. HADLEY'S MEETINGS

Two Hundred Sign the Pledge to Try and Save One Man Each from Drink and Get Him to Live a Christian Life.

The people began to gather at Reform Hall last Friday before seven o'clock. By half-past seven the hall was crowded, galleries included, and by eight, hundreds had been turned away for want of room.

The meeting was intensely interesting. The workers were at their best and the four representatives of the old Jerry McAuley Water Street Mission were listened to with rapt attention by the large audience, as they related the mistakes of their lives through drink and their restoration through accepting Christ as their Saviour. They were a fine looking lot of men, who had no appearance of the lives from which they had been rescued. Their names were "Uncle Rube" Johnson, Mr. Day, "Doc" Sheppard and Mr. Rice, as announced by Col. Hadley, who led the meeting in his usual vigorous and interesting style. Miss Wray sang and spoke, and Mr. Leo sang "Down in the Gilded Saloon."

About two hundred of the audience signed a pledge to try and save one slave to drink during the year 1896, and also bring them to Christianity and the church of their choice.

Tonight Miss Wray and Mr. Leo assisted by the converts of St. Bartholomew's Rescue Mission of New York, will lead the meeting.

Col. Hadley will lead the meeting tomorrow evening and also the one on Sunday afternoon at 2:30. At the latter meeting he hopes to meet all true friends of rescue work. Further notice of these meetings will appear in tomorrow's issue.

Last evening William N. Runyon rendered "Sowing the Tares When It Might Have Been Wheat." He will probably sing at the remaining services to be held.

Col. Hadley has advanced the idea of establishing a rescue mission in this city, and something more will be said on the subject before the meetings close.

PRACTICE WHAT THEY PREACH.

Borough Board of Health Prosecute a Borough Resident for Brook Pollution.

The Borough Board of Health are endeavoring to practice what they preach in the matter of Green brook pollution. Some time ago they learned of the fact that a Mr. Schecklein, and old German, living on Pearl street, had a sewer pipe running from his house into the brook, through which the waste water of the house was disposed of. They investigated the matter, and found that the pipe had been broken off in close proximity to the brook, but that the waste water was emptied on the ground at the end of the pipe and from there dripped into the brook. They immediately notified Schecklein that he must stop it. This was three weeks ago and he promised to do so. It seems, however, that he continued to use the pipe, and again last week he was notified by the borough officials to suppress the nuisance. He paid no heed to the command and on Tuesday he was officially served with a notice by Health Inspector Simons. Yesterday an investigation was made and it was found that he had paid no attention to the notice. On application of the Board of Health Justice Crosley issued a warrant for his arrest. This morning he was arraigned in court and his trial set down for 2 o'clock Monday afternoon in order that he might consult counsel before pleading.

A RED TEA.

Mrs. Lowe Entertains Her Friends in a Charming Manner.

The parlors of the beautiful residence of William Ebbets Lowe, on Park avenue, were thronged Thursday afternoon with those who came to attend the tea given by Mrs. Lowe. She was assisted in receiving her guests by Mrs. Howard Fleming, Mrs. O. T. Waring, Mrs. Henry B. Newhall, Miss Cock, Miss Lyon and Mrs. Lockwood, of Philadelphia.

In the dinning room the Misses Holly, Miss Shepard and Miss Smalley assisted. The decorations of both the rooms and tables were charming; they consisted of red roses and carnations, Southern smyrax, holly and palms. They were arranged by Miss Lincoln. The music was furnished by a mandolin quartette from Landers. About two hundred guests were present.

A Dangerous Practice.

It has become quite a habit among the youngsters of Plainfield to play marbles in the streets on their way to and from school. There have been several narrow escapes from horses and wheels and yesterday afternoon on West Fourth street three little boys, who were absorbed in a game of marbles, were very nearly run over by a passing wagon.

A WARRIOR WENT WRONG.

SERGEANT PHILLIPS STOOD SHOT AND SHELL BUT RUM DOWNED HIM

He Accidentally Met an Old Comrade and Was Saved—His History Wove Into the Song of "Twenty Years Ago."

On the 31st of May, four years ago, a Grand Army comrade, with some of his companions, was laying flowers upon soldiers graves in Greenwood cemetery.

A pitiful looking tramp, wearing a Grand Army button and little else except a face of misery, came up toward him and said:

"Isn't your name Corporal Buck?"

"My name is Buck, and I was Corporal in the—New York Regiment during the war, but who are you?" he said. "Oh, you have forgotten your old sergeant, have you? You don't remember the sergeant that placed the colors on the fort and stood there until he was pierced with bullets, while Company C spiked the guns and lost eighteen men, killed and wounded, in a few minutes?"

"Why," said Buck, "Is this Sergeant Phillips? I heard that you were dead long ago." And he grasped the extended hand of the tramp, whose breath gave evidence of heavy drink. After some conversation, Mr. Buck invited his old comrade to his house that evening to supper. The old drunkard, with still some pride remaining, glanced at his shabby clothes which were covered with vermin, and said:

"No, Corporal, I will walk down and be there after you have got through supper, if you will just lend me a quarter."

"This is," Buck gladly did.

It was dark and he had given up hope of the arrival of the old veteran, and his son, a nineteen-year-old lad, was sitting upon the back porch of the snug cottage, upon which the Corporal had made the final payment but the week before. The boy was singing some old war choruses that his father had taught him, brought to his mind by this memorial day, when the old Sergeant tottered up drunker than before, having spent most of his money for rum, crying in a maudlin way over the memories which he said had been aroused by the songs.

Mr. Buck invited him in, gave him a good supper, then a bath, after which he dressed him from head to foot in his own clothing and shoes. He kept him all night and in the morning told him that he owed his prosperity to the fact that he had become a Christian after he came out of the war, and left off his drink and other bad habits. The result of it was that Sergeant Phillips concluded to lead a new life, which encouraged and assisted by his old comrade, he has done up to this time.

When Col. Hadley learned the facts, he took the story to Miss Fannie Crosby, the famous song writer, who wove it into verse to the tune of "Twenty Years Ago," bringing in as a medley several old war choruses. This is Colonel Hadley's special song, which he has memorized and will sing to morrow afternoon at 3:30 o'clock at Reform Hall to which he invites all old soldiers and their friends, that they may help him sing the choruses.

LEAL'S SCHOOL CELEBRATE.

Appropriate Exercises Among Students for the Coming Festival Day.

Yesterday afternoon, for the first time in several years, the boys in Leal's School celebrated Christmas at the school. The exercises were gotten up by the students and were held the last half hour of school. There were several well-rendered selections by the mandolin club, which consisted of Prof. C. M. Slocum and Gilbert Lovell, mandolins, Willis West, guitar, and Charles Davis, violin. The glee club furnished a quartette for the occasion, which consisted of Herbert Moore, first tenor, E. Maxwell Honeyman, second tenor, Hugh Miller, first bass, Raymond A. McGee, second bass. Their selections were greatly enjoyed. A very pleasant part of the programme was a banjo solo by Willis West, his encore, in particular receiving extra loud applause. The different selections were all heartily applauded and all encored.

Principal Leal closed the exercises with a few remarks and, after wishing his pupils all a pleasant vacation, dismissed them.

A New Year's Eve Dance.

A holiday dance will be given at the Park clubhouse on New Year's Eve., beginning at 8:30 o'clock. The patronesses are Mrs. Charles A. Reed, Mrs. Samuel St. John McCutchen, Mrs. Samuel Townsend and Mrs. George D. Hallock. The dance is arranged by the House Committee, which consists of Elston M. French, Samuel Townsend and William N. Runyon.

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Hubbard and daughter have returned from a trip during the past year through the south and west. Mr. Hubbard has been traveling in the interest of the Electric Arc Light Co., installing plants in various places.

DR. FRENCH, STATE PRESIDENT, TELLS OF ITS WORTH. HE SAYS THE MAN WHO THREATENS IT IS A TRAITOR.

Tenth Anniversary of the Congregational Church Society Celebrated Last Night—The Services Were Largely Attended.

He Says the Silent Majority are Resolutely Set Against Anything That Will Antagonize Two Kindred Nations.

The Christian Endeavorers of the Congregational church celebrated their tenth birthday, on Friday, with a very pleasant service. Members of other societies were present, and the evening was rendered especially enjoyable by the presence of Dr. J. Clement French, the State President of the Y. P. S. C. E.

Rev. C. L. Goodrich read a short Scripture selection and offered prayer. He then gave a brief historical sketch of the society. He said it had started out in life with a threefold purpose: "To promote an earnest Christian life among its members, to increase their mutual acquaintance and to make them more useful in the service of God." This purpose they had nobly fulfilled. Their prayer meetings showed an unusual readiness to speak and pray, and a deep spirituality; and he had found the society willing and glad to work, and to originate and carry out new plans for endeavor. However, much might still be done, and he hoped the society would go steadily forward in its good work.

An "Anniversary Song," written for the occasion, was sung by the choir, then Mr. Goodrich introduced the State President, the speaker of the evening. Dr. French began by telling of his own original disapproval of Christian Endeavor, and of his thorough conversion to its principles. He had feared that the obligations of the pledge would take the sweetness out of Christian duties. "But," said he, "it will not do to wait for a feeling of love before you do your duty. Do the duty and the love will come." He told of the magnificent work done by the Christian Endeavor Society in its fourteen years of life, the poor relieved, the churches kept alive, the theological students and missionaries supported, the money given to the mission boards, prayer-bless meetings, Dorcas circles, rescue missions, Christmas dinners given, and many other grand works.

"Do you ask the reason for all this?" he asked. "It is because the Lord Jesus Christ is the acknowledged head of the whole movement, and because the Holy Spirit's power is constantly implored."

He closed with a strong appeal for more consecrated earnestness. Nothing can be accomplished by half-hearted work. The Christian worker needs to have as much earnestness as the worker in any other department of life. And even if there were no other motive for earnestness, how many of us want to leave this world with our work half finished? We can never return to finish it. Let us not be called away without having made for ourselves a record of all we can possibly do for God, His church and humanity.

The teachers in the public schools will spend their vacations as follows: Miss Petrie at Cortlandt, N. Y.; Miss Filmer at Gloversville, N. Y.; Miss Lee at Brooklyn and Washington, D. C.; Miss Stillman at Brooklyn; Miss Schutt in Western New York; Miss Scott at Oswego.

THE KIRMESS PROFITS.

The Woman's Auxiliary Clear Almost $5,000 for the Hospital.

The gross receipts at the Kirmess for the benefit of the Muhlenberg hospital were $7,378.44. The expenses were $2,607.51, leaving a net profit of $4,740.93. Two checks for $4,500 have already been placed in the hands of the Governors' Board of the hospital, and it is hoped that the final check will be $300.

Public Memorial Service.

On Friday evening, January 17th, Columbia Lodge, No. 98, A. O. U. W., will hold a public memorial service for the members of the order who have died during the past year. It is intended to make this service an annual feature in this lodge and other lodges will probably do the same.

CHANCE FOR VOLUNTEERS.

INDIVIDUALS WANTED TO TRY AND SAVE ONE MAN FROM DRINK.

Col. Hadley's Meeting Tonight Will be the Most Important One of the Week—Rescue Converts to Relate Experiences.

From the first, the meetings in Reform Hall have been crowded and the interest has grown each night, and it is expected that the special preparation that has been made for the meeting tonight at 7:30 o'clock will draw still additional numbers, and judging from the past, those who wish seats should come early.

Mrs. Idabell Sparks Kress, the great soloist from New York city, has been engaged to sing several of her best pieces, and probably no finer singer of religious songs than she can be found, since great preparation has been given to her education in Germany, Indeed, she can sing in seven languages, and invariably charms her audiences.

Besides this, Miss Wray, who has already endeared herself to the hearts of all who have heard her, will sing her quaint songs and choruses.

There will be a preliminary song service from 7:30 to 8 o'clock, from the new book, Rescue Songs for 1895, which has proved very acceptable and seems to be filled with appropriate words and music for the work.

Another feature of the meeting, which will be led by Col. Hadley, will be the testimonies of four prominent converts from the Jerry McAuley Water Street Mission, New York, and if they can exceed in interest the testimonies of the St. Bartholomew's converts who spoke Monday evening, they must, indeed, be thrilling.

Tonight an opportunity will be given to all who wish to volunteer their services to try and save one drinking person during the year 1896.

Col. Hadley will also lead the meeting on Sunday afternoon at half past three in Reform Hall, where services will be held tomorrow and Saturday nights by Miss Wray, assisted by Mr. Leo and the converts from St. Bartholomew's Rescue Mission, New York.

So far, these meetings have exceeded in interest and numbers and financial support, the most sanguine expectations of all, and it looks as though much permanent good would result from them.

Col. Hadley received a letter requesting that the meetings be continued for another week. If it seems wise to do this and arrangements can be made so as not to interfere with previous plans, notice will be given in The Press.

TROUBLESOME ITALIANS.

A Gang of the Foreigners Are Not Wanted in the Borough.

On two or three occasions residents in the vicinity of the electric light station in the borough have had cause to complain about the disturbance made by a lot of Italians who live near by. They fill up on intoxicating liquor, and then make the night hideous with the most unearthly noise imaginable.

A few nights ago such a fracas occured, during which blows were struck. The neighbors was annoyed considerably, but no marshal was in sight and in consequence they had to wait till the Italians got tired of punching each other. The respectable people living at that point certainly deserve to be rid of such nuisances which are becoming so frequent.

ODD CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

High School Students Indulge in Seasonable Pranks.

The regular Christmas festivals of the senior and junior classes were held Thursday afternoon at the close of the session. As has been the usual custom, the seniors had a present ready for each member of the junior class and they were presented by Volney F. Green. He made a witty speech with each gift. One of the young women received a doll, another a baby rattle and the rest gifts of a similar nature. A pipe was a rather suggestive present to one of the young men, while a cake of yeast hinted to another that he should rise. The juniors presented the seniors in return with a toy donkey which brayed most tunefully. The two classes then parted with a gay "Merry Christmas," and their respective class yells.

An Honor.

Edward T. Bowman, of West Front street, and a past officer of Goodwill Lodge, No. 301, K. of P., of South Plains, has been selected for the post of Deputy Grand Chancellor for this district, to succeed the present Deputy, James Patterson, of Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., whose term expires, on the meeting of the Grand Lodge in Trenton, February, 1896.

—The Glee, Banjo and Mandolin Club of Brown University are said to have sung and played before fifteen hundred people in the Philadelphia Y. M. C. A., course last Christmas night. The club will appear at the Y. M. C. A. next Saturday.

ASK THE CITY'S PROTECTION.

NORTH AVENUE PROPERTY HOLDERS RESIST INJUNCTION.

Those Who Are Affected Discuss Plans to Settle the Difficulty—Engineer Gavett Says the Sewage Beds are Ready.

The North avenue property owners arranged their campaign of action regarding the Green brook sewer question at a lively meeting, held in the Board of Trade rooms, last Friday.

Shortly after eight o'clock the meeting was called to order and Lemuel B. Woolston was elected chairman. Chas. H. Lyman was chosen secretary. The following property holders were represented at the meeting: William C. Kelly, Joseph P. Taylor, Lorenzo Paoli, Alicia McIntyre, Andrew Vanderbeek, John H. McVey, Dan S. Roberts, Lemuel B. Woolston, James F. Buckle, Edward C. Mulford, James McGee, Chas. H. Raybert, Fred C. Lounsbury and Edward Lowe.

Andrew J. Gavett, constructing engineer of the sewer, was present and spoke regarding the use of the sewage system at once. The sewers, he said were all ready, while several of the beds will be completed in a week. A small bed was now ready, however, that will accommodate the North avenue sewage.

It was stated that Corporation Counsel Marsh would represent the city at the trial and there was considerable discussion as to whether or not the property owners should send an attorney also. But before any action was taken, secretary C. H. Lyman said that he had seen Contractor Siddall and the latter agreed, although his tools and other apparatus were all packed up, to begin work at once and make street connections to the curb for four dollars apiece above the contract price. Then the question came up as to whether the Common Council would allow them to use the sewer even after they were connected.

Mr. Gavett thought they would and said that Expert Hazen had been in town and favored beginning at once and declared his intention of advising Councilman Frost and Ginna to support the plan. The meeting wanted some positive assurance of the fact. After an animated discussion on this and kindred subjects, the sewer itself became the topic of conversation.

Chairman Woolston said that there was a complaint which the North Plainfield authorities had not spoken of at all, which held all the solid matter, allowing only the liquid to go into Green brook and he believed, that if Chancellor McGill knew of it, it might change the appearance of the case.

Mr. Raybert said that the city accepted the ownership of the cesspool when they paid for its cleaning last September, and he thought it was the city's business to do the fighting.

Mr. Mulford suggested that it might be a good idea to get to work and offered a resolution which, with a clause added by motion of Mr. Buckle, read thus:

Resolved, That the Common Council of the city be requested to take immediate action through their appropriate committee to exert their influence in protecting those of their taxpayers who are now threatened with prosecution and privation of the sewer service which they now enjoy. As a revenue the city receives in taxes of the property affected amounts to not less than $5,000 a year, and with a deprivation of the sewer, even for a short time, would be a great loss and depreciate the value of the property assessed for taxes, and would necessarily lower the assessed values of the property for the coming year, therefore your petitioners pray for your kindly and more than kindly, but just, service and intervention in our behalf, and that a committee of Messrs. Lounsbury, Lowe, Raiford and Woolston, wait on the chairman of the committee immediately.

The resolution was unanimously carried and, on motion of Mr. Buckle, the committee given full power to protect the interests of the property-holders in any way they deem necessary which, of course, includes the employment of counsel.

A document, agreeing to give Siddall the $4 extra for each immediate connection, was signed by all present, except Mr. Kelly, whose property on Park avenue is already connected. Several thought that if this paper was shown to Borough Counsel Reed it would stop proceedings.

After Mr. Lounsbury's report regarding counsel was heard and many suggestions were made, a vote of thanks was given to the Board of Trade for the use of their rooms and the meeting adjourned.

The Green brook sewer matter promises to come to a peaceful settlement after all. This morning the committee, appointed at the meeting of the property owners, came to the Borough Council Board and told him that a contract had been made for the immediate laying of the street connections to the curb and that assurance had been received from a number of the councilmen that the required permission to use the sewer would be granted at the meeting of the council on the 30th.

The many friends of Overseer of the Poor A. Vanderbeek, of Second place, will learn with joy that through the efforts of Dr. Keeney and two attentive nurses he is slowly being restored to health, after a very critical illness of over three weeks.

CHRISTMAS EXERCISES.

North Plainfield Public School Holds Its Christmas Celebration.

Christmas was rousingly celebrated in the North Plainfield public school Friday morning. The different class rooms were decorated with holly and evergreen wreaths, while numerous drawings lined the blackboards. The Class of '96 had a large flag of their class colors, orange and white, artistically drawn on their boards, while bunches of ribbon of the same colors were prominently displayed.

About seventy-five visitors were present and listened to an excellent programme from the older pupils. The programme was as follows:

A PARLOR SALE.

Queen Esther Band of Grace M. E. Church Give One on Craig Place.

A choice display of choice goods made the yellow and white parlor sale of the Queen Esther Mission Band of the Grace M. E. church a great success. The sale was held yesterday afternoon and evening at the residence of John Valiant, of Craig place. The tables were tastefully arranged and were daintily decorated in in white and yellow and green. Those in charge were as follows:

Fancy table, the Misses Nellie Valiant, Carrie Pangborn, and Mary Hoagland; Pantry shelf, the Misses Addie Carney and Mabel Stevens; Cake table, the Misses Nellie Vermeule and Jennie DeCamp; Fancy table, the Misses Winnie Carroll and Sadie Winckler; Ice Cream table, the Misses Teenie Voehl, Flossy Conroy, Hattie Noehl, Edith Conover and Ethel King. Mrs. H. P. Randolph acted as general directress and superintendent of the sale. There was a very good attendance and the band realized a neat little sum of money.

The Independent Schetuen Corps held their weekly sweepstake contest Thursday afternoon which resulted as follows:

First sweepstake—F. Hui, Lewis VanDyke and H. Haurand first money; W. Williams, second money. Second sweepstake—Henry Wedemeyer, first money; W. Williams, second money; Lewis VanDyke, J. A. Blatz, and H. Haurand, third money. Third sweepstake—Fred Hui, first money; Henry Wedemeyer, second money; J. A. Blatz, third money. Fourth sweepstake—Fred Hui and Lewis VanDyke, first money; W. Williams and Henry Wedemeyer, second money. Fifth sweepstake—Lewis VanDyke, first money; Henry Wedemeyer and J. A. Blatz, second money; H. Haurand, third money. Sixth sweepstake—Lewis VanDyke, first money; H. Wedemeyer, W. Williams, second money; August Trust, third money. Next Wednesday afternoon the members will shoot at live birds for prizes.

JUST BEYOND THE DOOR.

On the threshold baby stands
Holding out her little hands
To the great world just beyond
Just beyond the door.
Ah, that door! It shuts her in
From the pleasures she would win,
And within her baby heart
She is saying o'er and o'er
That some day she'll open wide
And step forth to see in pride
That great world she longs to see
Just beyond the door.

Ah, my baby, in your eyes
I can see the longing rise
That I in my heart have seen
Many times.
Only this: To step outside,
Join the hurrying human tide
That goes marching daily by
Just beyond the door.
May you find it just as fair
When with them you really stand
As you think it is, my child,
Long before.
May you never wish to be
Just a little child to see,
Not to do; you must be grown
Just beyond the door.

SAVOIR FAIRE.

English People Are Surprised at the Ease of American Schoolgirls.

"Where does the very young American girl get her amazing sense of savoir faire?" asked a thirty-Englishman the other day. He had sat at dinner beside the youngest daughter of the house, called in by her mother to take a suddenly vacated seat at a grand dinner party. The pretty miss had volunteered to the amiable British gentleman that she had never sat at a dinner party before, and yet he observed her manners were those of the quiet one, the lively self possession and pretty dignity that would have done credit to a duchess.

"Ah, she attends a fashionable boarding school," exclaimed a Newport belle, who overheard the remark, "and a fashionable school in America gives a very different training from that which girls get in French convents and under English governesses. At our schools the girls are not only taught their three R's and some other things, but what is termed in the path they must walk when they are ready to become debutantes. It costs the parents about $3,000 a year for every daughter sent to one of these temples of polite education, for, first of all, they live, while they study, like princesses.

"The pupils of these schools are divided into most charming suits, they are regularly attended by manicures and hairdressers, and a teacher of physical culture drills them twice weekly in the oneness of grace and ease, and there are maids provided to assist at every toilet, maids who speak several foreign languages. Every girl must every night at the fashionable hour, are sent to an opera box twice a week to hear the best music and are taught only those accomplishments that are the fads of the day.

"They are allowed to read such novels as will give them a true insight into the society they are soon to enter, but will not hurt their young minds. The highest class daily papers are brought fresh to their breakfast tables, and whatever the parents are encouraged to afford their daughters such liberal allowances as will enable the girls to give generously to charities, for they are taught to enjoy all the luxury, the sense of power their money and position brings and are taught to regard any awkwardness of manner as a greater fault than bad spelling."—Detroit's Magazine.

Fine Remitted.

The late Judge Snell was very fond of croquet playing, and when not busy with his official duties could most always be found, with mallet in hand, engaged in his favorite game. One morning while presiding over the police court a young boy was brought before him charged with playing ball in the street. The policeman who arrested the boy swore he had caught the boy in the act.

"Fine the boy $5," said the judge. "This ball playing on the street must be stopped."

The boy's father was present and suggested to the court that he would like to question the policeman a little before the fine was imposed. So Judge Snell ordered the policeman into the witness box again. After a few questions concerning the affair, finally admitted that the boys were playing ball on a vacant lot, and this boy had batted the ball out into the street.

"Make that fine $2, Mr. Clerk," said Judge Snell. "The case is not quite so bad as I thought it was."

Then turning to hold the boy's father, "not long ago up on Twelfth street I saw a game of croquet in which a high court official was engaged, and I saw that official joyfully knock his opponent's ball clear across the street, and"—

"Take off that other $3, Mr. Clerk. I don't believe I can afford to play croquet after all." And the judge lay back in his chair and laughed heartily as he remembered what a whack he gave his opponent's ball in the game referred to.—Washington Star.

A Clerical Referee.

"Parson," said Poker Jack, doffing his slouch hat respectfully, "would you mind tellin me who it was that wrote 'Let dogs delight to bark an bite?'"

"Certainly not," replied the new pastor of the little church at Rattlesnake Diggins. "I am delighted to see the people of our settlement begin to take an interest in such matters. It was Dr. Watts."

"Then I've lost," said Poker Jack dispondantly. "I bet the drinks fur the crowd it was Shakespeare. Mornin, parson."—Chicago Tribune.

The Whole Thing.

"No," said the prosperous gentleman with the large diamond and both feet on the car seat, "you can hunt a seat in another car. I am not going to bother myself for so many passengers."

"Sir," said Mr. Barnes Turner, with fine courtesy, "I would rather be a ham actor than act the hog."—Indianapolis Journal.

"Shall you keep a latchkey, my dear?" asked Mr. Newlywed of his up to date wife.

"Certainly not. You men are so fond of late hours I shall expect you to sit up and let me in."—Detroit Free Press.

"Is she very lovely?"

"Ah! I can give you no idea how very lovely, except that it is between $9,000,000 and $3,000,000."—Detroit Tribune.

TAILOR MADE GOWNS

THEY ARE MORE THAN HOLDING THEIR OWN WITH OTHER FANCIES.

Description of Model Costumes—Popularity of Postilion Backs and Strap Seams. Leading Winter Silks—The Stock Collar. New Shoe Styles.

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, —In spite of the fanciful Louis XVI race the tailor gown is more than holding its own. Some of the neatest and most tasteful costumes of this season are tailor made, and for them there is a revival of two old details. One is the strap seams and the other the cunning little postilion back. The tailor suits are made silkes of smooth and rough surfaced goods. The smooth materials generally used comprise cheviots, tweed, kersey, covert suitings, serge, cravenette and fine broadcloth. The smooth ones only have the lapped strap seams. The woolly goods are made with smooth pressed seams. Hussar trimming and rows with buttons are also very often done in thick castle braid. A very stylish tailor suit had a plain round skirt, not reaching the ground by an inch. The sleeves were medium gigots, with two buttons at the wrist. The basque was cut with a centerpiece forming the middle of the postilion. The side gores were cut separate from the rest of the postilion to insure a perfect fit. The front part had one dart each side and a centerpiece fitting the outline and narrowing to a point in front, extending below the waist in the little strap points, simulating a vest. The basque was formed by two pieces of the cloth cut to fit and neatly stitched. Across the front were 12 straps, six on each side, and three rows of buttons, the center row put on first and a half below the others, both straps buttoned to the center line of buttons, which brought the straps to a becoming series of points. A stylish military coat of the same material was prepared to wear with this, the same idea in strap trimming being carried out.

In rough checked or bouclé mixtures of several dull colors, there was another model costume for a tailor suit. The skirt was laid in two flat folds each side of the front breadth. The bias was stitched down from the outside, and at the left hip it extended out in a sharp lap, with two enormous buttons on it. The back of the skirt was laid in two box plaits. The sleeves were drooping leg o' mutton shape. The basque was double breasted and closed invisibly save for two buttons at the shoulder like those at the skirt. It was pointed in front and had a postilion at the back, finished with a little soutache braid and two buttons each point of the postilion. With this gown there was a short cape of rough plaid with high boucle curls on each plaid. Four buttons and two pointed straps were held it across the chest. I think it is safe to say that 19 out of 20 tailor suits will have postilion backs. Some are like these, others are like the Louis XVI coat of 10 inches long and about 6 wide, with rows of small buttons and loops of soutache braid. They are neat and yet very dressy.

The Louis XVI revival is very curiously growing in favor and are as certainly pretty, but one hardly feels like taking them seriously. They are something too finicky and frivolous about them, but folks are going to wear them.

A very handsome gown after this kind was made by a leading house this week. The skirt was of ashes of rose satin duchames, in the circular style. The bottom was quilted and had a narrow ruche of the same shade—a very neat piece of work it was too. The vest was of silver gray silk mull, with a row of point lace down side, of which there was a little cutaway of rich satin brocade, gray ground, with superb crimson roses and foliage for pattern. On each side were three chased gold buttons, and for a collar there was a wreath of roses, shaded from pale pink to crimson. With this went a silver gray pressed cloth Eton coat. Around this was a wreath of large roses, and on the crown were three large black plumes.

I see that fashdames is to be the leading winter silk. Its superb texture and rich appearance ought to make it popular, particularly for those gowns all of one material. It is far heavier than the grosse faille, or even satin duchesse. It is shown in all the newest colorings. It will stand alone when folded. I note that fur will be largely used to trim handsome home gowns, ivory white having brown or black fur upon it. The effect is very rich and becoming. Fashion says that there will be nothing new in the way of sleeves nor collarettes in silk, satin, moire and velvet. One may think white velvet would not make an effective gown. Wait until you see one edged with Alaska sable and strewn with fine cut jet beading and fringe before you express an opinion.

The stock collar with its wings, bows, loops and rosettes is back again and to stay all winter without doubt. Shoes are longer, narrower and more pointed than they were. Some are laced and some are buttoned. Slippers are too various to mention.

THE

New York Times.

THE TIMES is a newspaper for intelligent men and women who want to read all the news of the world every day. The paper has distinguished merit of its own. It is neither sensational nor dull. It is not sour-tempered. It is not frivolous or visionary. It sees plenty of good in the world and tells about it. It tells of the bad when it must, but not unwholesomely. It prints with fulness the record of human endeavor in many fields outside of business, politics and war—in literature, religion, science, art, sports, and household matters. No paper in the country prints so many book reviews and so much book news. No paper has so complete a financial page—a daily manual for investors and officers of financial institutions. Its market reports—wool, cotton, breadstuffs, farm products, etc.—are the best in the country.

The Democracy of THE TIMES is of the old-fashioned sort—as old as Thomas Jefferson: majority rule, no bossism, no machine tyranny, the divorce of politics from private money-making, a sound currency, industrial emancipation, and every-day honesty. To promote the advance of the Democratic Party along these lines it labors with heart and conscience and all its might.

Is there any truth in that old saying that a green Christmas makes a fat graveyard?

Rahway has gone New Brunswick one better in the matter of cleaning streets. Tramps now perform that labor in that town.

There seems to be a consolidation fever epidemic. The Somerset Democrat advocates the consolidation of Somerville and Raritan.

The turkeys who were left over from Thanksgiving Day are now in as precarious circumstances as the missionaries in Armenia.—Augusta Chronicle.

Jersey is up and ready in time of war as well as peace. The Veteran Zouaves, of Elizabeth, have telegraphed to President Cleveland their willingness to go where he commands.

The news that free whiskey is wanted by some and prohibition by others comes all the way from Alaska. Alaska is progressing rapidly towards civilization.

Readers of The New York Sun may soon expect to hear of the gubernatorial canvass in Nebraska. A man with the euphonious name of Meikle-john is in the field for the nomination.

J. D. Chandlee, who has been editor of the New Brunswick Times since 1892, has retired and has been succeeded by Francis W. Daive. Mr. Chandlee was a vigorous and interesting writer.

Since Richard Croker failed to qualify as a Sachem of Tammany Hall, and John Sheehan was chosen to fill the office, the latter is now the conceded leader of that powerful political organization.

The Common Council of Trenton has decided to appoint a committee of citizens to investigate the accounts of the various city departments, on the charges of extravagance made by Councilman Baker. The officials asked for the investigation.

Resolutions have been presented in the City Council of Chicago providing for a three-cent fare for all street-car passengers not provided with seats and that additional fare shall be charged in the case of a passenger who takes a seat subsequently vacated.

Judge Pardee of the United States Circuit Court at New Orleans has rendered a decision in two test cases brought under the sugar bounty appropriation act, holding that the act is constitutional and that therefore the $5,000,000 appropriated by Congress to pay sugar bounty claims is illegally withheld by Comptroller Bowler, and should be distributed pro rata among those for whom it was intended. Judge Pardee said that Congress was the exclusive judge of the purposes to which money shall be applied, and after it had passed such an appropriation no court or officer had power to revise its action. The cases will immediately be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Senator Hill's bill to remove the disability of Confederate veterans for service in the army and navy of the United States has apparently struck an answering chord in the popular sentiment, irrespective of its obvious relation to the war talk in and out of Congress. The bitterness engendered by the civil strife of a past generation has been ameliorated and well-nigh forgotten, and the proposed enactment would only set the seal of public and official recognition to engagements of National accord between sections once hostile and estranged. The Confederates were great fighters, and their services would be gladly tendered if the Republic should on occasion require them.—Newark News.

It seems probable that an effort will be made in the Legislature this Winter to cut off from Somerset county the borough of North Plainfield and annex it to Union county for the purpose of creating a greater Plainfield. Somerset will resist this move, as to lose North Plainfield would be to part with a most valuable slice of the county. Doubtless there is a feeling among the more progressive citizens of North Plainfield that they would fare better if united to Union county. The action of Somerset's Board of Chosen Freeholders in refusing to take advantage of the State Aid Road law has to a certain extent soured up to-date people on our too conservative county authorities, but the best place to cure that defect is at the ballot box. North Plainfield ought to stay in Somerset.—Bound Brook Chronicle.

Editor Runyon is eight years ahead of Plainfield. Wonderful! It must be so, because he says so himself.

Assemblymen-elect Codington and Reed ought to and doubtless will come in for good committee places in the Legislature soon to assemble.

From time immemorial it has been an unwritten, but none the less effective, law that lawyers should uncover their heads when addressing a court. But with the advent of the woman lawyer a new code of decorum and reverence seems imminent. In the Court of Chancery at Jersey City, yesterday, Miss Mary Philbrook, New Jersey's first woman lawyer, asked the court if it would be necessary for her to remove her hat. The court replied in the negative. Some of the other lawyers were unkind enough to say that they thought she asked if her bonnet was on straight.

A DEFENCE OF THE MICROBE.

The following is a newspaper report of a paper read by a Vassar girl on Bacteria, and is especially interesting to Plainfielders now that so much discussion is going on about this subject:

Miss Bessie Eliza Boyd, who is already known to fame for two or three recent magazine articles on bacteria, cheered and encouraged every bacteria hater present by a bright and vigorous defense of the dreaded microbe. "Bacteria are dreaded as mankind's most insidious foe, the deadliest and most cunning foe," she said. Thanks to that little learning which is a dangerous thing most people regard microbes, according to Miss Boyd, as venomous beasts going about seeking whom they may devour. "Every cubic inch of space," she said, "teems with deadly bacilli. Microbes lurk with fell intent in every glass of milk. They riot in the dust of the roads and swim in the Croton water. But when science comes to cast up the account between humanity and bacteria there will be found a balance in favor of bacteria. If they destroy life they also support it. Natural processes are largely dependent upon bacteria. Decomposition, fermentation and even digestion would not go on without bacteria. Nature for every new creature must sacrifice an old one. Her materials are limited and must be continually transformed. The particles which compose us were used before for other creatures. The one of us who is supposed to have the least of the old Adam may in reality have the most. All this transformation is the work of bacteria." Then Miss Boyd proceeded to particularize. She told of the efficient aid given the agriculturist by microbes and of their service in the making of butter. Cream is converted into sweet cream through the labor of bacteria. There are 250,000,000 of them to the drop. "With every slice of bread and butter," said Miss Boyd, "we must swallow as many microbes as there are people in Europe." She closed her defense of microbes by paraphrasing the nursery rhyme and saying that they were "our lambs, our bakers and our confectionstick makers." The applause which greeted this showed plainly that the American public as represented at Vassar, was only too glad to do justice to the maligned and slandered microbe.

Chicken Thieves Sent to Prison.

Judge Rice, of Middlesex, on Saturday sentenced Arthur and Peter Van Fleet to two years each in State Prison for larceny of fifty chickens from a farmer named Lingerman, residing near Dunellen. Both men have served terms at Trenton before for horse-stealing and burglary in Union and Somerset counties, and since their arrest the annoyance of petty burglaries in the vicinity of Dunellen has entirely ceased.

The members of the Richmond county hunt have made arrangements to send their hunters to F. C. Phoebus, of Greenbrook kennels, who will look after the horses and refit and school them for next season.

The pool players in the Park Club have a chance to show their abilities in that direction at the fourth annual handicap pool tournament which was started Saturday night. It is for club members only. Each contestant plays all the rest and the one with the highest average will be the victor. Those who have entered, and their handicaps are: Chas. H. Lyman, 0; Percy Sandford, 5; R. W. Erickson, Elston M. French, H. B. Reed, W. J. R. Thiers and Chas. A. Reed, 20; C. R. Thiers and George C. Worth, 25; B. E. Randolph and W. J. Douglass, 40.

The fourth annual handicap billiard tournament at the Park Club began Saturday night and will continue until Saturday, February 8th. Each contestant plays all the rest. The contestants and their handicaps are as follows: Augustus Van Deventer, 0; Charles H. Lyman, 10; J. T. Scott, 15; J. A. Alexander and Sandford H. B. Brooks, S. St. J. McCutchen, Wm. M. McCutchen, Chas. A. Reed, Samuel Townsend, Clarence Peck and W. J. R. Thiers, 30; Geo. T. Rogers and E. B. Day, 40.

THE BLUES.

Why do Women have the Blues more than Men?

[PORTRAIT OF "OUR LADY READERS."]

Are not women naturally as light-hearted, brave, and hopeful as men?

Yes; but woman's organism is different from man's.

Women in perfect or good health are rarely victims of this symptom.

When the female organs fail to perform their functions properly, when the dreaded female complaints appear, there is thown nervousness, sleeplessness, faintness, backache, headache, bearing-down pains, etc., causing the dreaded "let-me-alone" and "all-gone" feelings.

When the woman does not understand what the matter is, and her doctor can not or will not tell her, she grows morose and melancholy; that's the blues.

Mrs. Newton Cobb, of Manchester, Co., says: "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will correct all this trouble. I cannot praise it enough. I am pleased to tell every one that it has cured me; and if it will cure me, why not others? I am sure my case was severe enough." It will.

ROOSEVELTING THE BOROUGH

The Borough Council Take Action to Prevent City Butchers From Establishing Sunday Shops Across the Brook

At the special meeting of the borough council held Saturday evening the members assembled promptly at 7:30, the time set, and at once proceeded to transact the business on hand. The absentees were Councilmen Peck and Schutt. Clerk Arnold stated the call of the meeting which was to consider the report of the Fire Water and Lamp Committee in regard to the erection of a bell tower and the purchase of a bell in place of the gong now in use.

Mr. Valiant, for the chairman of the committee, Mr. Peck, stated that the North Plainfield Electric Light Co. who had been operating the steam fire whistle, had sold out to the Plainfield Electric Light Company, thus rendering the whistle useless. The committee had spent time in seeking another place for it, but could find none. The Plainfield Electric Light Co. had offered to place it on their station, but owing to the similarity in the sound of the whistles, the committee did not think it wise to accept the offer. Therefore in the best judgement of the committee, they suggested that a bell be secured, a tower erected and that fire department bonds be issued at as low a rate as possible, one bond to mature each year, till all were paid. The council received the report and it was paid.

Mr. Valiant then offered a resolution that the Fire, Water and Lamp Committee be authorized to secure bids for the erection of a tower, the purchase of a bell and report at the next meeting of the council. The resolution was adopted. Mr. Valiant stated further that the electric light plant where the fire gong is at present located would be changed January 1st, and he thought that during the interium some other arrangement would be necessary to give an alarm of fire. Accordingly he offered a resolution which was adopted, that the above committee be authorized to fix a temporary bell for that purpose. Mr. Lounsbury called the attention of the Council to the fact that Chief Marshal Van Horn had reported 114 electric lights out during the past two weeks, which is six per cent. more than under the former system. He thought that the service was very poor, as was also the lights. Acting on the suggestion of Mr. Valiant, Clerk Arnold will acquaint Cairman Peck, of the fire, water and lamps committee, with the facts and the matter will be attended to. Mr. Valiant offered a resolution that Borough Counsel Chas. A. Reed be directed to carry out the intent of a former resolution adopted, which provides for the revision and compilation of the laws of ordinances of the borough, and that the same be put in pamphlet form. The resolution was adopted.

At this point Mr. Lounsbury surprised the Council by offering a resolution that the Borough Counsel be instructed to draw up an ordinance that would close up all stores, including barber shops, in the borough, on Sundays. The resolution was adopted. Mr. Lounsbury stated that he saw no reason why persons with no moral intent whatever should be allowed to come from Plainfield into the borough and make a regular gala day on Sunday by running their stores full blast. This sort of thing was not allowed in the city, and should not be in the borough. He voiced the sentiments of the other members, who are heartily in favor of a strict observance of the Sabbath. There being no further business, the Council adjourned.

LINCOLN'S BOYHOOD.

The Story of the Poverty of His Early Home in Kentucky.

The Kentucky home into which the child came was a poor one. The cabin was not "the picturesque, vine clad one of the story books," says a resident of the country who has followed in detail the scenes of the president's early life, "but one standing out in a clearing. With only one small room, a door, a window, a stick chimney, with open cracks, through which swept the winds, the rain, the snows of winter and the swarms of mosquitoes in summer. We take an inventory of the furniture of that cabin—bunks, the mattress of dry leaves, the slab stools, the open fireplace. We note the absence of even the necessities of life—neither stove, window nor floor." The only one of Mr. Lincoln's early acquaintances now living, Mr. Austin Gollaher, said to a representative of this magazine in describing the poverty of these early surroundings:

"At the time of Abraham's birth his father was away from home. Some of her neighbors who were with Mrs. Lincoln at the event learned that she was destitute of anything in the nature of food. Some of the ladies called on Judge William Creel on, one of the most prominent men of that time in this section, in Mrs. Lincoln's behalf, and he donated flour and other articles of food."

The picture is dark, but fortunately there are those who remember pleasanter things about it. Dennis Hanks and Solomon Graham, whose statements have already been quoted, says of some of the stories of the poverty in Thomas Lincoln's family:

"It is all exaggerated. Tom Lincoln, during his wife in an open shed in a winter when the wild animals left the woods and stood in the corners near the slick and clay of chimneys so as not to freeze to death, or, if climbers, they got on the roof. They had a cow and calf, milk and butter, a good feather bed; for I have slept in it while their took the buffalo robes on the floor, because I was a doctor. They had home woven 'kiverlids,' big and little pots, a loom and wheel, and William Hardesty, who was there, too, can say with me that Tom Lincoln was a man and took care of his wife."—Ida M. Tarbell in McClure's Magazine.

BISHOP POTTER'S IDEA.

A Fitting Punishment For the Man Who Tells a "Chestnut."

Bishop Potter, the dignified bishop of New York, is the joker of the house of bishops. He is always looking for a chance to make some of his brethren of the cassock the object of a little harmless laughter. It is said he revels in that of the august body to which he belongs. At almost any time when the house is not in session he is the center of a little group of clergymen and he is happy to whom he is telling one of his droll stories. His slow yet easy manner of narration and the drooping eyelids, which remind one of Mgr. Satolli, add greatly to the effect of his anecdotes.

The accommodating bishop of Iowa introduced a Journal man to Bishop Potter one morning while he was regaling two of his associates with an account of a device of his own invention for the suppression of story tellers who deal in ancient tales.

"Do you know what I say of reporters in New York?" asked the bishop.

The reporter ventured a conjecture that it was nothing of a complimentary nature.

"Why, I say, 'Take them out and slay them,'" replied the bishop.

Then he went on with his story.

"Some of us were talking the other night," he proceeded slowly, "about people who tell old stories at dinners. I suggested that it would be a happy idea for the host to provide each guest, placed in a group of palms and flowers in the center of the table and have this chestnut connected with a mechanical contrivance which would explode by a button placed at each guest's seat. When any one was telling a story, the moment a guest recognized the ear marks of age he would press the button, and the chestnut would leap up in the center of the table. And then he would be silenced? Oh, no. He would turn to the interrupter and say, 'Finish it.' If he were not able to do it, he would be fined a liberal amount. If he could finish it, the man who began it would be fined, but in all cases the fines are to go to foreign missions."—Minneapolis Journal.

Origin of the Loving Cup.

There is an inquiry as to the origin of the loving cup. The accepted account of its creation comes from the late Lord Lyons, British ambassador at Paris. According to his narrative, King Henry of Navarre, who was also Henry IV of France, while hunting became separated from his companions, and feeling thirsty called at a wayside inn for a drink of wine. The serving maid on handing it to him as he sat on horseback neglected to present the handle. Some wine was spilled over, and his majesty said that the handle be added. While riding home he bethought him that a two handled cup would prevent a recurrence of this, so his majesty had a two handled cup made in the royal collection and sent it to the inn. On his next visit he called again for wine, when, to his astonishment, the maid, having received instructions from the king, when he very careful of the king's cup, presented it to him, holding it herself by each of its handles. Hence the custom of passing the king of a cup with three handles, which was promptly acted upon, as his majesty quaintly remarked, "Surely out of three handles I shall be able to find one." Hence the loving cup.—Philadelphia Times.

Comet Tails and Terrestrial Peer.

Count Tafe is an Irish peer. He is the eleventh Baron Ballynote and Viscount Taafe, creations which date from 1628, in the reign of Charles I. His elder brother, on whose death in 1877 he succeeded to the family honors, proved his claim to vote at the election of Irish representative peers before a committee of privileges of the house of lords. The number of Irish peers at present is 174. Of these 85 are peers of the United Kingdom. Two remaining 89, of whom Viscount Taafe is one, are peers of Ireland only. That the Irish peerage is a rapidly diminishing body may be proved from the fact that no fewer than 203 peers of Ireland have been created by George III alone.—Westminster Gazette.

Suspicious Sage.

One of the stories told of Russell Sage is that when a thief one day dropped a bill near him in order to draw his attention from counting some money he had drawn at the bank, Sage, after picking up the bill, thanked his informant, finished his count, stowed his own money securely away and then smilingly put the thief's bill also in his pocket.

A MISSION ESTABLISHED.

Col. Hadley's Meetings Arouse Interest for the Victims of Drink.

The very successful evangelistic meetings which have been held at Reform Hall during the past week, under the leadership of Col. Hadley, came to an end Sunday afternoon. The meeting in the afternoon was a rousing one and every available space in Reform Hall was packed with the large crowd that attended.

After a very impressive talk, Col. Hadley brought up the question of regularly establishing a mission in Plainfield. He stated that he had three checks for $50 each for the rent of the vacant store at 224 West Front street, formerly occupied by F. S. Rose, hardware dealer, from January 1st to April 1st. And that if a like amount could be raised to pay the necessary running expenses, the Chinatown Men's Mission will establish a Plainfield branch for a trial of three months. By a rising vote the audience unanimously decided to support the new movement and a number of subscriptions were received. The meeting then adjourned to meet Monday evening, January 13th, at the new mission when it will be opened. Meanwhile it will be put in condition for its new work.

Presents to Instructors.

Previous to the Christmas exercises at the North Plainfield public school Friday morning the members of the graduating class met in the library where John H. NEW YORK TRIBUNE.

Leader of the Republican Party.

1896.

Are You Willing to Listen to a Suggestion?

The New York Tribune's broad columns and large print make it the ideal paper to carry to and read, either on the cars or at home.

Henry Romeike, proprietor of the largest newspaper clipping bureau in the world, testifies in a published card, that his clippings for over 4,000 clients show that The Tribune contains, "day by day and week by week, far more original matter than any daily newspaper in New York City." He proves the fact by figures. The Weekly ranks the same.

Thirteen men find a splendid position in The Tribune absolutely without an equal. The Tribune is the only newspaper in New York City whose reporters actually visit all the different markets in person.

The Tribune now prints the best and freshest pictures obtainable of the day from the comic press of two continents, and supplies plenty of other entertainment.

By long odds the strongest and correspondence, its able editorials and high literary character, The Tribune maintains a manifold position in the regard of Republicans and lovers of music, art, and good books.

The Tribune's society news is known everywhere for its fullness. The Tribune's fine articles on fashion are of special value, and changes of style are, as a rule, foretold in The Tribune before they appear in the Republican fashion.

As for Farming and Labor, The Tribune has for 50 years demanded, and yet demands, that every possible dollar's worth of food and comfort be consumed by the American people, shall be produced by the American people. For this reason The Tribune labors in the various editions and days in every year.

Judge for yourself if you are a newspaper lover. He who reads The Tribune is wide-awake, in touch with the world, and has a ready source of the confidence of business and social friends. If you are a young man, you will find in a reliable Republican guide, counselor of that which is best if you feed your mind upon newspapers. Read it and grow vigorous and healthy.

Think for a moment of the people who read newspapers of that class. On the other hand, The Tribune has probably the largest clientele of the very people who can help to improve a young man's position, of any newspaper in the United States. Associate yourself with them.

Mr. Horr continues to write for The Tribune. Sample copies free. Daily, $10 a year, $3 a month; Sunday, separately, $2. Semi-Weekly, $2. Weekly, $1. Tribune Almanac for 1896, 25 cents.

THE REVOLVER WAS LOADED.

BUT A CAREFUL YOUNGSTER SAYS HE DIDN'T KNOW IT.

Pointed it at His Brother, Pulled the Trigger and There Was a Miraculous Escape From a Sudden and Sad Death.

The revolver that "wasn't loaded" came very near having another victim this morning, when Raymond Mc-Murtry accidentally shot his brother Clarence in the back. The shooting occurred in the sitting room of the home of the father of the two young men, J. B. McMurtry, of 175 Somerset street, at 7:20 o'clock this morning.

Last Friday Mr. McMurtry was examining a .38-calibre, self-cocking revolver and placed it under the lounge in the sitting room for safe-keeping. This morning Raymond, his fourteen-year-old son, found the revolver and began to examine it. Not supposing that it was loaded he pointed it at his older brother Clarence and pulled the trigger, as he had often done before with Mr. McMurtry's other firearms which were not loaded. The cartridge was exploded and the ball just missed Mr. MacMurtry's head, who was sitting at the table.

Clarence is nineteen years old and is employed at the Scott Press Works. He had on a very heavy ulster which hung loosely on his body. The bullet struck him on the left shoulder, but the ulster and the heavy clothing he wore checked its force so that it merely cut a gash in the flesh and rebounded.

Dr. Zeglio was called and dressed the wound. He said that it was one of the most miraculous escapes he had ever seen. When the shot was fired the two young men were not fifteen feet apart.

SINGING CHRISTMAS CAROLS

SPECIAL SERVICES HELD IN THE CHURCHES YESTERDAY.

Music Was a Prominent Feature of the Programmes, and the Edifices Were Decorated With Fine Flowers.

From the Press of December 26.

The effort put forth at Trinity Reformed church yesterday towards an appropriate observance of Christmas Sunday, was an ideal one in every particular, and the church never looked more beautiful. It was a sight that one would have to look upon to appreciate. The words "Christ is Born," in large letters with a gilt background were attractively placed across the upper part of the large organ, while in front suspended over the pulpit was a handsome star of evergreens and holly berries. Surrounding the platform were placed large quantities of evergreen forming a perfect bank. There was also a pleasing arrangement of cut flowers and palms.

Probably the most artistic decorations ever witnessed in the city were to be seen in the body of the church. A large, handsome evergreen bell with silver clapper was gracefully suspended from the centre point, at the top of which numerous evergreen ropings were suspended. These were attached to the various columns, between which were smaller evergreen bells with silver clappers. Small bunches of evergreen neatly arranged around the sides of the church between the windows completed the picture, which could not have been improved upon.

Special music by a choir of twenty voices under the direction of F. S. Cutter, director, and A. L. Titsworth, organist, rendered an exceedingly choice programme, as published in these columns.

There were solo parts by Miss Etta Krymer, Miss MacMurray, Robert Clark and F. S Cutter, which were rendered in a thoroughly pleasing manner. The entire choir showed careful training, which is due to Mr. Titsworth, organist.

Rev. Cornelius Schenck preached an appropriate sermon which was listened to with deep interest.

The choir was composed of the following persons: Sopranos—Miss Etta Krymer, Mrs. J. C. Van Dyke, Mrs. J. S. Cutter, Mrs. F. E. Woodruff, Mrs. J. T. MacMurray, Miss MacMurray; altos—Miss Lizzie Dunn, Mrs. George Saums, Miss Emma Gillem, Mrs. F. S. Cutter, Miss Minnie Williams; tenors—Robert Clark, Bradley Hall, Henry Williams, Joseph Moon, T. R. Van Zandt; bassos—F. S. Cutter, John Steiner, A. J. Moore and C. Weston.

Great credit is due F. S. Cutter for the selection of such an excellent choir; also Harry C. Van Emburgh, R. A. Meeker, Miss Lizzie Dunn and Mrs. J. C. Van Dyke for their earnest work in decorating the church, which excelled in artistic beauty any previous efforts.

In the evening the exercises were in charge of the Sunday-school, and consisted of singing by the choir and school, Scripture reading by Assistant Superintendent F. E. Smith, prayer and short address by the pastor, and also a few remarks by E. E. Anthony, the Superintendent.

"How Christ Would Keep Christmas" was the title of a letter written by Rev. F. E. Clark, and published in the Golden Rule. It was read by Edgar Sheppard. An entertaining feature of the evening was the singing and recitations by the primary department, as follows:

Recitation—A Christmas Prayer. Albert Yaeger

Recitation—It Was Years and Years Ago. Pauline Buckley

Singing—Manger Song.....School

Recitation—Gift of Gifts.....Luther Sheppard

Recitation—Gifts for Jesus.....Ten little girls

Lucy Coriell, Minnie Nischwitz, Etta Trembly, Maibi Vanderhoff, Ruth Berg, May Anthony, Pauline Buckler, Dora Wilson, Bessie Randall, Anna Holder.

Singing—While Shepherds Watched Their Flocks.....School

Recitation—Daisy.....Bessie Randall

Mrs. J. M. Tier, their Superintendent, felt proud of her little flock last evening, and well she may, for they acquitted themselves nobly, and gave evidence of careful, patient training.

The Christmas Day services at St. Stephen's church will be as follows:

First Celebration of Holy Communion, 7:30 a. m. Morning prayer, 10:30 a. m. Second Celebration and sermon, 11 a. m.

The music at the second celebration will be:

Introit—Hymn 81.....Mendelssohn

Kyries and Gloria.....Gilbert

Offertorium.....Clare

Sursum Corda, Sanctus, Benedictus, Gilbert Agnus Dei.

Venite Adoremus.

Gloria in Excelsis, old chant.

Retrocessional—Hymn 61.....LeJeune

The Christmas exercises of the Sunday-school of the First M. E. church, were held last evening. The front of the interior of the church was decorated with greens and holly, while arranged partly in the greens over the organ loft and partly suspended in the air were gilt letters forming "His Name Shall be Called Wonderful Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

A star formed of a great number of small gas gets glittered just above the heads of the choir. The instrumental music was rendered by Miss Jessie Uzter, organ, Mr. Martin A. Korff and Clarence Mills, violins, aDaniel E. Davis, trombone and Raymond A. McGee, cornet. A large chorus choir led the singing and rendered several anthems.

The programme was as follows: Anthem by the choir "There were Shepherds," invocation, scripture reading, recitation by Roland Horne, singing by school "'Tis Christmas," primary department exercise "Joy Bells," singing by the school "Lo! He Comes," scripture reading, recitation by Frank Bingham, singing by school "Pure and Holy," recitation "The First Christmas" by Edna Moore, offertory, recitation "The King and the Wise Men" by Rita Pond, singing by sch ol "Happy Christmas Bells," short address by Rev. C. R. Barnes, D. D., singing by sch ol "Sweet Christmas Time," benediction.

Under the direction of Wm. E. MacClyment organist, the choir of the First Presbyterian church assisted by an orchestra of twelve pieces presented a Christmas musical service in that church last evening. The congregation was very large. The church was prettily decorated with evergreens and an attractive sight was a large star illuminated with incandescent lights. This was suspended over the pulpit platform.

The programme was rendered as published in these columns, with the exception of a soprano solo, "Christ's Child," by Miss Glen, and was enjoyed by the audience. There was no sermon by the pastor, short scripture selections taking the place of it.

Christmas Sunday was very pleasantly observed yesterday morning at the Congregational Church. The church was prettily decorated with greens and flowers, and a large congregation listened to special music well rendered by the choir and an instrumental quartette, and to an excellent sermon by the pastor, Rev. Charles Lyman Goodrich, on the subject, "Isaiah's vision of Christ."

The Sunday-school held its special exercises in the afternoon. The music was furnished an instrumental sextette, Messrs. Conde and Paronbok, violins, Mr. Menzel, 'cello, Mr. Clauss, flute, Mrs. M. E. Dwight, piano, Mrs. B. T. Barnes, organ. There was an instrumental trio and a quintette, besides the special Christmas carols. The primary department gave a pleasing exercise entitled "Joy Bells." Those who took part in it were the Misses Edna Scheyd, Edith Glaentzer Ethel Van Zandt, Ethel Weseman, Mildred Day, Marion Dwight and Laura Baker. There was also a solo by Miss Agnes LaBoyteaux and chorus by the Misses Caroline Fuller, Edith Robinson, Marion Sheldon and Hattie Messersmith.

The Christmas exercises of the Seventh-Day Baptist church were held yesterday morning. Several Christmas anthems were sung by the choir. Miss Violet Truell assisted in the instrumental selections with her violin. Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis preached a sermon appropriate to the occasion. The church was prettily decorated with palms and greens.

TALKING FOR THE ARMENIANS

A MINISTER SAYS ENGLAND IS RESPONSIBLE FOR HER CONDITION.

Essentially England is a Mohammedan Government, Because the Rules Most Subjects of That Belief Than Any Other.

At the festal Christmas season, when we are surrounded with happiness and good cheer, then it is surely fitting that we turn our thoughts to those to whom the Christmastide will not bring the same blessings. A very interesting service was held Friday in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church. It was called an "Armenian Relief Service," and was a union of Grace Episcopal, Crescent Avenue and the Congregational church.

Dean Rodman was the first speaker. He told of the extreme antiquity of the Armenian church, it having been founded by St. Gregory in 300 A. D. Ever since its history has been one of persecution and suffering. We might not care to worship with them in their own manner, but at least they have convinced the Christian world of their honesty. When the starving people were offered food by the Sultan if they would become Mohammedans, they preferred to die, and keep the faith.

We busy ourselves in these days over a miserable boundary line in Venezuela, instead of thinking what can be done for our afflicted brethren in Armenia. May God help us to see our whole duty to them, and then to do it!

Rev. C. L. Goodrich was expected to be present and to speak on mission work in Armenia, but he was detained by illness.

Rev. J. R. Richards followed, giving a vivid description of the sufferings of Armenia from Turkey. England, he said, is responsible for the existence of Turkey, therefore, indirectly responsible for these atrocities. England is a Mohammedan Empire, if counted by numbers; the Queen rules more Mohammedan subjects than Christians.

There has been nothing in the nature of a revolt in Armenia; they are not a warlike people; they have no arms in their hands. It is almost incredible that in this age men can shut up helpless women and children in a church and then set fire to the building. And the leaders in these outrageous proceedings are decorated and honored by the Turkish Government. It makes it hard to keep one's Christian temper!

Perhaps the most unfortunate thing about our temporary misunderstanding with England is we cannot believe it is more than that, is that it turns our thoughts from this more important subject. If we must fight, let us strike a blow against wrong and injustice, instead of for a few miles of territory, far away in South America.

A collection was taken for the work of the Red Cross Society in Armenia, and a committee was appointed to consider any further method of help that might be brought up. The committee will consist of Dean Rodman, Mayor Gilbert and Isaac L. Miller.

ANOTHER DAGO OUTRAGE.

A Brutal Italian Assaults a Woman in the Borough.

Tony Armte, an Italian boarding on Race street, attempted a dastardly assault on Mrs. Hobbie, of 218 Grove street, Saturday night about 8:30 o'clock, as she was returning home through Grove street after doing some shopping.

The man accosted her, threw her in the gutter and attempted to tear her clothes off. Mrs. Hobbie was so frightened that she was hardly able to make her cries for help heard. William Perrine and William Freese happened to be near and responded at once. They took charge of the man and started for the lockup, when they met Chief VanKirk. He locked the man up and this morning Justice Crosley gave him a hearing. He was committed to the Somerville jail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

NOTHING LEGAL IN THE WAY.

Corporation Counsel Marsh Says the Use of Sewage Beds Can be Commenced.

There is no reason why the Common Council will not grant the North Avenue people the privilege of using the sewers at once. At least, so Corporation Counsel C. A. Marsh told a Daily Press reporter this morning. Now that Expert Hazen has declared the system in condition to use, as Mr. Marsh says there is no legal reason for their non-operation. He also said he did not fear an injunction from the Dunellen people. Should the Council refuse the permission, however, Mr. Marsh will not reprimand the city at the trial, as the city is in no way concerned.

Work was begun early this morning on the street connections on North avenue and they will be finished in a few days.

THE CAST OF A BELL.

It Is an Interesting Process Which Few Founders Have Mastered.

The operation of casting a bell is a most interesting one. The flask wherein and wherein the mold is made consists of two parts constructed of boiler iron of a general bell form and plentifully perforated with holes for escaping gas while the molten one being so much less in size than its follow as to give space for the loam forming around the mold between the two. No "setters," as the term is generally used, is provided. The two parts of the mold are "swept" by "formers," accurately finished from thin iron to the form intended for the inside and outside surfaces of the bell. These "formers" are mounted and rotated over the applied loam. Five courses of loam and clay are successively applied, "swept" and baked, to complete each mold. Before this work is done, however, the inner flask is wound near the top with a rope made of hay. As the shrinkage is very great at the casting and baking, difficulty would be met with in getting the flask and loam out of the nearly parallel inside top. This "cylinder" of hay, by taking this destructible base, which permits the collapse of the loam after the heat of the metal has consumed the hay.

The flasks are then laid on the flasks are. Loam, a mixture of loam, fire clay and manure; two successive coatings of powdered the clay, and, lastly, a thin coating of brick and fine clay combined with flour-dry facing. Each of these coatings is baked in an oven before the succeeding one is applied. The coatings are "swept" by the formers, as applied, both in the inner and outer flasks, by careful adjustments as to thickness of materials, so that when the exterior mold is placed over the interior a space corresponding to the intended thickness and shape of the bell shall exist. Inscriptions or embellishments to be made upon the bell are provided for with the last coating by means of a "knurl," or wheel, having the desired motto raised upon its periphery, the wheel being carefully rolled around the flask surface and leaving its imprint in the clay. Other designs are impressed from dies of the required ornament, and the usual "beading" is accomplished by notches in the edge of the sweep.

The two parts of the flask being placed together are firmly held in position by many clamps, the interspace of hot bell metal to squeeze through and force a separation of flasks being very great. As the mold pours molten metal a fire is started in a near by reverberatory furnace, in which is placed the desired charge of copper, and when the copper is melted the tin is added in its proportion. The melted metal being ready, the furnace is tapped, the bright stream caught in a huge ladle swung over the mold by a crane and poured into the open mouth of the mold until it is filled. After cooling and removal from the mold the bell is usually polished with sand and water in special revolving grinding machines, the sounding and clapper, the yoke and wheel are now attached and the whole suspended in its frame. In making a million bells after completion, they are separately set up and regularly tested by skilled bell ringers, from the permanent chiming stand of the foundry.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

A CURIOUS LOVE STORY.

It All Began With a Punch In the Nose and Ended Happily.

Here's a curious story of love and courtship: A few years ago a young gentleman of this city was in Savannah, got into a street car with a heavy umbrella under his arm. Like a great many other careless people, he held it at a dangerous angle, with the point sticking out behind him, and ere long the car gave a lurch and a lady just behind him emitted an ear splitting yell. Everybody jumped and looked, and to his horror the young man found that the point of his umbrella had come in contact with the nose of the young lady seated just behind him. Of course he apologized, or tried, but it was like apologizing for murder over the body of the victim, for the lady's nose was bleeding and she was much in convulsions with pain.

The car was stopped at the next corner, where there happened to be a drug store, and the young man in his anxiety to help the one or two elderly ladies, who at once took a lively interest in the case, helped the young lady off and into the store and posted off after a doctor. One was found, and the unlucky nose was soon put in working order, and the owner, attended by the married ladies, was sent home in a carriage.

The young man took her address and hunted up a mutual acquaintance, with whom he called the next day to see how the nose was getting along. The nose did well, so did the young man, for by the time the nose was out of danger, he had got in the habit of calling, so that it began to come natural for him to step around in the evening. So in the course of time they were married, and she is the only lady in the United States whose courtship began by a punch in the nose from her future husband.—Athens (Ga.) News.

Light Without Heat.

Heatless light for illumination is a possibility of the near future. Experiments have recently been continued with the well known Geissler tubes by which rarefied air or other gas is rendered luminous by an electric current. Recent investigations show that light sufficient to read by can be obtained in a practical way, although at an expenditure of considerably more power than is necessary for the incandescent or arc lights. There are indications, however, that some form of the Geissler tube will be developed for practical use. In surgery there can be no question as to its value, as by its use it will be possible to pursue investigations in the cavities of the human body which at present can only be imperfectly carried on, owing to the heat developed by the incandescent light.—Boston Transcript.

"Not a Lady."

Lord Carrington, when lord chamberlain, sometimes made mistakes, says Vanity. At one of the drawing rooms he announced Mrs. Whatshername as Lady Whatsurname. Recollecting shortly seeing his error, called out: "Don't kiss her ma'am. Don't kiss her. She's not a lady after all." It is only peeresses who, upon their presentation, is honored by their sovereign's embrace.

It is better that joy should be spread over all the day in the form of strength than that it should be concentrated into ecstacies, full of danger and followed by reactions.—Emerson.

ATTRACTED BY GOLD.

Coins and a Watch In a Man's Pocket Draw the Lightning.

An extraordinary case of lightning stroke fatality is reported from Shoeburyness, England. A man was walking along a footpath shaded by trees. As he was passing under the shade of a row of trees the lightning flash struck him. He was killed instantly.

No wound was apparent. The hair was singed short over the left side of the head. The left eyebrow and eyelashes and the left side of the mustache were practically gone. There were burns on the left cheek and over the abdomen. The burns were split into long vertical ribbons in both legs, but more especially along the line of the burns. The right pocket was blown to shreds. Its contents—about 3 shillings—were also were picked up at the time of removing the body.

In the left hand breast pocket of the deceased were found 37 sovereigns and 28 half sovereigns in a common leather, jaw opening purse, which had a metal rim and passed by means of a hinge. Nearly all the coins were wrapped up in separate pieces of thin paper, and the purse was tied up in a handkerchief. In the waistcoat pocket on the right side was a silver matchbox containing two unignited wax matches, also a silver Geneva watch. Two of the half sovereigns were slightly fused and adhering together. The sovereign purse, by fused on one side as though a splash of metal had been thrown on it.

Many of the coins were fused also many of the silver coins showed fusion of the milling of the edges only. The watch had a hole one-fourth of an inch in diameter through the case, close up the hinge, a splash of metal on the rim of the dome and another on the bow. The metal rim of the purse was fused inside, and the purse had a hole through one side of the leather.

There can be no doubt that the gold attracted the lightning. That the deceased not been immediately under the tree his head would probably not have been struck first, but the gold would have received the discharge direct. The path of the current was through the head to the largest burn on the left chest—close to the heart's apex—then on to the gold in the inner breast pocket, through the right trousers pocket—containing the silver—touching the watch on its way and giving a slight radiation toward the matchbox.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

CANADIAN LEGISLATORS.

It is a mistake to think that the act which led to the confederation of the various provinces in 1867 has attained the higher meaning in the life of the Canadian people than that of a constitutional union. It carries with it a meaning of far deeper import, and it bears, perhaps, offspring is oneness of patriotic aim and purpose. Of course it would be idle to say that the Canadian people are a unit upon all questions that are next to the life and growth of the Dominion. The geographical interests of Canada are so varied that there must necessarily be at times some little conflict of opinion of special needs and ambitions. This is the case at Washington. This is the case, too, in so small a confederation as the cantons of Switzerland.

A stranger visiting the gallery of the Canadian house of commons is struck with the dignity of the proceedings which mark the proceedings and surround even the warmest and keenest of debates. Parliamentary procedure being rigidly adhered to, there is little or no unseemly excitement, and which usually grow out of uncalled for personalities in the heat of a discussion. Sometimes, however, when the house has been sitting for a long time and the prolixities and incoherencies of some member from "way back," suddenly, as if through unity of desperation, the usual dignity of the house is relaxed and grave members from such intellectual centers as Montreal and Toronto play the schoolboy and cut up generally, so that the blue books at the heads of slumbering and inoffensive members.

Of the 215 members that make up the house of commons the point of ability and gifts 20 per cent of them are below mediocrity, 20 per cent occupy the plane of mediocrity, 40 per cent possess admitted ability and the remaining 20 per cent are men of commanding talents.—Donahoe's Magazine.

She Burned Her Hat.

An up town woman who leaves the gas in her room burning low all night because she is afraid in the dark met with a curious mishap last Sunday. When she returned from church Sunday morning, she laid her new fall hat across the top of the gas shade, as was her frequent custom, and went down to dinner. When she returned to her room, that hat was gone, while scorched around were blackened remnants of gayly colored ribbons and expensive straw. For some time she was at a loss to explain the disaster, but her attention was called to the little sickly flame still burning on the gas jet, which in the light of the morning she had forgotten to extinguish. The lesson might have been more potent had it not been for the ease with which her husband was induced to give up the price of a new hat.—Philadelphia Record.

He Had Time.

Mrs. Mann—Charles, you will have time today to see about getting some butter?

Mr. Mann—Really, don't see how I can. I've got so much to do today, you know.

Mrs. Mann—Oh, very well! I suppose I can go myself. And, by the way, if I am to go down town, you may as well give me $10 or so. I may as well do a little shopping while I am about it.

Mr. Mann—Come to think of it, I shan't be very busy today. I'll see about the butter.—Boston Transcript.

The Point of View.

Uncle—It is really awful that the young men nowadays contract so many debts.

Nephew—I think it a very perfect blessing. Otherwise they would never think of getting married.—Fliegende Blatter.

EX-MAYOR SAUNDERS' VIEWS

HE THINKS THE BOROUGH OFFICIALS ARE USING UNDUE HASTE.

There Should be More Courtesy Shown Between the Two Municipalities—Thinks the Court of Justice Will Not Sanction It.

Speaking to a Press reporter with reference to the action of the borough Board of Health ex-Mayor Saunders said:

The action taken by the authorities in North Plainfield against property holders using the North avenue sewer is much to be regretted. This is not an opportune time for such a course. The city of Plainfield has intelligently planned and forwarded a sewerage system which is expected to be in operation in a few weeks. This will take care of the North avenue sewer and prevent further contamination of the brook. To begin suits at this late date is as unwise as it is unfriendly and will be looked upon by a court of justice will sanction it. If our authorities would only spend the time, energy and money which they give to the North avenue sewer on the more important subject of providing a sewer age system for North Plainfield they would be doing greater service to the community."

In conversation with a Press reporter this afternoon Constructing Engineer Gavett, who has general supervision of the sewer work, said that personally he thought the most advisable thing for the property holders to do would be to make application to the sewer committee of the Common Council for the right to make immediate connections with the new sewerage system from the buildings which are now connected with the North avenue sewer. He said that the sewage beds would without a doubt be ready for use by the first of January, and thus obviate the whole trouble.

Frank J. Hubbard, the engineer, who has been at the sewer beds throughout their construction, told a Daily Press reporter this morning that as far as the work was concerned, part of the sewage beds would be ready to use by January 1st. The screening tank is in condition to use already, and will be fully completed before the 1st, and the only thing that is lacking is four hundred feet of the carrier pipe, from the tank to the beds, and that will also be completed in time.

He also remarked that some of the residents in Netherwood were as badly in need of a sewer as those of North avenue, although they are not in danger of a law suit, and in some cases like cost of cleaning the cesspools exceeds that of the rent, and several are in a very bad condition.

A NICAURAUGA EXHIBIT.

Interesting and Valuable Collection to be Seen at the Public Library.

Mrs. S. R. Struthers, of 917 Madison avenue, has very kindly loaned to the Free Public Library her interesting Nicaurauga collection. This collection has been placed in the reading room where it may be seen by all who are interested at any time during library hours. Accompanying it is a map, compiled from official sources, showing the exact location, etc., of the proposed canal.

Perhaps the most interesting features are the little images made by the Indians of Maraya showing the native costume, manner of carrying burdens, etc. Very interesting also is the valuable collection of photographs of Greytown and vicinity.

The whole collection is as follows: Water jar, stamps and coins from Costa Rica, Nicaurauga, Guatemala and Honduras, drinking cups clab orately carved, images made by the Maraya Indians, specimens of paper currency, paddles used by the natives in their canoes, bowl finely carved, made from the fruit of the calabash tree, sea beans and shells picked up on the coast, sharks teeth, postal cards of Costa Rica and Nicaurauga, native birds, collection of mounted photographs of Nicaurauga and vicinity.

Library hours: 9 to 13:8. m., 2 to 6 and 7 to 10, p. m., daily, excepting Sundays.

Good Business Tact.

The shrewd business tact of J. Fred *Mac Donald is evidenced in the man*ner in which he managed the assignment of Scheptlin, Schultz & Co., the wholesale clothing firm. He has just consummated the sale of the store which they occupied on West Front street to Mrs. Christian Scheptlin for $36,500. Real-estate men who claimed to know the price at which the build ing ought to sell, stated that $30,000 would be a good price for it.

Rathbone Sisters Elect.

The following officers were elected by Minerva Temple last night: M. E. chief, Mrs. William J. Ford; M. E. senior, Mrs. A. Bowman; M. E. J., Mrs. F. Haberle; M. of the T., Mrs. R. Mattis; M. of R. and C., Mrs. J. R. Buckle; M. of F., Mrs. M. M. Thatcher; P. of the T., Mrs. M. Stevens; O. G. of T., Mrs. E. Cox; P. C., Mrs. I. Boehm; installing supreme deputy P. C., Mrs. E. Moore; trustee, Mrs. M. McComas.

PARK CLUB ENTERTAINED.

AN INFORMAL VARIED PROGRAMME GIVEN LAST EVENING.

William N. Runyon Acted as Master of Ceremonies, and Was Obliged to Top Off the Event With One of His Songs.

There is a certain fascination about the Park Club that makes it one of the favorite resorts for old and young and its entertainments and dances all have that same attractiveness. The informal entertainment which was prepared by the House committee for last Friday was no exception to the rule.

The programme did not begin until nine o'clock but long before that time the audience began to flock to the club house. Some went down stairs to bowl or engage in billiards and pool, while others preferred to watch the animated scene from some point of observation. Those who did not care for either kinds of enjoyment gathered in groups about the main floor and conversed.

When the time arrived, there was a general exodus to the upper hall and then William N. Runyon, a member of the house committee, took the floor as master of ceremonies. After a few humorous remarks about the excellence of the entertainment which was to follow, and some who were to have taken part, Mr. Runyon announced a piano solo by Miss Alice Coard as the first number on the programme and it was exceedingly rendered. An enjoyable tenor solo by Elmer E. Runyon followed, and then Fletcher Hallock, accompanied by Miss Alice Coard on the piano, gave one of his delightful banjo solos. Alfred Holmes sang a baritone solo in a very pleasing manner and the first part closed with a well executed piano solo by Miss Whitney.

After an interval of five minutes, Elmer E. Runyon was announced and sang again most acceptably. Mr. Hallock then "performed," according to Mr. Runyon, and gave "mouthaphone" solo with banjo accompaniment. Another enjoyable piano solo by Miss Coard and one of Mr. Holmes's delightful baritone songs ended the programme. The audience was not satisfied however, and vehemently called for "Runyon" and "Romeo," so the master of ceremonies sat down at the piano and sang the plantive ballad of "Romeo and Juliet" as only he can sing it. And it was only after Mr. Runyon had been encored three times that he was allowed to make his escape.

The floor was then cleared and the audience spent the rest of the evening gliding about the waxed floor or enjoying the pleasures of the lower floor.

ANCESTRAL ACCOUNTS.

A novel, but very interesting, service was held in the Congregational church last Friday under the name of an "Ancestral Party." The meeting was led by Rev. C. L. Goodrich, the pastor. The National hymn, the Pilgrim Fathers, and several other appropriate hymns were sung, and then a number of the congregation told something of their ancestors, their adventures and trials. There were some who came over on the Mayflower and numerous brave men who fought through the Revolutionary War. There were fights, escapes, captures and other thrilling adventures told, and everyone of the large audience was sorry when the last ancestor had been brought to light.

Those who took part in the meeting and told something of the history of their forefathers were: William Van Alstyne, Robert Suffren, Miss Clark, G. S. Raynolds, J. E. Morse, Miss Butler, Mrs. Souther, William H. Sampson, J. M. Whiton and J. C. Whiting. Miss Nellie Davis was unable to be present and her account was read by Rev. Mr. Goodrich.

United in Wedlock.

Mrs. Nellie Jones, of Philadelphia, was united in marriage to Thomas W. Hurff, of Sewell, Camden county, yesterday afternoon at the home of the bride's brother, H. S. Thatcher, on East Fourth street. Rev. George Angleman performed the ceremony in the presence of only the immediate relatives. Mr. and Mrs. Hurff left soon after the ceremony for Sewell where they will reside.

Not There to Watch Boys.

The trustees of the First Presbyterian church ask The Press to deny the report that Officers Geise and Blackford were stationed at the church last Sunday evening to keep order and prevent loafing around the church. The report was probably founded on the fact that officers were stationed in the sheds several weeks ago in order to capture the thieves who had been stealing horse blankets and lap robes.

Thanks Offered.

The officers of the Children's Home return to the managers of the Kirmess and the Firemen's Fair their cordial thanks for their free entertainments of the children, also to A. Bartlett for the ton of coal sent by him.

President.

STUDIES LEFT IN THE LURCH.

Class of '96 Enjoy a Holiday Spread and Hear Bright Remarks.

Last Thursday the class of '96 of the High School assembled in the Stillman building to enjoy with the members of their own class and with their teachers an evening out of scholastic course.

At half past seven the class and their guests assembled around the large table, which was prettily decorated with flowers and handsome china. For nearly two hours the class sat and enjoyed themselves before the toasts were given.

Henry Eggerding gave a short essay as to the reason why Christmas was a better time to hold a festival of this kind than Thanksgiving time.

The first toast was given by Miss Caldwell, who represented the class of '97, and defended or tried to de*fend them against the charge which* was made against them by the senior class, which was made in the following quotation:

"So wise, so young, they say do ne'er live long."

Miss Caldwell made some very pat remarks concerning the class of '97 which were greatly appreciated.

The next number on the dinner cards called for the class poem, which was written and given by the author, Charles M. Dolliver, the class poet. In this poem the author jibed several of the members of the class and some of the teachers, but in a friendly and good natured way.

Mr. Travell gave the toast on the subject of "Class Loyalty," which was suggested by this quotation: "Then come the wild weather, come sleet or come snow, we'll stand by each other however it blow."

The class history was given by Miss Bessie Cahoone, the class historian. In this history many of the old happenings of the class were spoken of which had almost been forgotten, but as soon as the historian mentioned them they came before the class in a vivid array.

The prophecy was given by Miss Grace E. Overton, who read it for the prophetess, Miss Sallye Swayze.

Wilbur F. Cornwell was the toast master and introduced the speakers. The rest of the evening was spent in social introcourse and enjoying charades and other interesting games. Before the company broke up, all gathered about the piano, both class and teachers, and entered into a hearty song. Some of the old and familiar college songs were sung.

MARRIED IN MT. OLIVE.

Cupid's Darts Pierce Two Hearts and a Nuptial Knot is Tied.

One of the prettiest weddings ever witnessed in the Mt. Olive Baptist church, was performed by the pastor Rev. P. S. Gibson last Friday. The contracting parties were Miss Minnie Carey, daughter of Mrs. Belle Carey, and Forest Jones, coachman for E. B. Day, of Central avenue.

Commencing at 8 o'clock, Horatio Randolph, the organist, rendered several choice selections until the bridal party arrived at 8:30. The bride was becomingly gowned in white silk, prettily trimmed with silk lace, white satin ribbon and pearl ornaments. She also wore a tulle veil and carried a bouquet of white roses. The bridemaid, Miss Julia Randolph, was gowned in white silk trimmed with silk lace, and carried pink roses. The best man was Joseph Randolph. The ushers, W. Brown, Burrill Gibson, Charles Barber and William Jones preceded the party and the bride entered leaning on the arm of William J. Douglass, who gave her away. Preceding them was the best man and bridemaid. They seperated on entering the church, the groom walking up the aisle with the best man. At the altar a circle was formed, after which the bride and groom were united in marriage.

Mendelssohn's wedding march was rendered while the bridal party were entering and leaving the church. After the ceremony they were taken to the home of Mrs. Maun, on Plainfield avenue, where a reception followed, which was largely attended.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones received many handsome presents, including a bed room suit, toilet set and a set of silverware, from the groom's employer, and numerous other useful articles for housekeeping. The bride and groom will reside at 345 Cottage place, the home of the groom's mother.

Election in Unity Lodge.

Unity Lodge, No. 102, K. of P., held its annual election of officers last evening, which resulted as follows: Chancellor commander, Frank Putnam; vice-chancellor, J. D. Anderson; master of work, J. W. A. Bauersachs; master of exchequer, Amos Andrews; keeper of records and seals, A. B. Dunavan; master of finance, Jeremiah Van Winkle, Jr.; prelate, F. Green; master-at-arms, J. S. Jones; trustee, B. Thatcher; representative to the grand lodge, I. N. Wyckoff; alternate, B. Thatcher. After the election a collation was served and a good time was enjoyed by all.

HIS LAST WALK WAS TO DEATH

TRACK WALKER BRISKO FATALLY HURT BY AN EXPRESS TRAIN.

Struck a Short Distance From Bound Brook and Was Afterwards Brought to Muhlenberg Hospital Where He Died.

Josef Brisko, a track walker on the Central Railroad between Bound and Raritan, and a resident of the former place, was struck last Friday about 6:30 near Bound Brook, by the Philadelphia express due in this city at 6:40. He was walking the track unconscious of the approaching train, which struck him with great force. His head was terribly crushed and one arm injured. He also sustained severe internal injuries. Several employes of the railroad picked him up and brought him to this city on the 8:31 train, at which time he was still living. The ambulance was called and the unfortunate man was removed to the hospital, where he died in about half an hour.

Brisko leaves a wife and several children. He held the position of track walker for a long time and was always considered a careful man. This morning his remains were taken to Casey's morgue, where the county physician viewed them, and gave permission to have them removed to his home in Bound Brook for interment.

PAID FOR SAVING A LIFE.

Craig A. Marsh Granted a Handsome Fee By the Court in the Freehill Case.

Judge McCormick and his associate Judges Thursday determined the amount to be paid counsel for Frank Freehill for their services in the recent murder case. The Court allowed Craig A. Marsh $750 and T. J. Kelly $250.

It ought to be worth a thousand dollars to save a man's life. The Court told Freehill that that was what counsel had done for him. Every Jerseyman ought to be proud of his State, which sees to it that even a tramp shall not be deprived of life without due process of law, and the fullest opportunity to defend himself before court and jury.

Delighted Boys.

The Rev. Father Murphy took the members of the Boys' Club on a delightful trip to and through Savannah, the Forest City, last night. The attention the boys gave to his graphic descriptions, speaks well for the Rev. Father's entertaining talk. There was also a recitation by Lawrence Doyle and a song by Charles McCann, both of which pleased the boys. Last, but by by no means least, was clog and jig dancing by Prof. O'Brien. The boys were lavish with their applause, which testified that they were well pleased with their entertainers, whom they they thank very much for their efforts.

A Glee Club Coming.

The Daily Press in its issue of December 31st, 1894, says of the concert given here last winter by the Glee Club of the Brown University: "It was one of the most enjoyable musical events that a Plainfield audience has listened to this season. The audience was large and appreciative." The Brown Glee, Banjo and Mandolin Club will appear in Y. M. C. A. Hall under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. on Saturday evening, December 28th.

GUESTS OF THE COAL DEALERS

FIRST ANNUAL DINNER OF SUBSTANTIAL BUSINESS MEN.

A Dinner Followed by Many Bright and Philosophical Remarks by Prominent Guests Who Sat Around the Board.

The spectre of a bloody war with Johnnie Bull, or the fact that we are twisting the lion's tail with such a twist that if the animal had horns the growth of them would be stunted by the operation, as is the commonly accepted theory of the tail twisting of recalcitrant cows in the rural localities, did not seem to phase the coal dealers the least bit last night. Solomon said, eat, drink and make merry, and when this sage said was the slogan that was adopted by the coal men and their guests Thursday. War or any other international problem was relegated to the rear and Plainfield sociability was given the front seat at the Country Club Casino, where the event was held.

Shortly after 8 o'clock the host and the assembled guests sat down to the tables and for two hours did nothing but eat and drink, and incidentally have a friendly chat with their nearest friend. After the last course had been served and cigars lighted, President John Thickstun, of the local dealers, who presided at the head of the table, arose and gazed at the guests in a fatherly manner, and then in a few words extended the greetings of the hosts to them. He remarked that he was not much qualified for speech-making, but this was really because he did not want to sing his own praises. He gazed down along the table and briefly told what each of the guests were capable of doing or had done, and as a starter called on W. H. Sieger, of Bethlehem, Pa. "What for?" asked the somewhat astonished man. "Why, a speech, of course," answered Mr. Thickstun, who, by the way, bears a close resemblance to ex-Governor Flower, of New York.

Mr. Sieger was not prepared for a speech and all that he could do was to beg apologies, and give voice to the fact that he was having a good time.

Mr. Bellhet, of Philadelphia, line agent for Whitney & Kennedy, who was introduced as the General Grant of the trade, disposed of his part of the remarks with a story and a bow.

Station Agent Joseph A. Haynes, of the Central railroad, was glad to be present, as the relations between the railroad company were always of the pleasantest, and he hoped to have the pleasure of again meeting the coal dealers as a body.

Mr. Loizeaux, who is to assume charge of Rheume & Co.'s yard after January 1st, said that he trusted that this was but the beginning of an annual, genuine and happy greeting.

C. E. Smith, of Westfield, had a good speech before he came, but, unfortunately, it was gone, and he resumed his seat to hear what John D. Runyon had to say. Mr. Runyon said that there was one redeeming trait about a coal dealer and that was the fact that he had never heard that one had been hung.

C. E. Kelly, of New Market, felt like the Irishman who had fell from a high building and when asked by one of his brother workmen whether or not he was dead, he replied, "No, bedad, I'm not dade, but I'm spacheless." After this sally Mr. Kelly was also speechless.

E. H. Holmes arose and told of the trials and tribulations of the coal dealer, who, he said, was characterized by an unkind and unappreciative public and press as a coal baron. He wanted the guests to look into the faces of the dealers who were present and see if they did not look like an honest set of men. Everybody beamed an acquiesence.

Mayor Gilbert was next called upon. His Honor was in the best of humor and started off by telling a funny story, then got after the dealers and chaffed them in a good natured way. He said that one of the perquisities of the Mayor's office—and about the only one—was the receiving of invitations to attend events of this kind. But it was a good thing because it gave him the opportunity to make new acquaintances and friends and to exert influence in public measures when necessary. Speaking of Plainfield and to Plainfield people in particular, he said that they could be thankful that they were blessed with such an efficient and economical administration of city affairs. He could point with pride to the fact that all the improvements had been made without contracting indebtedness, until the sewerage system was built, and the beginning the city started to pay as it went, and it was good policy. It was for the people to determine whether or not this condition of affairs would continue. City officials were subjected, he said, to a great deal of criticism, much of which was unfair and undeserved. In his mind he had an ideal city—city park, city hall, municipal control of water, lights, street railway, etc. But it was simply an ideal and it would probably never be realized in the present generation, but it was something to work up to. He closed by stating that if the coal dealers' dinner was to be made an annual affair he trusted that he would be accorded an annual invitation.

C. B. Conant, of Newark, Secretary of the New Jersey Coal Dealers Exchange, and H. S. Backman, of Roselle, each had a few words to say and then George Stevens, of Mt. Vernon, N.Y., uncle of "our own George," was called upon to diffuse some of the humor for which he is famous from his many contributions to the funny press. Mr. Stevens was just bubbling over with funny remarks and the way coal dealers' jokes were rolled out was startling to behold and hear. He has a wonderful vocabulary, and his application of natural wit to the remarks made them of more than entertaining quality—they were absolutely ludicrous. He kept his hearers in constant laughter and was greeted with hearty applause on resuming his seat.

The speech making and the bottles having run dry, and the hour of midnight approached, the festivities were brought to a close by Mr. Sieger moving that the guests extend a vote of thanks to the dealers for the excellent time which they had provided. Of course it was carried.

The dinner was served by Max Wertz in his usual faultless manner.

The following were present: Mr. Train and C. B. Conant, of Newark; H. S. Backman, Roselle; W. S. Sieger, Bethlehem; N. D. Cortright, Mauch Chunk; Mr. Bullitt, Copley; Mayor Alex. Gilbert, J. A. Haynes, F. Hand, J. D. Runyon, H. G. Newman, Runyon, Mr. Loizeaux, DeWitt C. Ivins, W. Freeman, Geo. O. Stevens, George Stevens, Eugene VanCourt & Son, Chas. A. Smith, Chas. A. Smith, Jr., C. E. Kelly, J. A. Thickstun, John Blackford, E. H. Holmes, M. F. Elderton, W. W. St. John, F. A. Weber.

CHRISTMAS IN THE HIGH SCHOOL.

Special Exercises Held for the Students This Morning.

Christmas, with all its multitude of delights, is fast approaching, and the High School has felt its influence. The senior class spread of Wednesday night started the ball rolling, and Thursday afternoon the building was a scene of animation when the rooms were decorated for Christmas. The senior class looked after the main room and draped their colors, light green and white, about it while evergreens artistically arranged about the room added to the effect. The juniors took one of the classrooms on the third floor and the third class the other and decorated them with class colors and greens. The two divisions of the fourth class vied with each other in the arrangement of their rooms on the second floor.

The special exercises this morning consisted of musical vocal selections by the school, for which the music was furnished by the High School orchestra which is composed of Miss Mabel Maxson, Miss Bessie Cahoone, Miss Eva Noe, Lyman R. Allen, Walter Serrell and Lindley Hillman. Miss Rayberg, '95, gave a very interesting reading, "The Convict's Christmas Eve," by Will Carleton. Superintendent Matson then spoke a few words to the pupils complimenting them on the excellent work done during the year, especially in singing and the pleasant spirit shown by all. He closed by stating that the petition of the school had been granted and the Christmas vacation would last until Monday, January 6th instead of Thursday, January 2d.

A GROWING ORDER.

Franklin Council Now Has Two Hundred Active Members.

Franklin Council, No. 41, J. O. U. A. M., is one of the most flourishing councils in the State, and is constantly increasing in membership. Last night there were about seventy-five members present who enjoyed witnessing the initiation of four candidates. One proposition was received and one member by card. The team work in this council is something the members should feel proud of. It is not large enough to be unwieldy and entirely too small to meet the requirements, and when the work of erecting a bell tower near the engine house is completed there will still be less room. The Borough Council will meet tomorrow evening and the matter of building a tower for a bell will be discussed. It would not be a bad idea if they should discuss the question of how to secure more room.

An ex-Plainfielder's Marriage.

The marriage of Miss Anna Elizabeth Bunn, of Lamington, and Joseph Duy Hankinson, of Newark, formerly of this city, will take place at the home of the bride on Thursday afternoon, Jan. 3d, at three o'clock. Mr. Hankinson is well known in this city and a number of Plainfielders are invited to the wedding.

WILL FIGHT THE INJUNCTION.

NORTH AVENUE PROPERTY OWNERS WILL EMPLOY A LAWYER.

A Preliminary Meeting of the Interested Ones Held Last Night—A Committee to Report at the Meeting This Evening.

The contest over the sewer emptying into Green brook was Friday evening a one-sided affair, but the North avenue property owners decided that it was time to bestir themselves and they met in the office of E. C. Mulford to consider the matter.

Ten of the twenty-four property owners, who were ordered to show cause why the injunction should not be issued, were present and discussed the question from its different sides. It was the opinion of most of those present that, with a good representative in court, the injunction would not be granted, as the pollution of North avenue would be worse than the present condition of Green brook. One of the interested parties remarked on the fact that a court never issued an injunction when there was any other remedy possible and he thought that, in this case, the remedy would come very soon in the shape of sewers. The pollution of Green brook, another stated, was a misdemeanor and should go before the Grand Jury instead of the Court of Chancery.

After considerable discussion Fred C. Lounsbury was appointed a committee to confer with Assemblyman-elect W. R. Codington, regarding the latter becoming the attorney of the property owners. He will report at the meeting which is to be held at the Board of Trade rooms tonight.

The borough authorities have been accused of being arbitrary in the matter of the Green brook sewer but Borough Counsel Reed, to a Daily Press reporter this morning, declared it to be utterly false.

"We have no desire to be unreasonable," he said, "if we get reasonable assurance that they will use the city sewers before even January 15th, we will postpone the hearing ourselves. If they will guarantee to go into the new sewer system that they do not need to apply to a lawyer or the court but may come right here and get a stay."

Speaking of those on whom the notices were served, Mr. Reed said that several had already stated that they will disconnect from the sewer and connect with cesspools. The New Jersey Central has a contract with the city in which the latter agree to keep the large cesspool on North avenue clean. The railroad company said that they would cut off their connection with the Green brook sewer and use the cesspool alone but hold that their contract is perfectly legal and that the city is at fault and not the company.

UNCERTAINTIES OF LIFE.

Six Physicians, Two Nurses and a Minister Are the Examples.

Odd as it may seem, the awful uncertainties of this life are vividly illustrated in the good health which Mrs. Eugene A. Gross, of West Seventh street, now enjoys. Nineteen years ago she was stricken to her bed with a sickness which became so serious that all hope of her surviving was given up by relatives and friends. During the six months that her life seemed to hang only by a thread of vitality, she was administered unto by six physicians,—Drs. Symmes, Budd, Parker, Barker, Peasely and Pettigrew. She was also attended by two nurses,—Mrs. Reynolds and Mrs. Stubb, and her condition at one time became so precarious that Rev. Mr. Trainor was called in to administer the last sacrament to her. Today all of these persons are dead and Mrs. Gross is enjoying remarkably good health.

Question of a Bell Tower.

The fact becomes more apparent every day that the borough needs a more suitable place for their fire apparatus. Their present quarters are much too crowded and entirely too small to meet the requirements, and when the work of erecting a bell tower near the engine house is completed there will still be less room. The Borough Council will meet tomorrow evening and the matter of building a tower for a bell will be discussed. It would not be a bad idea if they should discuss the question of how to secure more room.

SUPERBLY RENDERED MUSIC.

THE CANTATA WAS A PAINSTAKING EFFORT BY THE CHORAL SOCIETY.

In Execution the Principals and Chorus Displayed Conscientious Study—Rendition of a Midsummer Night's Dream.

The Choral Society, under the careful training of E. J. Fitzhugh, has for so many years displayed such ambitions intent, painstaking effort and conscientious execution, even in minute detail, that the Plainfield public has learned to seek its concerts with pleased expectation.

The concert given last Thursday in Music Hall was a proof that the Plainfield public was justified in its anticipations. The Choral Society should have given an entire evening to each performance, however. Midsummer Night's Dream, rendered by Mr. Underhill last winter, gave great satisfaction, and the superb musical setting last night would have added a new attraction, but he was hurried and could not do full justice to himself in all the parts. The audience enjoyed Mr. Underhill's rendition of over a dozen characters in monologue, and regretted deeply that flying time and a flying train to carry the baritone to keep an appointment at Boston, compelled the sudden stopping of Mr. Underhill before he had completed the last act.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the execution of the New York Philharmonic Society in their Mendelssohn accompaniment. It was so true, harmonious and masterly that one no more feared lack of melody than would one fear that the birds would not sing and become play. The dainty, delicious music that gave sparkling dew drops, fairy dances and tripping of sprites and elves, was a thing not soon to be forgotten. The only bit of work done by the Choral Society in this part of the performance was the lullaby chorus accompanying the song of the fairies given by Miss Grenelli, soprano, and Miss Stein, contralto. The quality of Miss Grenelli's voice was such that it awakened a desire to hear her again, and the general regret that, with the loss of the last act by Mr. Underhill, there was involved the loss of the Wedding March by the orchestra.

In the second part of the programme in the cantata Arminius by Max Bruch, the Choral Society came out at its best and showed the firm quality of their work. In the precision of attack, force and accuracy, their singing is unequalled. The cantata is a soul-inspiring production, the music and sentiments of which are redolent of all that is manly and love of freedom. We are told the copper statue of Arminius at the city of Detmold stands with the pedestal 180 feet in height, as high as a steeple. The cantata of Arminius has a position in music not unlike the statue—it stands high and clear in its exalted measures and lofty aspirations. All noble Germans must listen to Arminius with enthusiastic delight, and as the best chords in the heart of the German nation touch the highest chords in the heart of every other nation, Arminius has music for the world. What Moses was to the Israelites, Arminius was to the Germans, and Tacitus says, "He lived seven and thirty years of life, twelve years of power." To interpret the spirit of an age when Germany was casting off the yoke of Rome, not Rome weak and feeble, but Rome in the zenith of its power, the music must be grand and soul stirring, representing the battle marshal armies with thunder of battle and the force that withstands oppression. The orchestra did fine execution in these interpretations and the Choral Society entered into the spirit of the music so heartily, that for the hour, they were all patriots warring for the Fatherland. Max Heinrich, the baritone, taking the part of the hero, Arminius, represented in his clear, full tones the power that incited the nation to throw off the "stranger's yoke." One of the finest passages was the duet of Max Heinrich, as Arminius, and J. H. McKinley, as Siegmund, and the chorus where the text is

"Free soars the eagle high in ether free
Breaks the fount from rocky shaft, and we Let think we'd e'er be slaves. For freedom reigns within our dwellings, Germania's sons are freemen."

Miss May Stein, as the Priestess, won great favor. Her contralto voice is pure and extensive, and with great compass. In the Battle when the orchestral accompaniment gave storm, thunder, lightning, ravens, corpses and carnage, the prayer of the Priestess to Wodan, the Lord of Battles, was so pathetic and powerful that a storm of applause from the audience testified to the appreciation of her effort.

If the songs of a people influence the character of a nation, a debt of gratitude is due the Choral Society when they chant "A Solemn Song to Freedom, Our Prize and Our Treasure."

HOW GLADSTONE BUYS BOOKS.

Eugene Field Tells of a Sample Transaction with the Grand Old Man.

For a good many years I was deeply interested in British politics. I was converted to Liberalism, so called, by an incident which I deem well worth relating.

One afternoon I entered a bookshop in High Holborn and found that the Hon. William E. Gladstone had preceded me a little while. I had never seen Mr. Gladstone before. I recognized him now by his resemblance to the caricatures and by his unlikeness to the portraits which the newspapers had printed. As I entered the shop I heard the bookseller ask:

"What books shall I send?"

To this, with a magnificent sweep of his arms indicating every point of the compass, Gladstone made answer:

"Send me those."

With these words he went, and I stepped forth to claim a volume which had attracted my favorable attention several days previous.

"I beg your pardon, sir," said the bookseller politely, "but that book is sold."

"Sold?" I cried.

"Yes, sir," replied the bookseller, smiling with modest pride, "Mr. Gladstone just bought it. I haven't a book for sale. Mr. Gladstone has just bought them all."

The bookseller then proceeded to tell me that whenever Gladstone entered a bookshop he made a practice of buying everything in sight. That magnificent, sweeping glance of his encompassed everything—theology, history, social science, folklore, medicine, travel, biography. Everything that came to his notice he bought.

"This is the third time he has cleaned me out."

"This man is a good man," says I to myself. "So notable a lover of books surely cannot err. The cause of home rule must be a righteous one."

From others intimately acquainted with him I learned that Gladstone was an omnivorous reader; that he ordered his books by the cubic foot; that his home in Hawarden literally overflowed with books. He made a practice, I was told, of overhauling his library once in so often and weeding out such volumes as did not care to keep. These discarded books were sent to secondhand dealers, and it is said that the dealers in Hawarden took advantage of Gladstone by reselling him over and over again—and at advanced prices, too—the very lots of books he had culled out and rejected.—Chicago Record.

New Way to Exterminate Sparrows.

One of the stickest men I ever saw was a young fellow at work who was selling baking powder and was up to all dodges to advertise his goods. He happened to strike a little town where the white English sparrows were a great nuisance and the authorities had offered a bounty on sparrow heads. The baking powder man saw his opportunity to get a job to help his big reputation and offered to exterminate all of the sparrows in town inside of two weeks. His proposition was gladly accepted, so he began his work. He secured a large vacant lot as the scene of his operations, and every evening would go out there and feed the sparrows all the corn, which he fed to the sparrows until they began to get acquainted with him and came to the lot in bigger droves every day.

In the meantime he went out east and bought a barrel of empty capsules, which he filled with the baking powder, and then put salt on the outside of them. When he thought he had made the birds tame enough coming to the feed ground, he had a large tank of water placed there and was ready for the grand climax. On the seventh evening he took his salted capsules of baking powder to the lot instead of corn and threw them out to the unsuspecting sparrows. Of course the salt made the birds thirsty, and they immediately flew to the water tank and drank, and the result was something awful. The water melted the capsules and made the baking powder rise. The poor little birds tried to stay on the ground, but the baking powder was too strong and pushed them right straight up into the air and finally popped them open. The spectators could plainly hear the sparrows pop and said that it sounded like the popping of a pistol gallery. It rained popped sparrows all night, and the next day not a single live one was visible. It is needless to say that there is only one brand of baking powder for sale in that town.—Louisville Commercial.

The Norman's Dream.

The Normans are called the Yankees of France, which is a compliment to them, no doubt, though it sometimes has reference to the extreme frugality of habits and to the craft with which they employ in evading a service that may cost them something. It is related that one good Norman farmer went early one morning to another's house and found him still in bed.

"Art thou asleep, neighbor?" he asked, somewhat falteringly, in the tone of a man who is going to ask a favor.

"If I were not asleep," murmured the other from his bed, "what probably wouldst thou want of me?"

"To borrow thy donkey to go to the fair as Gisors."

"Well, then, neighbor, I am sound asleep."

"Bah! Thou canst not be asleep when thou talkest to me."

"Nonsense! It is only a dream I am having, neighbor!"

And the other had to go away without the donkey.—Youth's Companion.

An Unfortunate Text.

Canon Duckworth tells an interesting story of absentmindedness. It relates to a worthy rector who, on the day of his induction, having been presented to an important living, preached his first sermon from the text: "Beware of false prophets, which are thieves and robbers." He was surprised and distressed when the church wardens afterward hinted to him that his choice of a text had been a little hard upon his predecessors.

PORPOISE FISHING.

CHIEF INDUSTRY OF THE RESIDENTS OF HATTERAS ISLANDS.

A Calling In Which There Is Always the Element of Danger—The Big Fish Driven Ashore and Killed With Knives—How the Catch Is "Worked Up."

The principal industry of the hardy residents of Hatteras Islands, off the North Carolina coast, is Porpoise fishing. Isolated from the outside world, braving the furious storms that sweep over the island, the inhabitants are accustomed to the energetic winds and maddening billows which occasionally sweep away their fences, gates and, in unusually severe weather, sometimes the lighter articles of household furniture fall a prey to seething, relentless waves and are strown along the beach or carried far out to sea. Still, they murmur not, but in the industry goes on with unabated energy.

Somewhere in the neighborhood of 68 rough, hardy fishermen are engaged in catching porpoises. This force of men is divided into three crews, or relays, of 22 men each, stationed on the Atlantic side of Hatteras Island. The patrol operations, comprising a stretch of ocean front of about five miles in length.

Each of these stations is designed as camps, and the boats, nets and other paraphernalia used in capturing the porpoises are kept in constant readiness, and can be launched in the surging surf with alacrity at a moment's notice as can the apparatus of the life saving crews. A man is selected from each one of these crews who is known as a "look out." His duty, as his title it is to be ever on the alert for the appearance of the porpoise. Up and down the beach he will measured tread, like the soldier sentinel, will he walk, and with his eagle eye, his "beat," his vigilant eye constantly turned seaward.

A high pole is planted in each camp, but instead of a flag, however, a bundle of dead brush is utilized, and when this "waif," as it is termed, is run up to the top of the pole it is the signal for the crew at the extreme end of the camp limit that a school of porpoises is gyrating and frolicking in the surf and to keep a sharp look out for the finny school. Each school in sight, and follows it, walking along the shore, noting every movement. Should this school of porpoises head toward the watcher returns to camp, the signal is hauled down and the commotion in the distant camps quiets down, for they know that the school has disappeared in deep water.

In case, however, the school (numbering all the way from 10 to 200 fish) continues to advance in a line with the fish English goes the distant crew, with their boat, silently but swiftly into the surf, and soon an immense net is thrown out and cast off its further advance. In the meantime the first crew, discovering the school, are following close in its wake, widening the net as they advance, while the middle crew has gone beyond the surf and is now pulling energetically for the shore. Finding the advance impeded the school immediately turns only to find itself confronted by a similar obstruction of net. Now ensues a scene of indescribable confusion. High out of the water they leap, churning the water into foam with their tails and making frantic efforts to escape. Silently the crews close in upon them. They are surrounded by a high, impenetrable wall of netting, and only the most agile succeed in overleaping the boundary and make good their escape.

Closer and closer the crews approach the beach, and once in shallow water the most skillful maneuvering is required to prevent the escape of the fish. The average catch at one haul is 80 fish. Each fisherman is armed with a long, keen bladed knife, and as soon as the catch is "striked and" (to use a term in common use) a number of men detailed for the purpose draw their knives and proceed to stab the floundering fish in the throat. This operation must be attended with extreme hazard, for the tail of the porpoise wields great power, and a "whack" sometimes breaks an arm or leg.

The catch over, the boats and apparatus are made ready for another haul. If the haul has not been made too far from the shore, in the presence of a great crowd of women and children the skinning process begins. The fat on the skins runs from 3 to 3½ inches in thickness. It is then taken to the factory, where they are soaked in large reservoirs, from which, after a sufficient length of time, they are transferred to the splitting room. Here the blubber or fat is shaved evenly and smoothly to a certain thickness, usually requiring two "runnings" to accomplish the desired result. The skins are next spread upon the floor and subjected to a thorough salting. After a few days, when the salt has been permeated through the skins are carefully packed in large boxes and shipped north to undergo the final process of tanning.

For dog fish game a hog, the proverbial North Carolina razorback, is not visible about Hatteras, but he knows from instinct when a catch of porpoise is made, and, like hungry wolves in the Russian forest, these razorbacks emerge in great droves from the dense woods and feast upon the carcasses of the fish. They have not been hastily gathered up and carted off to the boiling house. Here they are subjected to a long and thorough steaming, which renders the blubber into oil. The flesh is tried out into oil, while the bones, mixed with other ingredients, are ground up in the rolling mill, and so the porpoise industry results in a fine marked in 200 pound sacks of phosphate.

A great deal depends upon the condition of the weather as to the success of the season during the week. Sometimes, in extremely rough weather, the crews must content themselves with watching the school disporting themselves in the surf from a short distance from the shore. In favorable weather, however, from four to five catches will be made in a week. Catches are made through the winter months, but the ordinarily of the weather off Hatteras renders the operation extremely dangerous. Sometimes the overturning of a boat precipitates the whole crew into the chilly, boiling surf, from which with great difficulty they extricate themselves.—Philadelphia Times.

THEIR QUEER SIDE.

A REGION OF THINGS THAT IS QUITE FERTILE IN SURPRISES.

The Irresistible Fascination of Seeming Paradoxes—Why Do We See Everything Upside Down?—Is Seeing Good Reason For Believing?

Fact being stranger than fiction, there will always be, as there always has been, a "queer side of things"—a region quite as fertile in surprises as that explored by Alice in Wonderland. The difficulty is not so much to know how to select as to know where to begin in the way of illustration.

Curiously enough, not a few scientific paradoxes are to be found in the economy of human vision. There is that old puzzle paradox, for example—one which even the fatalistic Kepler did not escape—namely, how it is that we see objects erect, notwithstanding the well known fact that the pictures on the retina of the eye are inverted. Kepler, in his "Supplement to Vitellio," was fain to conclude that the inverted image, somehow or other, but wholly with the aid of the other senses, such as that of touch, was "rectified" by the judgment of the observer. Later physiologists have exercised their ingenuity over this curious problem. Quite lately, in a scientific journal of no mean repute, the position was gravely maintained that the observer, having really no other option, is driven into the belief by evidence of his own (inverted) vision, upside down was really the same thing as down side up, or, in other words, erect.

Another authority in the same medium had a still more ingenious solution of the difficulty. Noticing that the image of a lighted candle reflected on the retina of an excised eye was inverted, he, very naturally, reasoned that as his own sense of vision perceived the image thus upside down, therefore upon the retina of the perceiving organ it must really be in the natural or reverse position—namely, erect. A clever guess certainly, but one which leaves the problem much as it was before. The real explanation is apparently the view given by Professor Cleland of Glasgow university in his "Animal Physiology," that the inversion of the retinal image is really no reason why the landscape should appear to us inverted and that what we perceive is not the retinal image, but a number of sensations excited by it. If we are to explain, he adds, why the landscape is not seen inverted, we must explain why it is not seen inside our heads. But in spite of this lucid enunciation of erect vision—probably the only true one—a popular paradox the question will doubtless remain, as all events for some time to come.

He was an acute observer who once remarked. "The more knowledge, the more paradox." This would seem to be true nowadays, seeing that it is seriously doubted in scientific circles if we see with our eyes at all. Professor Hirth, a recognized authority on such subjects, contends that it is only by a very limited sense that we can be said to see with our eyes, and that, in any case, we do not perceive with them, this latter function being reserved for certain important organs of the brain, termed by him the "internal eyes." The functions of the retina, Professor Hirth maintains, have in the past been very gravely overestimated. Should this apparent paradox be substantiated, it will no longer be the conclusive argument it once was deemed to be that we have anything happened because we saw it with "our eyes!" It may be added that the above paradox is rendered, if possible, still more paradoxical by the fact that Professor Hirth's sundry quarters—among others by Drs. Loys and Rosenthal—that it is not impossible to imagine, theoretically, a state of matters in the human organism in which ear gaze might upon occasion play the part of eye gate and vice versa, the discrimination of external objects, etc., depending not upon the external nerve terminations which receive, as we are led to believe, a wholly uniform stimulus, but upon the central apparatus situated within the brain. According to this theory, observes a recent commentator, sound might for us be literally translated into color, a sonata by Beethoven might seem to us like a Raphael, and we might enjoy a symphony in blue and silver or a nocturne in black and gold.

After such a startling paradox as the above we may be pardoned for being somewhat skeptical of anything connected with the pair of organs which we are accustomed to call our eyes. And rightly so, for paradox once more confronts us here. Of having two eyes most of us are tolerably assured. It seems, however, that our remote ancestors were credibly possessed of three, the third being situated at the back of the head. Unfortunately for what remains to us of this doubtless highly useful organ is represented by the pineal gland, a soft body about the size of a pea, situated at the back of the brain. This rudimentary structure, however, in some lower forms of life—notably in one kind of lizard—has an opening in the light and is undoubtedly susceptible of visual impressions.

Even space itself—empty space, as we are accustomed to call it—is no longer a void. It literally teems with paradoxes. A 22 ton armstrong gun hurls a solid shot a distance of 12 miles, the highest point in the arc described by the shot being 17,000 feet above the earth's surface. Imagine, now, that the projectile, instead of returning to the earth in a gradually descending curve, were to continue its flight into what is commonly called infinite space, what would be the ultimate result? We might safely conclude that its prolonged flight would lead it ever farther and farther away from the point of departure. This, however, is by no means so certain as it at first appears. The refinements of mathematical investigation have led several inquirers to question whether the shot might not, of course after a lapse of time indefinitely great, return to the place from which it was fired from precisely the opposite direction, just as a vessel circumnavigating the globe might sail eastward round the Cape of Good Hope, returning from the westward via Cape Horn. It all depends upon the essential nature of space, whether its "curvature" be "zero" or otherwise, and that is a moot point. For the benefit of the curious it may be added that the matter mainly hinges upon the still undecided question whether the three angles of a triangle are greater than, equal to or less than two right angles—a point which most persons believe to have been settled long ago.—Chambers' Journal.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

The Story of a Man Who Fell Into a Water Tank.

"While you're talking about narrow escapes from horrible deaths just let me tell mine," remarked a well known capitalist yesterday. "I had about as tough an experience right in the city as a man ever had, but I got out all right, and few people ever heard of it.

"One day I was up on the roof of a building down in Pine street, just looking it over to see that it was all right. I climbed up and looked into one of the big water tanks on the building, and seeing a dead sparrow floating on the surface of the water bent over to take it out. I lost my balance and fell in. The water in the tank came right up to my chin when I stood on my feet, and the top of the tank was three feet above my head. The water was running all the time, and I could see that it usually stood about a foot higher than where it was. It occurred to me that unless I got out pretty quick or turned off the water I would be drowned.

"I made the hole big enough so that the water ran right down to its level. And the next thing was to get out. It was impossible to climb out without assistance, and I couldn't get my way out with a broken penknife. I knew I must attract some one's attention. I pulled off my shirt, tore it into strings, tied my lead pencil to my knife and both to the toe of one of my shoes, and then, putting my undershirt on the pencil waved it slowly and laboriously over the top of the tank. I waved for hours and still no one came.

"Then it occurred to me to dive down and stop up the pipe leading from the tank to the street. It wasn't half an hour till people came up to see why the water would not run, and I was helped out after I had been standing in the cold water over six hours."—San Francisco Post.

Training Hawks.

The instinctive fear of man is the first obstacle to overcome, and, as usual in taming all wild creatures, hunger is the first and foremost means to bring it down. Hawks will not eat as it will consent to take food from the hand and submit to be handled, stroked and hooded without much struggling or "baiting," as it is termed. The first step is made in its education. Much tact and gentleness, together with perfect quiet, will work wonders in inducing it to become tame. It never gets to be called a "rufter hood," being looser in shape and softer and having a larger opening for the beak than the hood proper.

This hood, which every hawk has to become accustomed to wear at all times, except when flying, is stiff and blocked to fit the head, care being taken that the prominent eyes are not rubbed or injured by imperfect fit, and is gayly ornamented on top with a tuft of scarlet or other colored wool, surmounted with a small bunch of feathers. It is of the first importance in training hawks, and by means of it they can be handled and carried anywhere, among all sorts of noises and scenes that, were they not blindfolded, would cause the hawks to bate so violently that injury to themselves would result.—Good Words.

Well Up In Slang.

The late Professor Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen is said to have had a remarkable knowledge of slang. Although he never wrote in dialect, it was not from want of familiarity with it. He was well up in the hobo talk of trampdom, he knew something of the argot current among the pigeon English of Chinatown to the thieves' slang of the dock rats, there was not a slang spoken in New York of which he had not a hazy knowledge. When he was professor in Cornell university, two juniors out driving one day overtook him walking along a country road, near Ithaca. In company with a most battered and disreputable tramp. As the collegians drove slowly by they overheard part of the conversation. To their great surprise, they discovered that the professor and the tramp were indulging in a hot and heavy slanging match, and, from what they could hear, the tramp was coming out second best.

Peter's Record Broken.

A good fishing story—not quite in the usual acceptation of the term—used to be told of himself by Sir Algernon Borthwick—to wit: Seven days' fishing with his son, Mr. Oliver Borthwick, at Sir Algernon's Aberdeenshire place, Invercauld House, resulted in the big kill of 55 salmon. The information was sent to The Morning Post, and an enterprising subeditor, in acknowledgment of the receipt of the news, telegraphed to Sir Algernon that it was intended to give the item the heading: "Minnows Days of Salmon! Peter's Record Broken!"—Westminster Gazette.

KENTUCKY SHAKERS.

A Visit to the Quaint Old Village of Pleasant Hill.

[Special Correspondence.]

LEXINGTON, ——A quaint old place is the village of Pleasant Hill, the home of the Shakers, overlooking the Kentucky river, twenty odd miles from Lexington, and just in sight of the famous "high bridge," on the Cincinnati Southern railway, known to every tourist traveling between the north and the south. The over land route from Lexington to Pleasant Hill is not much traveled in these days of steam and electric conveyances, and comparatively few of the present generation know of its picturesque beauty.

It was my good fortune to be one of a merry party that started from the blue grass metropolis late one August afternoon to drive to the Shaker settlement by moonlight.

It was 10 o'clock when we drove up before the "office building," where the business affairs of the village are conducted and the strangers within the gates are entertained. The "silence bell," the signal for retiring, had been sounded two hours, but we were given a kindly greeting after we had announced in a loud voice that Brother Stephen, the landlord and postmaster, and Sister Jane, the matron.

The Shakers are proverbially generous and hospitable, and the hotel conducted by them once enjoyed an extensive patronage from summer visitors. In recent years the Shaker community has declined greatly and the hotel has suffered in the general decline, so that the "office family" now entertains visitors more as a matter of courtesy than as a business undertaking.

According to the rules and regulations for visitors, placarded in the great hallway, the Shakers carry their idea of celibacy to the point of requiring that husband and wife shall occupy separate apartments while guests of the Pleasant Hill hotel. Another of these published rules enjoins upon visitors the taking of food on their plates than they are likely to consume Sister Jane's fare is so wholesome and appetizing that this latter injunction is in little danger of being violated.

The Shaker settlement at Pleasant Hill was founded in 1805 by four apostles who left the parent body in the settlement located at the site of this pretty village when it was part of a heavy woodland, in which deer and other game roamed at pleasure. The Kentucky river country was then sparsely settled, but the news of the strange doctrines taught by these four men quickly spread, and many there were who went to hear them and became converted to the new faith. The converts put what little property they had into the general stock, and the pioneer band went earnestly to work to carve a communal home out of the wilderness. They cleared the land, erected substantial houses of brick and stone, divided into families as the community grew and added to their possessions until at one time they owned 16,000 acres of the richest farming land in all Kentucky.

Shaker settlements are grouped for convenience into "families," about equally divided between men and women, each family occupying a separate house and being governed by an elder and an elderess. At Pleasant Hill there is a "center" family and a family for each point of the compass, the relative locations of the houses suggesting the designations of the several groups. There are two orders of membership—probationary members—novices and full members. In recent years the community has been seriously imposed upon by so called "winter Shakers," who, in the depression of business, have joined in the fall they want to join the society, live off these good people during the winter and abandon them with the opening of spring. As the Shaker religion is founded upon a celibate life, the society can only be recruited from without, and the membership is steadily decreasing in spite of occasional additions.

The men and women are models of industry, every man having at least one occupation, while the women are more especially charged with housekeeping, dairy management and indoor pursuits. Those who wish to marry are privileged to do so, but they must withdraw from the community. The recruits have usually been single men and women, although married persons and their families have been received. It is imperative that they surrender their marital and family relations.

From causes not entirely apparent on the surface the community at Pleasant Hill is not as prosperous as it was a generation ago. The members are growing old and dying out, acceptable recruits are not plentiful, much of the labor on the farms must be employed from the outside, and the financial results are not satisfactory. Moreover, large tracts of valuable land were sold to meet indebtedness and provide additional working capital. An unfortunate patent fence transaction ten years ago is said to have been induced to sign a document which afterward turned out to be a seven year note for $10,000, has added to the burdens of the community. The note was not presented, even for the collection of interest, until the end of the seven years, after the two elders were dead. It is generally believed to have been a fraudulent transaction, but the Shakers were without conclusive testimony, and a suit on the note was decided against them in the United States court. The present financial head and business manager is Dr. William Hamblaker, or "Dr. William," as he is known among the brethren and sisters, a gentleman of fine character and a high order of intelligence. Brother Abraham, the "farm deacon," or chief farmer for the community, is one of the jolliest good fellows to meet with in a day's travel. An interesting character is Brother Larz, a Swede, surnamed Ericson, who is chief broommaker, and who delights in expounding the Shaker gospel to visitors who ask him the story of his conversion.

There were at last accounts 18 societies in existence, with a combined membership of 1,900.

With the decline in numbers the religious ceremonies at the celebrated Shaker meeting house at Pleasant Hill have been discontinued except upon special occasions, and each family holds separate services in a large hall in the family house. In these houses the men and women use different doors, and always enter in strict order to the chapel and sit or stand apart during religious services.

There are many interesting phases of Shaker life that one might profitably spend weeks among these benevolent, intelligent and thrifty people studying their history, learning more of their inner secrets and customs and attempting to solve the problem of the future of the remarkable society to which they belong. That the surviving believers enjoy many years of peace, prosperity and contentment is the united and sincere wish of the merry party from the blue grass that enjoyed with me the hospitality of Pleasant Hill for a brief season.
